Ivory was season wise, and his quick eye had caught many a sign as he walked through the woods from his schoolhouse. A new and different color haunted the tree tops, and one had only to look closely at the elm buds to see that they were beginning to swell. Some fat robins had been bounding about in the schoolyard at noon, and the sparrows had been chirping and twittering on the fence rails. Yes, the winter was over, and Ivory was glad, for it had meant no skating and sleighing for him, but long walks in deep snow or slush, long evenings, good for study, but short days, and greater loneliness for his mother. He could see her now as he neared the house, standing in the open doorway, her hand shading her eyes, watching, always watching, for some one who never came.

"Spring is on the way, mother, but it isn't here yet, so don't stand there in the rain," he called. "Look at the nose-guy I gathered for you as I came through the woods. Here are pussy willows and red maple blossoms and mayflowers, would you believe it?"

Old Boynton took the handful of budding things and sniffed their fragrance.

"You're late tonight, Ivory," she said. "I'd wanted his supper early so that he could go off to singing school, but I kept something warm for you, and I'll make you a fresh cup of tea."

United, Mexico Can Place 83,000 Soldiers In Field

Forces Nearly Equally Divided Between Federals and Rebels—How Principal Cities Are Held.
Side Lights on Mexican Soldiers

WITH all factions in Mexico united to fight against the United States it was recently figured that the little republic would put about 83,000 troops in the field. Perhaps this was overestimated in view of heavy losses by the federals and rebels in the fighting that culminated in the capture of Torreón by General Villa.

It is true that Huerta in characteristically fashion had caused to be spread broadcast that he already had 150,000 men in the field and that he was soon to add another 50,000 to the number. Villa, the victorious bandit chieftain of the rebels of northern Mexico, reportedly boasted an army that varied in size according to his humor from 25,000 to 100,000.

But from the best information in the possession of the United States government Huerta is believed to have an armed force that is still loyal to the government in Mexico City, of about 40,000, while the combined forces of all the rebel chieftains now operating in the revolution numbered total perhaps 43,000. This means that in Mexico today are about 83,000 men, almost equally divided between the so-called Huerta government and the rebels, most of the latter being pretty well concentrated in the north of Mexico under the leadership of Villa and the lesser of the rebel leaders in Chihuahua, Sonora, Coahuila, Nuevo Leon, Tamaulipas and Durango. It is in the fact that their forces are more concentrated and accordingly more easily to be mobilized into a single army that the principal advantage of the rebels lies in the present struggle for the mastery of Mexico.

What do these contending forces number? How many pieces of artillery have they? Where are the troops located?

Sandra Rebel Stronghold.
At Hermosillo, the capital of Sonora there is a rebel force of 3,000 men available for service at any moment and on a direct rail line with Guaymas, the single port in the state held by Huerta with 3,500 men.

Between Hermosillo and Mayaguez and right in the gates of Guaymas is a rebel force of about 1,000 veterans under General Obregon.

Figures show that in Sonora the rebels have all told a force of about 12,400 troops. The rebel forces there are well supplied with artillery.

Adjoining Sonora to the east is the still greater state of Chihuahua, the state that witnessed the culmination of Madero's triumphs and the state that gave to the rebel cause the notorious Villa and a host of other and less important leaders. Chihuahua from end to end is absolutely in the hands of the rebels under Carranza and Villa.

Figures indicate a force of between 12,000 and 15,000 soldiers in that state, all fighting under the banner of the revolution.

At Mazatlan, the principal seaport on the west coast, is a rebel army of about 4,000 men, while in various other parts of Sinaloa are small rebel detachments.

PRESIDENT HUERTA AND ADVISORS.
That, if concentrated, would probably add another 1,000 to the above total.

Durango is another rebel stronghold. In Durango City is a rebel force of 3,000 men under General Contreras. At Velarde are 1,000 rebels, while at Laredo is an advance guard of about 500 men.

Huerta's Foothold in North.
Coahuila, the northern boundary of which touches the United States for its entire length from east to west, is the single northern state where the Huerta forces retain a foothold. At Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, opposite Eagle Pass, Tex., is a force of 100 federals under Colonel Castro, included in which is a battery of artillery with four modern guns.

Around Torreon, which is one of the principal railroad centers in Mexico and which is just a few miles east of the city of Laredo in Durango, was a federal force estimated to number about 6,000 men until it was driven out recently by Villa.

In Coahuila and at Monclova is another federal force of 1,000 men; at Saltillo another federal garrison, are 3,000 more loyalists, at Elpidio are 1,800 men who remain faithful to Huerta.

In Nuevo Leon the state a little piece of which in tongue-like fashion like its way north between the border lines of Coahuila on the west and Tamaulipas on the east until it touches the Rio Grande, just west of Nuevo Laredo, there is a Huerta force of about 1,200 men at Monterrey.

In Tampico the government has about 1,200 men under General Zamacona.

In the city of San Luis Potosi, the principal town between Saltillo in Coahuila and the City of Mexico, the dictator has about 2,500 men.

In Mexico City the government is backed by a small army numbered as limited to number anywhere between 4,000 and 6,000 men under the personal direction of Huerta.

In Vera Cruz, off which the American support detachments are on duty the government has 1,000 men, with an artillery detachment of six guns.

Puebla is another state still loyal to Huerta. In Puebla City he has 1,000 men.

Mexicans Hardly Modern Fighters.
So much for figures. The Mexican is hardly a modern fighter. Until recently there was scarcely a modern high powered rifle in his army. There are many rifles in the Mexican army more than twenty years old. Some are the old black powder, large bore guns. An American officer who has been watching Mexican soldiers for two or three years has said that he has yet to see one of the modern mangle pointed bullets, which carry 1,000 yards farther than the round nosed affairs of older times and which have a flat trajectory that enables the soldier to set his battle sights and shoot on the level at 1,500 yards.

Huerta's artillery, however, is largely modern. He has in all 300 pieces.

At least he had that many a few months ago. It is a curious fact, but there are more field guns in Mexico than in the United States. The superiority of American fire, however, is a big factor.

The Mexican regular army has no army service corps, no medical department to speak of. It carries no camp equipment, no supplies. Watch a field force break camp at dawn. First there go patterning off a horde of women laden with pots and pans, blankets, sometimes babies. These are the sad dailies, the camp followers, the coin misers of the force. That they move as quickly as they do is a miracle. Whatever the day's march may be, they are always on the camping ground before the men arrive. They rig up shelters, they cook tortillas and frijoles, mince cakes and tamales, they make coffee. You see them mend their husbands' coats, washing their shirts, roughly tending flesh wounds. Without these soldaderas the army could not move.

While President Huerta was seizing hundreds of men by night in the City of Mexico and other cities in order to swept his forces to 100,000, he also saw women "pressed" to go with the new soldiers and take care of them. The rebels are better soldiers and mostly mounted. Villa has proved a resourceful general. The Indians and peons are also to be reckoned with. Then there is the danger of guerrilla warfare in the mountains.

Not Easy For United States.

In case the United States army takes possession of Mexico it will find no easy task confronting it in completely subjugating the country.

With the armies from the north in touch with that holding the capital, some 2,500 miles of communication would have to be kept open—a tremendous task, requiring the service of at least 25,000 men—fifty men to the mile. This would leave an equal number for further operations and for the occupation of strategic points.

The territory so far effectively occupied would not exceed twenty miles on each side of the railroad track, and Kitchener's blackhouse system might have to be employed to keep even that much. The reminder that all military measures depend upon the determination of the enemy is in order here.

ROAD BEE DAY

Thursday and Friday, June 4th and 5th, Set Aside for Road Work.

In 1913 the townships of Michigan raised $1,336,029 for the improvement and repair of highways; 41 counties under the county road system levied county road taxes amounting to $1,021,661 and the state appropriated $800,000 for the payment of state rewards, making a grand total of $6,757,710 which was raised by direct taxation and expended on the rural highways. Added to this, many townships and counties raised money by bonding and many public-spirited citizens gave freely in money and labor, so that it is a low estimate to say that at least $7,000,000 were expended on Michigan's roads during the past year.

While this has resulted in the building of more miles of excellent highways than were ever before built in a single year, there is still much to be desired. The people want more good roads and want all of the roads cared for better than they have been in the past.

Last year on June 4th the Huron Shore Road Association observed the first "Road Bee Day" ever held in this state. It was a success. Wet pieces of road were drained, logs, roots, stumps and stones were removed from the roadway; bad stretches of gravel were sanded; bad pieces of sand were clayed; gravel was hauled; road drains were set to work and altogether so much enthusiasm was aroused that many farmers put in a full week instead of one day. By this concerted effort some 200 miles of highway in Eastern Michigan, which in some places was very bad, was made into a very passable road.

At the request of the Michigan Good Roads Association, the Huron Shore Road Association and the West Michigan Pike Association, and to the end that this good work may extend over the state and all the people receive the benefits, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, do ask that the people of the State of Michigan set apart Thursday and Friday, June 4th and 5th, 1914, as "Road Bee Day" and as far as possible turn out and work under well-planned and competent supervision on the highways of this state in such manner as shall make them more fit, safe and pleasant for public travel.

Governor.

FRUIT IS IN GOOD CONDITION

Says Secretary of State Marindale in Michigan Crop Report.

Wheat Makes a Better Showing as to Its Condition Over a Year Ago.

The condition of wheat in the state and southern counties is 92; in the central counties 94; in the northern counties 91; in the Upper Peninsula 93.

The condition on April 1st was 91 in the state; 92 in the southern and central counties; 90 in the northern counties; 94 in the Upper Peninsula. The condition one year ago was 81 in the state; 81 in the southern counties; 81 in the central counties; 85 in the northern counties; 87 in the Upper Peninsula.

The per cent of wheat that will be ploughed up because winter killed or otherwise destroyed is 2 in the state, southern, central and northern counties and 3 in the Upper Peninsula. The damage by frost is in per cent 15 in the state, 9 in the southern counties,

2 in the central counties and 1 in the northern counties.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in April at 71 flour mills is 56,094 and at 75 elevators and to grain dealers 38,725, or a total of 94,820 bushels. Of this amount 72,353 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 17,139 in the central counties and 5,328 in the northern counties and Upper Peninsula. The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the nine months August-April is 5,821,500 and the quantity of wheat yet remaining in possession of growers after deducting 2,000,000 bushels used for seed and home consumption is 4,300,000 bushels.

Seventy-eight mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat marketed in April.

The average condition of rye in the state, southern counties and Upper Peninsula is 95 and in the central and northern counties 94. The condition one year ago was 87 in the state, 89 in the southern counties, 88 in the central and northern counties and 91 in the Upper Peninsula.

The condition of meadows and pasture in the state is 88, in the southern counties 81, in the central counties 89, in the northern counties 91 and in the Upper Peninsula 86.

The average of clover down as compared with last year is 98 in the state, 99 in the southern counties and Upper Peninsula, 97 in the central counties and 96 in the northern counties.

The acreage of clover that will be ploughed up because winter killed or otherwise destroyed is 14 per cent, in the state, 21 in the southern counties, 9 in the central counties, 6 in the northern counties and 4 in the Upper Peninsula.

The oats acreage sown or that will be sown as compared with last year is 100 in the state and central counties, 99 in the southern and northern counties and 106 in the Upper Peninsula.

LITTLE BITS OF FARM LORE.

The heating and burning of alfalfa hay in the stack may be avoided by proper curing.

We believe it is not safe, as a rule, to pasture cows on alfalfa alone, says Howard's Dairyman.

Most of the diseases to which the potato is subject may be avoided by intelligent handling of the seed before planting.

In choosing tomato plants for growing prize tomatoes do not select tree tomatoes, as they are not prolific, but pick out some good, smooth, meaty variety.

The use of machines for transplanting vegetables is on the increase. Every grower should know that marigold seed plants thrive just as well as those which are planted by hand, provided the work is done with care.

There are two mistakes usually made in putting rye into the soil. Most people let it stand too long before cutting and then do not pick it down hard. For silage rye should be cut before it comes into bloom and while the plants are soft and tender.

Marriage Law Curiosities.

In West Virginia a man may marry his deceased wife's sister, but is forbidden by law to wed her stepdaughter.

In Massachusetts a man may marry his deceased wife's sister, but is prohibited from wedding her grandmother.

In Maryland whites and negroes or mulattoes who intermarry are "deemed guilty of an infamous crime" and are subject to two years' imprisonment, but if they go across the border into Pennsylvania and get married there and return to Maryland they are not breaking the law.

In Utah an epileptic woman is permitted to marry after she is forty-five years old, but not before.—New York World.

Tents in India.

The manufacture of tents is numbered among the leading industries of India. The large demand for them is attributed to "the more or less transient character of a large part of the population and to the fact that the art of manufacturing tents has been brought to such perfection that they serve the purpose better than the average house of the poorer classes."

THIRTY-ONE ATTENDED

"Get Together" Meeting and Banquet at Boyne City Well Attended.

Thirty-one leading Republicans of the city attended the "get together" meeting and banquet held at the Wolverine Hotel in Boyne City last Friday night. The meeting had three objects, the principal one of which was to get the members of the party in the county together so that they might talk over matters of importance concerning the coming campaign. The other matters were the election of a president for the Charlevoix County Republican Club to succeed J. E. Converse, who is no longer

MET HERE SUNDAY

Committeemen of County Y. M. C. A. Discuss Ways and Means and Other Affairs.

The committeemen of the County Y. M. C. A. met in this city Sunday to discuss the situation, and the financial condition of the association. The representatives from Boyne City were W. H. White, L. A. Butler, S. C. Smith, W. H. Griffin and Secretary Ball. Those representing East Jordan were Messrs. Porter, Malpass, Bennett and Potter. The Charlevoix committeemen were R. W. Kane, Dr. A. M. Wilkinson and President A. L. Coulter.

The thing that the association needs more than anything else is financial aid. One of the principal troubles with the movement is the fact that few people are aware of the great good that has already been done, and will also continue to be done in the future. The work has been very successful thus far, and it would be a great misfortune to lose the effect of the work already accomplished.

One suggestion to remedy the financial situation was to organize a Charlevoix county concert company, made up of the pick of the talent of the county. There is plenty talent in the county to produce one of the finest entertainments that was ever staged. These entertainments could be given in the three towns and the proceeds used for Y. M. C. A. work. The churches will carry on a ticket selling campaign, and this plan will undoubtedly be carried out within a short time.

HOPES TO BE CENTENARIAN

George Hughes Says He is Going to Try and Reach the Age of One Hundred Years.

George Hughes is the grand old man of Charlevoix. He was ninety-six years old last week, and says he is going to try and reach the age of one hundred years.

Mr. Hughes came here from Devonshire, England, 56 years ago. He has been around the world four times, sailed on salt water 14 years and has been to Russia, China, India and Arabia and has crossed the Red Sea. Since he came to this country he has made his home with Justice H. C. Cooper.

In the winter time he seldom ventures down town, but during the summer months he is down town every day, with the aid of a cane, and walks as spry as a man of sixty years. He was never married. His mother died when he was an infant and his father died when he was 38 years of age.

George is highly respected by every man, woman and child in the city, and is shown every kindness when on the streets. He never wore glasses, but says his eyesight is failing fast. During the summer months there is a great demand for pictures of this grand old man among the summer tourists.

ESCAPED FROM IONIA

Prisoner Taken from This County for Desertion and Smith the Bandit.

Edward J. Smith of Boyne City tried and convicted in this court and taken to Ionia in March to serve a sentence of from three to five years for wife desertion, made his escape from the prison at that place May 20th and is still at large. Smith was slightly demented and had been under the charge of physicians and had made his escape from the hospital ward.

On the same day Clyde Smith, one of the bandits who terrorized residents of the upper peninsula and was captured after being chased with bloodhounds for several days, made his escape from Ionia and the officers are scouring the country for him. He had lived around Boyne City for several years and the local officers have been warned to keep on the watch for him. Smith was sentenced to serve from five to fifteen years and had served but a few days when he made his escape.

EIGHTH GRADE AWARDED BANNER

Many Good Scores Made in Grammar School Athletic Contest.

First Contest in Which the Girls Have Had a Chance to Take Active Part.

The second grammar school athletic contest for the local schools under the direction of the County Y. M. C. A. was held on the central school grounds Thursday, May 21. The 5th and 6th grade contests were held in the morning and the 7th and 8th in the afternoon.

This is the first contest in which the girls have had a chance to take an active part. The balancing contest, the bean bag, target toss, and the potato race were the four events for the girls. Each girl reaching the badge standard in the potato race and target toss and successfully performing the balancing feat received a badge. The winners of badges among the girls were:

5th Grade, Margaret Milner, Marjorie Meyers, Esther Powell, Elsie Irvine.

6th Grade, Thyma McCall.

7th Grade, Montese Holly, Alice Schweitzer, Irene Auld, Dorothy Beattie.

8th Grade, Thelma Gfady, Wilma Stevenson, Lillian MacNeill.

The events for the boys were the 50, 75 and 100 yard dashes, standing broad jump, running broad jump, running high jump and base ball throw. The badge standard winners among the boys were as follows:

5th Grade, Clarence Miles, Donald King, Dick Hammet.

6th Grade, Lawrence Taylor, Chester See.

7th Grade, Geo. Beeman, Franklin Cooper, Geo. Murray, Wm. Hampton, Delbert Wyers.

8th Grade, Odillon Weed, Kenneth Usher, Russel Schweitzer, Lee Young, Sam King.

Some very creditable records were made by the younger boys. Chester See's 174 feet for the base ball throw, Seely Pierce 121.5 seconds for 100 yards and 15 feet 1 inch for the broad jump. Allan Daniels and Sam King also made 121.5 seconds for 100 yards.

The places of the several rooms according to their average scores were as follows:

1st, 8th grade; 2nd, 7th grade; 3rd, 5th grade Washington school, 4th, 6th grade; 5th, 5th grade; Central. The 8th grade was awarded the banner.

The highest average score was made by Dick Hammett of the 5th grade Washington school—68 for four events, the second highest made by Seely Pierce of the 8th grade—66.45 on five events.

The method of competing in classes according to weight has again proved very successful. Every boy and girl from the 5th to the 8th grade, unless physically unfit, competed in all of the events, with only a few exceptions. For these the honor of their grade did not seem to be a sufficiently strong motive to overcome their diffidence.

The schools of the county owe a great deal to the successful work of the county Y. M. C. A. secretary in developing this plan of athletic activity.

It is regretted very much that more of the citizens did not witness the contests. Every one who can get away should go to East Jordan Friday, May 29, to witness the high school meet.

ROSS A CANDIDATE

Announces That He Will Make the Run for the Office of Register of Deeds.

Andy Ross, pioneer resident of Charlevoix and for some twenty-three or four years a trusted employee of the Charlevoix Lumber Company, announces that he will be a candidate for the office of register of deeds on the Republican ticket, subject to the August primaries.

Andy Ross can count his friends in this section by the hundreds. There is not a better known man in the county. We understand this will be his maiden step in the political arena. For years he has been one of the faithful workers in the Republican ranks and he will look for the support of his many friends at the coming primaries.

Announcement.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the Republican nomination for the office of prosecuting attorney, subject to the August primaries.

ORGANIZE FOR ROAD BEE DAY

Every Man Should Be a Road Builder on These Days.

Organize a Road Building Campaign in Your Neighborhood and Get Busy.

The governor's proclamation for a road bee throughout the state puts an official stamp upon good roads for Michigan and should result in a general observance of these days by each road district in the state. The governors of several states have heretofore issued calls of a like nature, and the people responded by turning out en masse. Townships and citizens combined, organized clubs, parties; machinery such as graders, scrapers, drags, tractors and rollers were brought into use; teams, shovels, and even automobiles were seen hauling split log drags to smooth up the coarser work.

Farmers, physicians, workmen, lawyers and merchants united; the women came out at the dinner hour. These days were "get together" days for all classes and much good road work was accomplished. Every road in this region has one or more pieces of road over which a large amount of travel passes where a small amount of work done would vastly improve it. A hole to be filled, a rut to be dug out, a stone to be removed, a load of fresh gravel dropped here and there, and the use of the road drag would make these roads infinitely better. Main lines over which the greatest travel is should receive first attention.

Every man should be a road builder on these days. Talk with your neighbors, organize for a road campaign. Will Charlevoix county respond to the call of the governor? What is done must be done quickly. What township will be the first one to organize for a big road bee on these dates?

Here are a few things you can do:

You can remove logs, rocks, stumps and stones from the roadway; fill holes, preferably with good earth; cover stretches of sand with clay or gravel; drain wet places in the roadway; scrape off and outwards sod margins where they hold the water in the traveled track. When drained and graded, clay may be covered with sand or gravel, but the gravel should not contain any clay unless it is to be placed on sand. Culverts may be repaired or new culverts put in.

Here are a few things you should not do:

Don't try to do too much.

Don't start more than you can finish. You cannot build a macadam road nor very long stretches of gravel road in two days.

Don't haul gravel onto roads that have not been properly graded and drained.

Don't grade roads that have not been properly staked out on correct lines.

Don't plow up long stretches of road and leave them impassable.

Don't scrape sods onto the traveled roadway and leave them for passing vehicles to smooth down.

All these things will be of great value to the roads of the county and state, but they will not be accomplished unless the work is well planned and performed under intelligent supervision.

Get together, select a captain and have him line up the forces.

SHALL WE CELEBRATE?

Why Not Have a Big Fourth of July Celebration in Charlevoix This Year?

It has been six years since Charlevoix has had a Fourth of July celebration and a number of the business men are trying to stir up enough sentiment to have a glorious celebration this year.

There are many arguments in favor of the Fourth of July celebration and few against. Invariably neighboring towns celebrate every year or at least every other year and when no special attention is given to the occasion here large numbers attend those elsewhere.

A good Fourth of July celebration is indicative of a live town and as long as Charlevoix can only be classed as such it remains that we should celebrate. Heretofore on such occasions Charlevoix has always had a big crowd—in fact, on every event along the celebration line Charlevoix draws a good crowd. There is no reason why we cannot pull off a celebration this year that will eclipse anything before attempted. Let's get busy and do it.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier, that's the best way.

BANQUET OF STATES

The Event of the Year Held at the Methodist Church Friday Evening.

One of the events of the year was the banquet given by the ladies of the M. E. church at the church parlors Friday evening.

The decorations showed taste and time and a knowledge of states and nations. The menu was good and was served well, considering the great crowd present. The toasts abounded in wit and wisdom and showed much thought in their preparation. The solos and orchestra was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The ladies cleared something over $100 and are to be congratulated on their success.

Out for Representative.

J. M. Felts, justice of the peace, of this city, makes the announcement in this issue that he will be a candidate for the office of representative on the Republican ticket, subject to the August primaries.

Mr. Felts has been a resident of this city for a number of years, is an old soldier and since holding his present office of justice has conducted the duties of his position in a very creditable manner.

OPPOSE U. P. ELIMINATION

Bayliss Takes Exception to Reports Circulated Throughout Section.

Declares He Will Not Stand for Any Plan That Will Align Any Section Against Section

There have been rumors in circulation in the upper peninsula counties of the Eleventh congressional district of an elimination contest between J. E. Bayliss of Chippewa and Judd Yelland of Delta, the two upper peninsula candidates for the Republican nomination for representative in congress.

A reporter for the Soo Evening News interviewed Mr. Bayliss regarding the rumor, and he made the following statement in denial.

"It is true that there has been some talk of an elimination contest between Mr. Yelland and myself. This was undoubtedly inspired by my willingness at all times to enter into an elimination contest as between two or more candidates from the same county for the congressional nomination. I certainly favor the county elimination contests for the reason that no county could go into a primary campaign with two or more candidates with anything like a fair chance of any one of them being nominated."

"However, the situation is entirely different when it comes to the proposition of an elimination contest between two or more upper peninsula candidates, for the obvious reason that it would appear that we were making an effort to elect a sectional issue into the campaign by uniting the upper peninsula counties in favor of one upper peninsula candidate and against the candidate or candidates that may reside in that portion of the district lying south of the straits. I most certainly shall not make myself a party to any such effort. Whoever is the successful candidate he will, if elected at the November election, become the congressman to represent all of the sixteen counties in this district and not that portion of it lying either above or below the straits."

"If I am successful at the August primaries and the November election I shall feel that I owe the same duty to the furthestmost lower Michigan point of the district that I do to the ward in which I reside in the Soo."

"I hope I have made myself clear on this upper peninsula end elimination proposition. I feel in my mind that I am right and also that I am entirely consistent in the position I take. It is not because I have any fears as to the probable result of such a contest that I take this position, but as I have stated, it is because I cannot and will not consent to any plan that would inevitably result in aligning section against section."

END OF THE YEAR'S WORK

Graduation Exercises of County Normal Takes Place Next Week.

NINE COMPLETE THE WORK

Baccalaureate Sermon at the Methodist Church Sunday Evening.

Miss Estelle Downing of Ypsilanti State Normal Will Give Commencement Address—Flare Program.

Nine graduates will take part in the commencement exercises of the Charlevoix County Normal class, which will commence at the Methodist church on Sunday evening. The year's work will be completed this week and the newly-fledged teachers will go out on their work of instructing our boys and girls, who will receive the benefit of the special training received by the normal work.

The members of the class of 1914 are Rhoda M. Cliff, Hattie A. Hamlin, Bertie Howe, Willard Howe, Ethyl M. Jacobs, Velma LaCount, Edna M. Strigley, Esther Walker and Marjorie F. Weaver. During the year the members of the class have substituted in many rooms of the city schools, besides doing supply work in the rural districts. Many of the graduates have already secured good positions for the coming year and all will be placed before the school year closes.

The officers are: President, Rhoda M. Cliff; vice-president, Edna M. Strigley; secretary-treasurer, Marjorie F. Weaver. Class colors, black and gold; class motto, "Ropes of the Past Ring Bells of the Future"; class flower, white carnation.

The week's exercises will begin Sunday evening with the baccalaureate sermon at the Methodist church at 7:30 by the Rev. Quinton Walker. Wednesday evening at the same place will be taken up the class day program, as follows:

"Greetings and Talk on Hand Work in the Schools"—Rhoda Margaret Cliff.

"Spring Song," Training Room Children—Edna M. Strigley.

"Conditions of Pioneer Schools in Charlevoix County"—Bertie Howe.

"Standard Schools"—Esther Walker.

Drama of King Midas, Training Room Children—Ethyl M. Jacobs.

"Resources of Michigan and Charlevoix County"—Hattie Hamlin.

"Fruit Growing in Western Michigan"—Willard Howe.

"Minuet," Paderewski—Marjorie F. Weaver.

"Value of Nature Study and Agriculture in Rural Schools"—Velma LaCount.

Soldiers' Chorus from Faust—Normal Class.

Thursday evening at the same place at 8 o'clock the exercises will close with the following commencement program:

Processional Madeline Mullin

Vocal solo Rev. C. E. Taggart

Invocation (Arditta)

Mrs. Stanley Bush.

Address, "The Enlargement of Life"

Miss Estelle Downing, Ypsilanti State Normal.

Vocal solo Mrs. W. J. Rachow

Presentation of diplomas

Com. J. H. Milford

Chorus, "Spring Song," Normal Class

The alumni reunion will follow the above program, Bessie Hanshaw, 1907, president, in charge.

A TIMELY SERMON

Rev. Quilon Walker's Topic was "The Sins of Charlevoix."

The largest audience that ever attended the Methodist church in this city was present Sunday evening to hear Rev. Quinton Walker on "The Sins of Charlevoix." The mayor and council filled the seats reserved for them and they do not fear the cars when the elder is at the helm.

A plea was made for more interest in public affairs, a higher standard of morals and more efficient officers who will do their duty. Everything was handled without gloves.

Some were surprised that nothing worse happened than the roof springing a leak.

GAVE DOCTORS ENOUGH TO BUY FARM--RESTORED IN ONE DAY

Battle Creek Man Finds New Life in the First Dose of Wonderful Remedy.

William N. Goss, 218 Aldrich street, Battle Creek, was troubled with stomach and intestinal ailments for years. Year after year he spent endless time and money with specialists and in expensive treatments that failed.

He took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy at last and wonderful results followed. When he had taken only one bottle he wrote:

"I got more relief out of one bottle of your wonderful stomach remedy than I did in all my years of treating with specialists."

"If I had all the money I have spent for doctors' bills I could buy a farm. I will certainly recommend Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy."

Mr. Goss's experience is like those of thousands of others who have taken this remarkable remedy with such astonishing results. It is known everywhere because of its merit. The first dose proves.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of its success there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know—or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting street, Chicago, Illinois, for free booklet on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

For sale by all druggists.

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF

Which is Better—Try an Experiment or Profit by a Charlevoix Citizen's Experience?

Something new is an experiment. Must be proved to be as represented. The statement of a manufacturer is not convincing proof of merit. But the endorsement of friends is. Now supposing you had a bad back, A lame, weak or aching one, Would you experiment on it? You will read of many so-called cures. Endorsed by strangers from far-away places. It's different when the endorsement comes from home. Easy to prove local testimony. Read this Charlevoix case:

CAMP FOR BOYS

Final Program for Fifth Annual High School Conference is Now Ready.

J. A. VanDis, State Boys' Work Secretary, announces that the final program for the fifth annual high school conference is now ready. Among the speakers secured are David R. Porter of New York, Charles W. Gilkey of Chicago, Jesse B. Davis and Dinnie Upton of Grand Rapids and B. B. Johnson of Lansing. O. F. Field of the University of Missouri has again been secured as camp director. The dates for the high school students conference are June 26th to July 6th. The regular camp for boys will run for eight weeks, beginning July 7th; a special camp for farm boys August 19-29.

As the camp is limited to 100 boys at a time, indications are that it will be filled to the limit for the entire season. Interested parties should get applications and booklets from Y. M. C. A. secretary or write the state office at 411 Association Building, Detroit, Michigan.

Hayo-Went-In camp for boys is located on Torch Lake and has been conducted by the State Y. M. C. A. for the past ten years. Boys have been present from 129 different Michigan cities and towns.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier, that's the best way.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his drift mother.

CHAPTER III.

Something of a Hero.

IVORY went into the little shed room off the kitchen, changed his muddy boots for slippers and made himself generally tidy, then he came back to the living room bringing a pine knot which he hung on the fire, winking it to a brilliant flame.

"We can be as lavish as we like with the stumps now, mother, for spring is coming," he said, as he sat down to his meal.

"I've been looking out more than usual this afternoon," she replied. "There's hardly any snow left, and though the walking is so bad I've been rather expecting your father before night. You remember he said when he went away in January that he should be back before the mayflowers bloomed."

It did not do any good to say: "Yes, mother, but the mayflowers have bloomed ten times since father went away." He had tried that, gently and persistently when first her mind began to be confused, from long grief and hurt love, stricken pride and sick suspense.

Instead of that Ivory turned the subject cheerily, saying, "Well, we're sure of a good season. I think. There's been a good snowfall and that, they say, is the poor man's manure. Rod and I will put in more corn and potatoes this year. I shan't have to work single handed very long, for he is growing to be quite a farmer."

"Your father was very fond of green corn, but he never cared for potatoes," Mrs. Boynton said, vaguely, taking up her knitting. "I always had great pride in his cooking, but I could never get your father to relish my potatoes." "Well, his son does, anyway," Ivory replied, helping himself plentifully from a dish that held one of his mother's best concoctions, potatoes minced fine and put together into the sprig with thin bits of pork and all browned together.

"I saw the Baxter girls today, mother," he continued not because he hoped she would give any heed to what he said, but from the sheer longing for companionship. "The deacon drove off with Lawyer Wilson, who wanted him to give testimony in some case or other down in Milltown. The minute Patty saw him going up Saco hill she harnessed the old starved Baxter mare, and the girls started over to the Lower Corner to see some friends. It seems it's Patty's birthday, and they were celebrating. I met them just as they were coming back and helped them lift the rickety wagon out of the mud. They were stuck in it up to the hubs of the wheels. I advised them to walk up the Town House hill if they ever expected to get the horse home."

"Town House hill?" said Ivory's mother, dropping her knitting. "That was where we had such wonderful meetings. Truly the Lord was present in our midst. And oh, Ivory, the visions we saw in that place when Jacob Cochrane first unfolded his gospel to us! Was ever such a man!"

"Probably not, mother," rendered Ivory dryly.

"You were speaking of the Baxters. I remember their home and the little girl who used to stand in the gateway and watch when we came out of meeting. There was a baby too. Isn't there a Baxter baby, Ivory?"

"She didn't stay a baby. She is seventeen years old today, mother."

"You surprise me, but children do grow very fast. She had a strange name, but I cannot recall it."

"Her name is Patience, but nobody but her father calls her anything but Patty, which suits her much better."

"No; the name wasn't Patience, not the one I mean."

"The older sister is Waitstill. Perhaps you mean her." And Ivory sat down by the fire, with his book and his pipe.

"Waitstill! Waitstill! That is it! Such a beautiful name!"

"She's a beautiful girl."

"Waitstill! They also serve who only stand and wait." Wait, I say, on the Lord and he will give thee the desires of thy heart. Those were wonderful days, when we were caught up out of the body and mingled freely in the spirit world." Mrs. Boynton was now fully started on the topic that absorbed her mind, and Ivory could do nothing but let her tell the story that she had told him a hundred times.

"I remember when first we heard Jacob Cochrane speak." (This was her usual way of beginning.) "Your father was a preacher, as you know, Ivory, but you will never know what a wonderful preacher he was. My grand father, being a true gentleman and a governor, would not give his consent to my marriage, but I never regretted it never! Your father saw Elder Cochrane at a revival meeting of the Free Will Baptists in Scarborough and was much impressed with him. A few days later he went to the funeral of a child in the same neighborhood. No one who was there could ever forget it. The minister had made his long prayer when a man suddenly entered the room, came toward the coffin and placed his hand on the child's forehead. The room in an instant was as still as the death that had called us together. The stranger was tall and of commanding presence; his eyes pierced our very hearts, and his marvelous voice penetrated to depths in our souls that had never been reached before."

"Was he a better speaker than my father?" asked Ivory, who dreamed his mother's hours of complete silence even more than her periods of reminiscence.

"He spoke as if the Lord of Hosts had given him inspiration; as if the angels were putting words into his mouth just for him to utter," replied Mrs. Boynton. "Your father was spell-bound, and I only less so. When he ceased speaking the child's mother crossed the room and, swaying to and fro, fell at his feet sobbing and wailing and imploring God to forgive her sins. They carried her upstairs, and when we looked about after the confusion and excitement the stranger had vanished. But we found him again! As Elder Cochrane said: 'The prophet of the Lord can never be hid; no darkness is thick enough to cover him.' There was a six weeks' revival meeting in North Saco, where 300 souls were converted, and your father and I were among them. We had fanned ourselves true believers for years, but Jacob Cochrane unstopped our ears so that we could hear the truths revealed to him by the Almighty! It was all so simple and easy at the beginning, but it grew hard and grievous afterward; hard to keep the path, I mean. I never quite knew whether God was angry with me for backsliding at the end, but I could not always accept the revelations that Elder Cochrane and your father had!"

Lots Boynton's hands were now quietly folded over the knitting that lay forgotten in her lap, but her low, thrilling voice had a note in it that did not belong wholly to earth.

There was a long silence; one of many long silences at the Boynton fireside, broken only by the ticking of the clock, the purring of the cat and the clicking of Mrs. Boynton's needles, as, her paroxysms of reminiscence over, she knitted ceaselessly, with her eyes on the window or the door.

"It's about time for Rod to be coming back, isn't it?" asked Ivory.

"He ought to be here soon, but perhaps he is gone for good. It may be that he thinks he has made us a long enough visit. I don't know whether your father will like the boy when he comes home. He never did fancy company in the house."

Ivory looked up in astonishment from his tired grammar. This was an entirely new turn of his mother's mind. Often when she was more than usually confused he would try to clear the cobwebs from her brain by gently questioning her until she brought herself back to a clearer understanding of her own thought. Thus far her vagaries had never made her unjust to any human creature. She was uniformly sweet and gentle in speech and demeanor.

"Why do you talk of Rod's visiting us when he is one of the family?" Ivory asked quietly.

"Is he one of the family? I didn't know it," replied his mother absently. "Look at me, mother, straight in the eye. That's right. Now listen, dear, to what I say."

Mrs. Boynton's hair, that had been in her youth like an aureole of corn silk, was now a strange yellow white, and her blue eyes looked out from her pale face with a helpless appeal.

"You and I were living alone here after father went away," Ivory began. "I was a little boy, you know. You and father had saved something, there was the farm, you worked like a slave, I helped, and we lived somehow, do you remember?"

"I do indeed. It was cold, and the neighbors were cruel. Jacob Cochrane had gone away, and his disciples were not always true to him. When the magnanimity of his presence was withdrawn they could not follow all his revelations, and they forgot how he had awakened their spiritual life at the first of his preaching. Your father was always a staunch believer, but when he started on his mission and went to Farnsworth to help Elder Cochrane in his meetings the neighbors began to criticize him. They doubted him. You were too young to realize it, but I did, and it almost broke my heart."

"I was nearly twelve years old. Do you think I escaped all the gossip, mother?"

"You never spoke of it to me, Ivory."

"No, there is much that I never spoke of to you, mother, but some time when you grow stronger and your memory is better we will talk together. Do you remember the winter, long after father went away, that Larson Lane sent me to Fairfield academy to get enough Greek and Latin to make me a schoolmaster?"

"Yes," she answered uncertainly.

"Don't you remember I got a free ride downriver one Friday and came home for Sunday, just to surprise you? And when I got here I found you ill in bed, with Mrs. Mason and Dr. Perry taking care of you. You could not speak, you were so ill, but they told me you had been up by New Hampshire to see your sister, that she had died, and that you had brought back her boy, who was only four years old. That was Rod. I took him into bed with me that night, poor, homesick little fellow, and, as you know, mother he's never left us since."

"I didn't remember I had a sister," she dead, Ivory?" asked Mrs. Boynton vaguely.

"If she were not dead do you suppose you would have kept Rodman with us when we hadn't bread enough for our own two mouths, mother?" questioned Ivory pathetically.

"No, of course not. I can't think how I can be so forgetful. It's worse sometimes than others. It's worse today because I knew the mayflowers were blooming, and that reminded me it was time for your father to come home. You must forgive me, dear, and will you excuse me if I sit in the kitchen awhile? The window by the side door looks out toward the road, and if I put a candle on the sill it shines quite a distance. The lane is such a long one, and your father was always a sad stumbler in the dark! I shouldn't like him to think I wasn't looking for him when he's been gone since January."

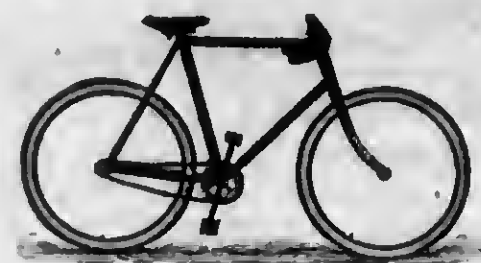

Ivory's pipe went out, and his book slipped from his knee unmnoticed.

His mother was more confused than usual, but she always was when spring came to remind her of her husband's promise. Somehow, well used as he was to her mental wanderings, they made him uneasy tonight. His father had left home on a fabled mission, a duty he believed to be a revelation given by God through Jacob Cochrane. The farm did not miss him much at first. Ivory reflected bitterly, for since his fanatical espousal of Cochrane's cause his father's interest in such mundane matters as household expenses had diminished month by month until they had no meaning for him at all. Letters to wife and boy had come at first, but after six months, during which he had written from many places, continually deferring the date of his return, they had ceased altogether. The rest was silence. Rumors of his presence here or there came from time to time; but, though Larson Lane and Dr. Perry did their best, none of them were ever substantiated.

When those years of wandering had passed, and had they all been given even to an imaginary and fantastic service of God? Was his father dead? If he were alive, what could keep him from writing? Nothing but a very strong reason or a very wrong one, so his son thought at times.

Since Ivory had grown to man's estate he understood that in the later days of Cochrane's preaching his "visions," "inspirations" and "revelations" concerning the marriage bond were a trifle startling from the old fashioned, orthodox point of view. His most advanced disciples were to hold themselves in readiness to renounce their former vows and seek "spiritual consorts," sometimes according to his advice, sometimes as their inclinations prompted.

Had Aaron Boynton forsaken wholly the wife of his youth, the mother of his boy? If so he must have realized to what straits he was subjected when Ivory had not forgotten those first few years of grinding poverty, anxiety and suspense. His mother er's illud had stood the strain bravely, but it gave way at last; not, however, until that fatal winter journey to New Hampshire, when cold, exposure and fatigue did their worst for her weak body. Religious enthusiast, exalted and impressionable, a natural mystic, she had probably always been, far more so in temperament, indeed, than her husband; but, although she left home on that journey a frail and heart-sick woman, she returned a different creature altogether, blurred and confused in mind, with clouded memory and irrational fancies.

She must have given up hope just then, Ivory thought, and her love was so deep that when it was uprooted the soil came with it. Now hope had returned because the cruel memory had faded altogether. She sat by the kitchen window in gentle expectation, watching, always watching.

And this is the way many of Ivory Boynton's evenings were spent, while the heart of him, the five-and-twenty-year-old heart of him, was longing to feel the heat of another heart, a girl's heart only a mile or more away. The ice in Saco water had broken up and the white blocks sailed majestically down toward the sea. Sap was mounting and the elm trees were bubbling; the trailing arbutus was blossoming in the woods, the robins had come—everything was announcing the spring. Yet Ivory saw no change of seasons in

HOUSE BADLY DAMAGED

Fire Discovered Saturday Afternoon in Roof of Lewis Cottage on North Side.

Shortly after 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon fire was discovered in the roof of the Lewis cottage, corner of Dixon and Michigan avenues, owned and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. John S. Baker.

The origin of the fire is unknown, as when it was discovered it was in the peak of the roof, some distance from any chimney. The fire department responded promptly and soon had the fire under control, but not until the roof on part of the house and the upper ceilings were badly damaged.

Most of the household goods and the bedding were removed before they were damaged by the fire and water. The loss is estimated at about $700, partially covered by insurance.

In repairing the house the porch at the front of the house will be removed and the space heretofore occupied will be utilized to enlarge the living room and other changes will be made.

LIVED HERE 32 YEARS

Death Claims Another Aged Charlevoix Resident in Mrs. Isabel L. Cole.

Mrs. Isabel L. Cole, the aged mother of Mrs. H. O. Johnston of this city, died at the home of her daughter Saturday evening at six o'clock of old age.

Mrs. Cole was born in the State of New York, July 9th, 1826, and at the time of her death was 87 years, 10 months and 14 days old. She was united in marriage to Ransom Cole in 1850.
To this union were born six children—
Alfred of Grand Rapids, Mrs. Ida Hatton of Petoskey, Mrs. C. W. Stetson of Mackinaw City, Frank of Petoskey, Wilford of Cross Village and Mrs. H. O.
Johnston of this city—all of whom were present at her funeral. She also leaves 29 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Cole had lived in Charlevoix for 32 years. She joined the Methodist church 52 years ago and had been one of its most faithful and loyal members.
Funeral services were held from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Johnston, Monday afternoon at two o'clock, conducted by Rev. Quinton Walker.

INSTANTLY KILLED

Charley Ferguson Falls Down Stairs in Building
Where Employed in Chicago.

William Ferguson of Hayes township, formerly proprietor of the Ferguson House, received a telegram Tuesday stating that his stepson, Charley Ferguson, had been killed in Chicago.

From what can be learned of the accident it seems that Charley was working in the new international building as a decorator under Levi Lamphear, formerly of this city, and in some manner fell down the stairway and was killed instantly.

Charley Ferguson was a well-known Charlevoix boy, aged 26, and usually a summer visitor here. He was a veteran of the Spanish-American War. He was the son of Mrs. William Ferguson, now living in Hayes township.

Mr. Ferguson left on the evening train for Chicago. No further particulars of the sad accident are known at present.

Funeral services will be conducted from the home in Hayes, Sunday at 2:00 p. m.

Ten Dollars Shy.

In the report of the Flower Mission Superintendents of the W. C. T. U. published in the Courier we were ten dollars shy in the amount expended for flowers. The amount should have been $10.30 instead of "$0.30" as published.
The error was due to the omission of the figure "one" and might have been caused by our paying more attention to our "new dress" than to the accuracy of proof reading.

RAN INTO TELEPHONE WIRE

Armstrong Automobile Party Have Narrow Escape in the Mix-Up That Followed.

What might have resulted in a serious accident happened last week on the Norwood road, near the city line, when Dorothy Armstrong and a party of girl friends were out driving in their car.

Employees of the Michigan State Telephone company were making repairs on the telephone lines in this vicinity, and were taking the slack out of a line when it broke. The wire was immediately picked up by the linemen, and when but a short distance from the ground it was run into by the car.

The wire caught the wind shield of the car, bending it double. At the time the car struck the wire, the slack was being taken in by a single lineman some distance down the road. The compact of the car against the wire threw him from the pole to the ground, a distance of some 15 or 18 feet.

None of the parties were hurt, ont-side of the damage to the car, but it was a very narrow escape for all in the mix-up.

Repair Work of all Kinds on Short Notice

Rim-Cutting On the Increase!

A few years ago statistics showed that 23 per cent of all ruined clincher tires were rim-cut. The percentage seems to be gradually increasing, for, according to recent statistics, 31.8 per cent of the ruined clincher tires are now discarded for rim-cutting alone. This situation would be grave were nothing but clincher tires to be had. But some years ago a hookless tire, one that can't rim-cut, was invented. That invention is solving the difficulty. Each season this hookless tire has grown in popularity, until clincher tires will soon be a relic of early auto days, just like the two-cylinder car. The hookless tire, the tire that can't rim-cut, the tire that has practically revolutionized tire construction, is the GOODYEAR NO-RIM-CUT. Note its construction. The rim flanges, instead of turning inward and digging into the side of the tire, are flared outward. There's no sharp rim-edge to cut the tire, as with the clincher. This freedom from rim-cutting means millions of dollars saved to motorists every year.

On Exhibition Here The Goodyear No-Rim-Cut Tire

We have in stock the Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tire. In fact, so great is the call for it that we carry all usual sizes. Some are All-Weather treads; some smooth. Come in and see these tires that now outsell, by far, all others. We have your size.

We Are Here to Help You

But don't wait till you need new tires to come here. When you need air, call and let us supply you free. When you want advice as to how to repair or preserve your tires, talk with us. We have helped a good many motorists in this way. Never ask any pay for it. If one of your tires has gone wrong prematurely, see us before you take the matter up with the tire maker. We are prepared to give accommodation and service without charge. You might as well make use of it.

OFFER SILVER CUP

Special Inducements to Fruit Growers This Year by State Fair Officials.

W. H. Steele, representing the West Michigan State Fair, is in the city with the view of interesting fruit growers in this county to enter their products at the coming fair.

Mr. Steele states that the fair officials will pay a fancy price for fruit for exhibition purposes. An effort will be made this year to place Western Michigan on the map as the banner fruit district. Fruit growers are urged to make personal exhibits and the fair association is offering a $200 silver cup to the grower who makes the finest exhibit. This cup will be on exhibition in Charlevoix at a later date.

The state fair officials are working in connection with the Western Michigan Development Bureau. Fruit growers who care to make an effort along this line will receive assistance from the bureau. Fertilizer will be furnished and can now be obtained from D. S.
Payton, the bureau's local representative.

Prominent apple buyers have been given a special invitation to attend the fair and see the fruit exhibits, with the object in view to obtain the highest market price for Western Michigan products.

WALLACE POOLE DEAD

Eleven-Year-Old Son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Poole Passed Away Tuesday.

Wallace Joseph Poole, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Poole of Mason street, died at his home Tuesday at 9:30 a. m. of leakage of the heart, developed from catching cold. From that time he began to fail and, never being a very rugged child, was unable to withstand the attack.

Wallace was a loving, bright child, making many friends wherever he went. During his late illness he was a patient little sufferer. He will not only be missed in his home circle, but by many friends, old and young.

Deceased was born May 11th, 1903, in the house where he passed away. He was the youngest of a family of ten. He is survived by his father and mother, three sisters and five brothers, who will greatly miss his sunny smile and winning way in the home.

Wallace was an earnest, conscientious little Christian, being a member of the Baptist Sunday school and Junior B. Y. P. U., and was in the fourth grade in school, standing well in his classes. The family have the sympathy of the community in their loss. Funeral services will be held from the house Thursday at 1:30 o'clock, Rev. John G. C. Irvine officiating.

To the Public.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Representative on the Republican ticket, subject to the decision of the voters of Charlevoix county on primary election day, August 25th, 1914.

ST. LOUIS AS A VILLAGE.

In 1767 It Had Forty-five Houses and as Many Families.

Captain Philip Utman, an officer in the engineering corps of the British army, was selected by General Gage in 1767 to make an expert report on the territory just acquired from France on the east side of the Mississippi river. Utman came to the Mississippi valley, the Illinois country it then was called, and traveled about for several months. Here is what he wrote of St. Louis in the early part of 1767:

"This village is one league and a half above Kankakee, on the west side of the Mississippi, being the present headquarters of the French in these parts. It was first established in the year 1764 by a company of merchants, to whom M. d'Abadie had given an exclusive grant for the commerce with the Indian nations on the river Missouri, and for the security and encouragement of this settlement the staff of French officers and the commissary were ordered to remove here, upon the surrendering of Fort Chartres (forty miles south of St. Louis on the Illinois side) to the English, and great encouragement was given to the inhabitants to remove with them, most of whom did.

"The company has built a large house and store here, and there are about forty-five houses and as many families. No fort or barracks are yet built. The French garrison consists of a captain commandant, two lieutenants, a fort-major, one sergeant, one corporal and twenty men."—St. Louis Times.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

his future; nothing but winter, eternal winter there!

CHAPTER IV. Patience and Impatience.

PATTY had been searching for eggs in the barn chamber and coming down the ladder from the haymow, spied her father washing the wagon by the wellside near the shed door. Cephas Cole kept store for him at meal hours and whenever trade was unusually brisk, and the Baxter yard was so happily situated that Old Foxy could watch both house and store.

There never was a good time to ask Deacon Baxter a favor, therefore this moment would serve as well as any other; so, approaching him near enough to be heard through the rubbing and splashing, but no nearer than was necessary, Patty said:

"Don't answer me back!"

"Father, can I go up to Ellen Wilson's this afternoon and stay for tea? I won't start till I've done a good day's work, and I'll come home early."

"What do you want to go gallivanting to the neighbors for? I never saw anything like the girls nowadays—highly dainty, dainty, dainty, trifling, trifling, every one of 'em, that's what they are, and Ellen Wilson's one of the triflingest. You're old enough now to stay to home where you belong and make an effort to earn your board and clothes, which you can't, even if you try."

Spunk, red Simon pure spunk, started somewhere in Patty and coarsed through her blood like wine.

"If a girl's old enough to stay at home and work I should think she was old enough to do and play once in awhile." Patty was still too timid to make this remark more than a courteous suggestion, so far as its tone was concerned.

"Don't answer me back! You're full of new tricks, and you've got to stop 'em right where you are or there'll be trouble. You were waitstill just now up in the barn chamber. That's one of the things I won't have around my penurious—a waitstill girl."

"Twice a Sabbath school hymn that I was waitstill." This with a creditable imitation of defiance.

"That don't make it any better. Sing your hymns if you must make a noise while you're working."

"It's the same mouth that makes the whistle and sings the song, so I don't see why one's any wickeder than the other."

"You don't have to see," replied the deacon grimly. "All you have to do is to mind when you're spoken to. Now run 'long 'bout your work."

"Can't I go up to Ellen's, then?"

"What's gone on up there?"

"Just a frolic. There's always a good time at Ellen's, and I would so like the sight of a big, rich house now and then."

"Just a frolic? Land o' Goshen, hear the girl! Slight of a big, rich house, indeed! Will there be any boys at the party?"

"I suppose so or wouldn't be a frolic," said Patty, with awful daring, "but there wouldn't be many—only a few of Mark's friends."

"Well, there ain't going to be no more argy-bargy. I won't have any girl o' mine frolic with boys, so that's the end of it. You're kind o' crazy lately, riggin' yourself out with a ribbon here and a flower there and pullin' your hair down over your ears. Why do you want to cover your ears up? What are they for?"

"To hear you with, father," Patty replied, with honey sweet voice and eyes that blazed.

"Well, I hope they'll never hear anything worse," replied her father, dinging a bucket of water over the last of the wagon wheel.

"They couldn't." These words were never spoken aloud; but, oh, how Patty longed to shout them with a clarion voice as she walked away in perfect silence, her majestic pall showing, she hoped, how she resented the outcome of the interview.

"I've stood up to father!" she exclaimed triumphantly as she entered the kitchen and set down her yellow bowl of eggs on the table. "I stood up to him and answered him back three times!"

Waitstill was busy with her Saturday morning cooking, but she turned in alarm.

"Patty, what have you said and done? Tell me quickly!"

"I argued, but it didn't do any good. He won't let me go to Ellen's party."

Waitstill wiped her dairy hands and put them on her sister's shoulders. "Hear what I say, Patty: You must not argue with father, whatever he says. We don't love him and so there isn't the right respect in our hearts, but at least there can be respect in our manners."

"I don't believe I can go on for years holding in, Waitstill!" Patty whimpered.

"Yes, you can. I have!"

"You're different, Waitstill."

"I wasn't so different at sixteen, but that's five years ago, and I've got control of my tongue and my temper since then. Sometime, perhaps, when I have a grievance too great to be rightly borne, sometime when you are away from here in a home of your own, I shall speak out to father; just empty my heart of all the disappointment and bitterness and rebellion. Some body ought to tell him the truth and perhaps it will be me!"

Waitstill bent over the girl as she flung herself down beside the tub and smoothed her shoulder gently.

"There, dear! It isn't like my gay little sister to cry. What is the matter with you today, Patty?"

"I suppose it's the spring," she said, wiping her eyes with her apron and smiling through her tears. "Perhaps I need a dose of sulphur and molasses."

"Don't you feel well as common?"

"Well? I feel too well! I feel as if I was a young colt shut up in an attic. I want to kick up my heels, batter the door down and get out into the pasture. It's no use talking, Waitstill. I can't go on living without a bit of pleasure and I can't go on being patient even for your sake. If it weren't for you I'd run away as Job did, and I never believed Moses slipped on the logs. I'm sure he threw himself into the river, and so should I if I had the courage!"

"Stop, Patty, stop, dear! You will have your bit of pasture at last. I'll do some of your indoor tasks for you, and you shall put on your sunbonnet and go out and sit the dandelion greens for dinner. Take the brook-buff and a milk pail, and don't bring in so much earth with them as you did last time. Dry your eyes and look at the green things growing. Remember how young you are and how many years are ahead of you. Go along, dear."

Waitstill went about her work with rather a heavy heart. Was life going to be more rather than less difficult now that Patty was growing up? Would she be able to do her duty both by father and sister and keep peace in the household, as she had vowed in her secret heart always to do? She paused every now and then to look out of the window and wave an encouraging hand to Patty. The girl's bonnet was off, and her uncovered head blazed like red gold in the sunlight. The short young grass was dotted with dandelion blossoms, some of them already grown to huge disks of yellow, and Patty moved nither and thither, selecting the summer weeds, deftly putting the broken knife under their roots and popping them into the tin pan. Presently, for Deacon Baxter had finished the wagon and gone down the hill to relieve Cephas Cole at the counter—Patty's shrill young whistle floated into the kitchen, but with a mischievous glance at the open window she broke off suddenly and began to sing the words of the hymn with rather more emphasis and gusto than strict piety warranted:

"There'll be something in heaven for children to do."

None are idle in that blessed land. There'll be work for the heart, there'll be work for the mind.

And employment for each little hand. There'll be some thing to do.

There'll be something to do.

There'll be something for children to do.

Patty's young existence being full to the brim of labor, this view of heaven never in the least appealed to her, and she resumed the hymn with little sympathy. The main part of the verse was strongly accented by jobs at the snuff-milling dandelion roots, but when the chorus came she brought out the emphatic syllables by a beat of the broken knife on the milk pail.

This rendition of a Sabbath school classic did not meet Waitstill's ideas of perfect piety, but she smiled and let it pass, planning some sort of recreation for a stolen half hour of the afternoon. It would have to be a walk through the pasture into the woods to see what had grown since they went there a fortnight ago. Patty loved people better than nature, but failing the one she could put up with the other, for she had a sense of beauty and a pagan love of color. There would be pale blue linum and blue and white violets in the moist places, thought Waitstill, and they would have them in a china cup on the anpper table. No, that would never do, for last time father had knocked them over when he was reaching for the bread and in a silent protest against such foolishness got up from the table and emptied them into the kitchen sink.

"There's a place for everything," he said when he came back, "and the place for flowers is outdoors."

"Then in the pine woods there would be, she was sure, Star of Bethlehem, Solomon's Seal, the white spray of ground nuts and bunch berries. Perhaps they could make a bouquet, and Patty would take it across the fields to Mrs. Boynton's door. She need not go in, and thus they would not be disobeying their father's command not to visit that "crazy Boynton woman."

Here Patty came up with a painful of greens, and the sisters sat down in the sunny window to get them ready for the pot.

"I'm calmer," the little rebel allowed. "That's generally the way it turns out with me. I get into a rage, but I can generally size it off."

"You certainly must have got rid of a good deal of temper this morning by the way your voice sounded."

"Nobody can hear us in this out of the way place. It's easy enough to see that the women weren't asked to say anything when the men settled where the houses should be built. The men weren't content to stick them on the top of a high hill or half a mile from the stores, but put them back to the main road, taking due care to cut the sink window where their wives couldn't see anything, even when they were washing dishes."

"I don't know that I ever thought about it in that way." And Waitstill looked out of the window in a brown study, while her hands worked with the dandelion greens. "I've noticed it, but I never supposed the men did it intentionally."

"No, you wouldn't," said Patty, with the pessimism of a woman of ninety, as she stole an oblique glance at her sister. Patty's own face, irregular, plump, unattractive, had its peculiar charm, and her brilliant skin and hair so dazzled the masculine beholder that he took note of no small defects. But Waitstill was beautiful—beautiful even in her working dress of purple calico. Her single strand of hair, the Foxwell knot, that in her was bronze and in Patty pale ash, was wound once around her head and made to stand a little as it went across the front. It was a simple, easy, unconscious fashion of her own, quite different from anything done by other women in her time and place, and it just suited her dignity and serenity. It looked like a coronet, but it was the way she carried her head—that gave you the fancy, these were such spirit and pride in the posture of the long, graceful neck. Her eyes were as clear as mountain pools shaded by rushes, and the strength of the face was softened by the sweetness of the mouth.

Patty never let the conversation die out for many seconds at a time, and now she began again: "My sudden rage didn't match my name very well; but, of course, mother didn't know how I was going to turn out when she called me Patience, for I was nothing but a suppling little ball, red baby. But my name really is too ridiculous when you think about it."

Waitstill laughed as she said: "I didn't take you long to change it. Perhaps Patience was a hard word for a baby to say, but the moment you could talk you said 'Patty, wants this' and 'Patty wants that.'"

"Did 'Patty' ever get it? She never has since that's certain. And look at her name. It's 'Waitstill,' get you never stop a moment. When you're not in the shed or barn or chicken house or kitchen or attic or garden patch you are working in the Sunday school or the choir."

It seemed as if Waitstill did not intend to answer this arraignment of her activities. She rose and crossed the room to put the pan of greens in the sink, preparing to wash them. Taking the long handled dipper from the wall, she paused a moment before plunging it into the water pail; paused, and leaning her elbow on a corner of the shelf over the sink, looked steadfastly out into the yard.

Patty watched her curiously and was just going to offer a penny for her thoughts when Waitstill suddenly broke the brief silence by saying: "Yes, I am always lonely. It's better so, but at the same time, I'm waiting inside. I don't know for what, but I always feel that I'm waiting."

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY

WHERE WERE THE NINE? Luke 17:11-19—May 31.

"Were there none found that returned to give glory to God, save this alien?"—Verse 18.

THE essence of today's lesson is gratitude. It is impossible to imagine a perfect being as acceptable to God without this quality. We might almost say that the degree of our acceptance with God is measured by our gratitude. It leads to obedience to Divine laws and regulations, whether understood or not. It leads to self-sacrificing labors in the service of God, and according to a Divine automatic arrangement has its blessings.—Romans 8:28.

Jesus was approaching Jerusalem by way of Samaria. It is surmised that this was His last journey to Jerusalem, which eventuated in His death. Ten lepers sitting by the roadside heard that Jesus of Nazareth was passing by, and immediately called to Him. "Master, have mercy upon us!" He replied, "Go show yourselves to the priests."

According to God's arrangement with the Jews under their Law Covenant, they were to have no sickness except as those whom leprosy seized; and the priests were to pass judgment upon cases of leprosy. Our Lord's direction that the lepers show themselves to the priests implies that by the time they would reach their destination they would be healed. The lepers must have exercised great faith; for instead of crying out for instantaneous healing, they showed for the priests.

They had gone but a short distance when they found themselves cured. We can imagine with what joy they hastened for the priest's approval, in order to return to their families, thankful that they had been healed. Jesus' feet, giving Him thanks. We cannot doubt that he would receive a great blessing eventually, though not then; for he was a Samaritan, an alien from the commonwealth of Israel.

Another Crumb of Favor.

In his case the healing was a crumb from the children's table; for the rich man had not died—God's favor had not yet departed from Israel. Jesus had not yet uttered the fateful words, "Your House is left unto you desolate."

Says, "It was three, and a half years after Jesus' death before the individual favor to the Jews terminated to such an extent that the Gospel could go to the Gentiles.—Acts 10.

Had the returning leper been a Jew, no doubt he would have been invited to become a follower of Jesus. But because he was a Samaritan, Jesus merely said, "Arise and go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole."

Nonetheless, when the time came for opening the door to the Gentiles, this grateful Samaritan was amongst those who gladly made consecration to God.

Ten Healed—Where Were the Nine?

Jesus called public attention to the fact that only one of the ten healed had returned to give glory to God. True, He had not asked them to acknowledge the Divine Power that wrought through Him. True, they had done exactly what He had told them to do. But why did He not bargain with them, saying, "If I heal you, will you become My disciples? Why did not He take this method of adding to the number of His disciples?"

The preaching of Jesus and the Apostles is in strong contrast with much of the preaching of evangelists, revivalists, etc. Never did Jesus or the Apostles argue worldly people to become disciples of Christ. They merely declared certain great facts, and accepted those who were thus influenced. They reasoned of sin, of righteousness and of a coming time of decision, or judgment, and left the matter with the individual conscience. They told that those who forsake sin and turn to God may have forgiveness and reconciliation through the blood of Christ.

They told of a Heavenly Call for all such penitents who would consecrate their lives wholly to God and in righteousness.

The point we make is that according to the Bible no man is ever made by Jesus and the Apostles to obtain recruits for the Lord's army by a "hip-hip-hurray" process. In this we are not criticizing others, but merely calling attention to facts, which should guide all who seek to know and to do God's will.

The Samaritan of our lesson represents a class of grateful followers of the Lord who seek to give Him glory in their thoughts, words and doings; while the majority of those who so gladly have received His favor are disposed to pursue the ambitions and the pleasures of the present life. Neglecting to take the path which the Master trod, they will not reach the glory, honor and immortality which He attained and to which He has called all of His followers.

Many Christian people are growing in the opinion that we are living today in a time of crucial trial as respects those who have made a covenant with God. They believe that we are nearing the time when the Church, the Body of Christ, will be resolved by the Lord in the Resurrection change to be His bride.

OLD SETTLERS' REUNION

Pioneer Residents from All Over Region Meet at Suttons Bay June 19.

SEXUAL KNOWLEDGE

ILLUSTRATED 320 PAGES

The thirty-third annual meeting and picnic of the Old Settlers' Association of the "Grand Traverse" region will be held on the fair grounds at Suttons Bay June 19, 1914.

Committees are making arrangements for what is hoped will be the largest annual gathering in the history of the association. Short talks and reminiscences of early days in the development of this favored region will be given by several of the older residents at the meeting, which will be held immediately after the dinner is over.

The officers are making an extra effort this year to add to the membership list and perfect the records of the association. To this end, all those who have lived in this region for fifteen years or more are urged to become members of the association.

Captain O. E. Wilbur of Charlevoix is the county vice-president and those who are thinking of attending will do well to see him regarding the arrangements for those going from this section. The program arranged is a splendid one and many excellent addresses will be given.

Grange Column

Charlevoix Grange.

Charlevoix Grange will hold its regular meeting on Friday evening of this week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Dutton on Clinton street. All members are urged to be present and visitors are always welcome.

There is more Cataract in this section of the country than all other diseases put together and until the last few years it was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Cataract to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hurler's Cataract Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists, etc. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center Grange, No. 956, met in regular session Friday evening with 32 present. Under the head of new business the secretary was instructed to purchase new song-books and by-laws.

The lecturer's hour was filled with good music, songs and readings. Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks, when it is hoped that all members will be present.

SEALED PROPOSALS will be received at the office of the Lighthouse Inspector, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, until 2 o'clock p. m., June 6th, 1914, and then opened, for furnishing fuel for the Twelfth Lighthouse District for the fiscal year 1915. Blank proposals and particulars may be obtained by addressing the Lighthouse Inspector, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. 2012

Pomona Grange.

Charlevoix County Pomona Grange will meet with Boyne River Grange at the town hall in Boyne Falls Thursday, June 11. State Master J. C. Ketchum will give the principal address of the day. The program will be a splendid one and a good attendance is looked for.

Peninsula Grange.

Regular meeting May 23rd was called to order by Worthy Master Heller, 30 members being present. Two applications for membership were received, three members reinstated and one member given the third and fourth degrees. The grange voted to buy six lamps for the hall and a grange seal.

Lecture hour was observed by songs, recitations, discussions, etc. The grange has a very bright outlook for a prosperous year. It was voted to observe Children's Day in June, the date to be fixed at the next meeting. Twelve dollars was received for dues, fees and money from women's work committee. Next meeting June 6th.

Notice.

The Marion Township Board of Review will be in session at the town hall on Tuesday, June 2nd, and Monday and Tuesday, June 8th and 9th, for the purpose of revising the assessment rolls of said township.

Wilson Grange, No. 719.

Wilson Grange met Saturday evening, May 23rd, with about thirty members present.

During the business part of the meeting Mr. and Mrs. Monday were obligated in the first and second degrees. Then followed the program which closed the contest and when the points were counted it was found that Frank Smith's side was victorious.

On account of outsiders being present grange was dismissed, after which the dance committee announced a dance for Saturday evening, June 6th.

Ironton Grange.

Ironton Grange, No. 707, met in regular session May 19th with the Worthy Master in the chair. All the officers were present. On motion it was decided to have a dance May 29th.

Lecturer's hour consisted of readings, songs and a discussion, "Does the Silo Pay?"

Grange closed in due form to meet again June 2nd. Come, brothers and sisters, and visit us. It is good for us to dwell together in unity.

Funeral Held Thursday.

Funeral services of Wm. L. Stiger, a pioneer resident of this section, who died at the Masonic home at Alma, Tuesday, May 19, were held from the Antrim City school house last Thursday, under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity. Interment took place in the Antrim City cemetery. About thirty local Masons were in attendance.

MUST PROTECT FRUIT TREES

Millions of Tent Caterpillars Are Now Menacing the Crops.

Have Already Begun to Eat the Leaves of Trees in Orchards That Have Been Neglected.

Fruit growers must get after the tent caterpillars at once, particularly those caterpillars that are in the orchards and are now eating the leaves of the fruit trees. In those sections where the fruit growers have conducted an aggressive campaign against the caterpillar a much smaller number of nests are seen than in those sections where the farmers have been derelict in their duty. There are also sections in Marion and Norwood townships where the number of tents to be seen are unusually large. Here the farmers have been so crowded with their spring work that the caterpillars have been allowed to get a good start. There are also other sections in the county where attention should be given to this orchard pest. Wherever the wild cherry is permitted to grow along the fences in pasture fields or in the unoccupied lands the number of tents visible is large.

Professor L. R. Taft, who has been traveling over Northern Michigan during the past week, has been alarmed by the number of tents that he has seen in the orchards, and in speaking about the subject expressed himself as follows:

"The tent caterpillars are unusually plentiful this spring and unless prompt measures are at once taken will soon strip the apple trees. In sections where there are no wild cherry trees for them to breed on they are easily held in check by two sprayings of arsenate of lead used at the rate of three to five pounds in fifty gallons of water if applied thoroughly, the first spraying being given as soon as the leaves appear and while the worms are quite small. When the insects are half grown it is more difficult to destroy them and if they are very numerous upon the trees they will strip the branches before they will get enough of the poison to kill them.

"By adding one and a fourth gallons of commercial lime-sulphur solution to 50 gallons of the above sprayings will suffice to control other leaf-eating insects and to keep the apple scab fungus in check.

"After the caterpillars are half grown some method of fighting them which is quicker in its action should be used. When the trees are small or when there are only one or two nests they can be scraped out of the crotches with the hands and thrown into a pail half filled with water to which a pint of kerosene has been added or they may be crushed with the feet. In order to make sure that all of the worms are removed it will be well to go over the crotches with a swab which has been dipped in kerosene emulsion or lime sulphur solution diluted one to ten.

"Upon tall trees a swab upon the end of a pole may be used for destroying the nests, using one of the above materials for killing the caterpillars.

"Kerosene emulsion can be made by slicing a cake of ordinary laundry soap into thin shavings and after dissolving it in two gallons of boiling water adding one gallon of kerosene and stirring it with a paddle or using a pump until a cream-like mass has been formed. Before it is used the emulsion should be diluted with three parts of water for one part of emulsion, which will give about one part of kerosene to ten parts of water.

"Care should be taken if the lime-sulphur solution is used not to get it on the hands and the trees should not be sprayed with a poison while in bloom."

Thank You, Gentlemen.

The Charlevoix Courier, A. J. Usher publisher, comes to our desk this week with an entire new dress. Bro. Usher is putting out an excellent paper and deserves the patronage of the residents of his city and county.—Rose City Review.

The Charlevoix Courier came to us last week in a brand new dress of very pretty type. The Courier has always been a good, newsy periodical and with the added attractiveness of its reading matter ought to soar to the zenith of success, or words to that effect.—Central Lake Torch.

SOME COCKEREL (?)

Courier Will Not Vouch for Truth Regarding Weights in Shores Fish-Cockerel Varn.

Joe Shores was in the office Memorial Day. We know no reason why Joe should have chosen Memorial Day for the occasion of his visit, as on this day we usually make it a point to decorate the graves of the departed. But it seems that some time earlier in the year, Joe sent E. J. Hiller a 12 pound rainbow trout from the Jordan river, where he was working. In return for the fish, Hiller made Joe a present of one of his prize Barred Rock cockerels. Joe killed the cockerel and ate it for his dinner Memorial Day, and claimed it dressed a trifle over 14 pounds, and that Hiller raised cockerels that will go beyond this in weight. Probably Joe catches rainbow trout that weigh more than 12 pounds—we are not sure—you had better ask Joe about it, as we will not vouch for the truth regarding the weight of either cockerel or fish. But why Joe should spring a story like this on us on Memorial Day is more than we can imagine.

IMPRESSIVE EXERCISES

Memorial Day Fittingly Observed in Charlevoix—Weather Was Fine.

It has been years since this section of the state has experienced such a beautiful day as was Memorial Day. Hundreds of members of the G. A. R., the W. R. C. and Sunday school and school children were in the line of march to the cemetery. The parade was as fine a one as has ever been witnessed in the city. Brookside cemetery never was more beautiful than it is this spring and the people of this city should commend those who have it in charge.

BEAN DISEASES RUINING CROP

Loss Estimated at $2,000,000 During Year of 1913.

Like Conditions Exist in Other States—How to Prevent Spread of Disease.

The blight and anthracnose of garden and field beans caused a loss in Michigan alone estimated at $2,000,000, or 20 per cent. of the crop of 1913. This state does not stand alone, for like conditions obtain in other bean-growing sections. It is becoming more difficult each year to secure bean seed free from one or both of these diseases. In view of these facts, it is highly important that the diseases be more thoroughly recognized and that the best available methods of control—some of which must be begun in the early cultivation of the plants—be understood and put into practice.

Bean anthracnose is caused by a fungus which attacks the stems, leaves, pods and seeds of the plants. On the stems and leaf veins it causes elongated, sunken, dark red cankers, sometimes killing young plants and often producing deformed and yellowed leaves. Rounded or irregular sunken spots with a slightly raised rim are produced on the pods. The spots usually have pink centers surrounded by a darker, reddish border. In severe cases the pods may be entirely covered by the sores and produce no seed. In other cases the fungus penetrates the pods and enters the seed, causing dark, sunken specks or spots. In these diseased seed as well as in the refuse from diseased plants the fungus is propagated from season to season.

The bean blight differs from anthracnose in several ways. It is caused by a bacterial organism. On the leaves it produces irregular, diseased areas which at first have a water-soaked appearance, later dry out and become brown and brittle. The entire margin or half of a leaflet is often affected. On the pods the disease starts as slightly raised and watery pustules, which later enlarge, become of irregular shape and amber color with yellow centers. Infected seed show yellow diseased blotches or are entirely yellow and shriveled.

Both diseases cause serious losses in the snap bean trade. Diseased pods are unmarketable and must be sorted out. If but a few slightly spotted pods are packed in a basket the disease may spread during shipment, causing additional loss and necessitating extra sorting before the beans can be sold to the consumer. In the seed bean trade all beans must be hand-picked to get out the discolored diseased seeds. From 15 to 30 per cent. of diseased beans are

C. H. S. WON HONOR STANDARD

In Second Annual County High School Meet at East Jordan.

Sheehy of East Jordan Captured the Gold Medal
With Average of 90 3-4 Points.

Seventy-nine high school lads, representing the high schools of the county, participated in the athletic contests at East Jordan Friday, May 29th. Thirty-four of the participants represented the local school in a very satisfactory style and are surely deserving of a real hearty "Thank you."

Durance, Burns, Saunders and Scroggie were the four highest point winners for Charlevoix, while Earl Sheehy of East Jordan captured the gold medal with an average of 90 points in four events. Just one-half, 17 out of 34, of the local contestants won honor standard medals, scoring 50 points or better in each event. Following is the list: King Saunders, Harold Withers, Allen Arnold, Floyd Auld, Ned Durance, Percy Durance, Theo. Kibbie, Harold Usher, Robert Sloan, John Walker, Paul Harsha, Ed. Krulick, Lawrence Ditlefsen, Leslie Shapton, Dean Scroggie, Engle Van Allsburg and Cecil Burns.

This brought the honor standard banner to Charlevoix by a very small margin, for East Jordan was a close second. First place in the meet went to Charlevoix with an average of 206, second to East Jordan with an average of 274, third to Boyne City with an average of 232 points.

The two relay races were mighty pretty events. East Jordan won the lightweight event. Scroggie by exerting himself in the last lap of the heavy-weight relay saved one cup for his school. All special events excepting the relays were won by Boyne City.

A decision has not been reached regarding the winner of the 220 yards dash. Eleven seconds, by Durance, was the best time for hundred yards: 9 feet, by Burns, the best leap in the standing broad jump: 16 feet 5 inches, by Scroggie, the best distance in the running broad jump: 286 feet, by Mascho, the best distance in throwing the baseball: 5 feet, by Burns, the best high jump. Harsha took first in the shot put with a fling of 42 ft. 3 inches.

HINKLEY WITHDRAWS

Leaves Congressional Field to Scott of Alpena and Bayliss of the Soo.

Dana H. Hinkley, state representative from Emmet county and prominent Northern Michigan lumberman, has announced his withdrawal from the Republican contest for congressman from the 11th district.

"There are too many opportunities to do things I do not care to do," was the way he summed up his reasons for withdrawal. There are now but two active candidates in the running, Frank Scott of Alpena and Joseph E. Bayliss of Sault Ste. Marie. Mr. Hinkley had his campaign nicely started and was making good headway, but recently he arrived at the decision which leaves the field open to the others.—Mancelona Herald.

MASTER MECHANIC COMPLETES WORK

On Two Magnificent Power Boats, the "Little Boy" and the "Comet."

Designed by William H. Hand of New Bedford, Massachusetts, and Built by Louis J. Mercier.

Two of the finest and most up-to-date power launches have just been completed by Louis J. Mercier of this city, who is well known for his careful construction and perfect workmanship. The designing was the artistic work of William H. Hand, Jr., of New Bedford, Massachusetts.

Each boat is 20 feet by 4 feet 8 inches and they are built of picked cedar and finished in mahogany. All the fittings, which are numerous as well as beautiful, are of nickel-plated bronze. Every piece of material used is the best that could be obtained. Each boat is powered with a 30-40 Loew-Victor engine and should run at least 25 to 26 miles per hour.

Mr. Hand, who designed the boats, guaranteed that they would make a speed of 25 miles if the hulls were built according to specifications, and there is no doubt but that they are built identical in every detail by Mr. Mercier. Mr. Cowles, who is the owner of one of the boats, has known the builder for many years and knowing that everything would be finished as the plans called for had the boats built in this city by Mr. Mercier.

The two launches—named the "Little Boy" and the "Comet"—are owned by Warren Cowles and Jesse Barker of Peoria, Illinois, and will be placed on Walloon Lake. They will run them to Boyne City from here and then across the country by wagon to Wildwood Harbor.

One of the most pleasing features of the boats' construction is the automobile-steering device, which has been so arranged that the operator can start the engine, control the spark, gasoline, oil and all without moving from the comfortable seat. All the seat cushions are of fine quality leather. Taking all in all, these two boats are a credit to the city, the designer, the builder, the owners and those who will have the pleasure of their use.

EMREY FOR REGISTER

Present Incumbent Announces He will be a Candidate at the Coming Primaries.

Romeo A. Emrey, register of deeds of Charlevoix county for the past eight years, announces himself as a candidate for the office to succeed himself at the coming August primaries.

During this period of time Mr. Emrey has been on the job every minute. He is one of the most efficient and capable officers the county has ever had. The records of the office were never in as good condition as they are at the present time and when you want information regarding descriptions of any property located in the county you can obtain them on short notice.

Mr. Emrey will ask for another term as register of deeds on the grounds of efficiency that he is better qualified to fulfill the duties of the office than any other person who could be chosen. He has been a Republican for many years and will put up more than a hand-shaking campaign for the office he seeks.

CHARLEVOIX CENTRAL GARAGE

One of the Best in Northern Michigan—Will Accommodate 28 Cars.

One of the most complete automobile garages to be found in Northern Michigan is that of J. A. Vought of this city. There is floor space in this commodious building to accommodate 28 cars and every facility for their care is at hand. Last season the garage was filled to overflowing practically the entire season. Mr. Vought states that this year's bookings are as numerous if not exceeding those of last season.

One of the features of the garage that will be appreciated by those who patronize it is that tires and tubes of three well-known makes—the Mitchell, Federal and United States—will be kept in stock in all sizes and treads, also repairs of all kinds. Mr. Vought is to be congratulated on the splendidly equipped garage he is conducting and he deserves a most liberal patronage.

CRUSHED HIS HAND

George Trimble Victim of a Painful Accident at Product Plant Monday.

George Trimble, an employe at the Charlevoix Rock Products plant, had his hand badly crushed Monday in a peculiar accident.

Early in the morning the heavily loaded dray of Gene Bedwin became stalled in the company's yard and Trimble took hold of the wheels to help move it. Upon starting in some manner his right hand was thrown between the wheel and the platform of the dray, tearing the flesh from near the wrist forward almost to the knuckles in such a manner that the bones and muscles were exposed.

The hand was badly injured and it will be some time before Mr. Trimble will be able to use it.

BUSY WEEK IN CIRCUIT COURT

Earl H. Johnston Gets Verdict of $5,250 for Loss of Hand.

Five Pleas for Divorce Granted—Case of Beaubien vs. Baker Now on Trial.

Since the opening of the May term of the circuit court last week many cases have been disposed of and the court is still busy grinding out those remaining on the calendar.

The first case was that of Earl H. Johnston vs. The Elm Cooperage Company of Boyne City. The suit was brought against the company by Mr. Johnston for the loss of a hand while he was employed in their plant about a year ago. M. E. Silverstein handled the complainant's case and secured a judgment for $5,250.

The case of The People vs. Louis Galinski, charged with selling diseased meat to a Boyne City butcher, was quashed, but Galinski was immediately re-arrested on a similar charge, which will be heard at the coming term of court.

The two cases of The People vs. Condy Gallagher and Edward Pratt, charged with violation of the local option law, were put over until the coming term of court.

Joseph Oliver was found guilty by the jury on the charge of desertion, but sentence was deferred until the next term of court.

The cases of The People vs. James Hampton, charged with statutory rape; James Shangman, desertion; Louis Bancroft, rape; Simon Cunningham, desertion, and Calvin Holbrook, malicious threats, were nolle prossed.

The jury disagreed in the case of Geo. Simmerman vs. the City of Boyne, as they did also in the cases of Hartwell vs. Charles, and Oleson vs. Vnrden.

The cases of VanAllsburg vs. Johnston, Dodds vs. Hooker, and Winick vs. King were held over until next term of court.

Divorces were granted in the cases of Ingram vs. Ingram, Behling vs. Behling, Stigman vs. Stigman, Arnold vs. Arnold and Vandermade vs. Vandermade.

The attention of the court as we go to press is being given to the case of Beaubien vs. Baker, trespass on the case.

Shall We Celebrate?

This is the question that is being asked by many of the business men. There is no reason why a big 4th of July celebration cannot be pulled off in Charlevoix. The only thing the movement lacks is someone to take the leadership and get things lined up. It is our opinion that Charlevoix has laid down long enough, and should get busy this year and celebrate the glorious Fourth.

LARGEST IN HIS- TORY OF SCHOOLS

Graduating Class of 1914 Consists of 10 Boys and 17 Girls

Baccalaureate Sermon Sunday Night—Dr. L. Percival Hugel to Deliver Commencement Address

Commencing with Sunday evening the coming week will be a busy one for the graduating class of 1914. After years of hard study they have at last reached a point where their school life will end in the home school, and further steps along educational lines must be taken either at college or other equally well qualified institutions. Graduation from the home school is but the first step to a higher education by some, while others will be content with the knowledge obtained in their studies up to the time of graduation.

The class this year consists of ten boys and seventeen girls, the largest in the history of the Charlevoix public schools. The class roll is as follows: Charles H. Mascho, Cora B. Driggett, Genevieve Durance, Helen Mary Meech, Ruby A. Hooker, Horatio P. Harsha, Omar Shawley, Clarence E. Hanshaw, Dean C. Scroggie, Lois E. Frazier, Forrest O. Weed, Will E. Driggett, Bessie Irene Allen, Florence Alexander, Ole W. Lyngklip, J. Stanley Finucan, Ellen M. Graham, Caroline M. Ross, Ethel G. Zipp, Mable E. Worth, Orle M. Hooper, Bessie M. Tillotson, Ethyl M. Jacobs, Willard J. Howe, Hattie A. Hamlin, Marion H. Worth and Bertie Howe.

The class motto will be: "Deeds, Not Dreams;" class color, blue and white, and class flower, lilies of the valley.

The weeks' exercise will begin Sunday evening at the Congregational church at 7:30 p. m., when Rev. C. E. Taggart will deliver the baccalaureate address.

Monday evening at 8:00 o'clock, the following program will be given at the Charlevoix theatre:

Music—Madeline Mullen.
Invocation—Rev. Quinton A. Walker.
Solo—Mrs. W. J. Rachow.
Address—Dr. J. Percival Hugel.
Presentation of diplomas—Dr. R. B. Armstrong.
Solo—Dr. A. M. Wilkinson.
Wednesday at the same time and place the members of the class will give the following class day program:
Music—Madeline Mullen.
Salutatory—Cora B. Driggett.
Part I—Commercial.
Solo—Mrs. S. A. Bush.
Part II—Scientific.
Part III—Literary.
Valedictory—Charles Mascho.
Class song—Class of 1914.

BANQUET JUNE 12

Date Finally Decided Upon for Annual Event in Charlevoix County.

The annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club will be held at the Elston Hotel the evening of Friday, June 12, instead of the 6th, the date heretofore mentioned.

Among the men who will be seen and heard are A. J. Grosbeck of Detroit, probable candidate for governor; Grant Fellows, attorney general of Michigan; Frank D. Scott of Alpena, Joe Bayliss of the Soo, Judge Judd Yelling of Escanaba, candidates for congress, and Geo. L. Lusk of Bay City, candidate for secretary of state.

At present the committee are negotiating with other speakers and are busy making arrangements for the coming event.

Second Petty Officer.

Hubert Paddock, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Paddock of this city, finishes his third year at the U. S. naval academy at Annapolis this year. Hubert has made an excellent record since entering the academy and has been chosen as second petty officer of his company. The class this year numbered 188 and Hubert stood second in department. The cadets will soon board the battleship Idaho for their summer cruise and the first stop will be at the Straits of Gibraltar. From there they will visit Naples and other points.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Pattie (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daff mother.

CHAPTER V.

A Kiss.

"S HALL we have our walk in the woods on the Edgewood side of the river, just for a change, Patty?" suggested her sister. "The water is so high this year that the river will be splendid. We can gather our flowers in the till pasture, and then you'll be quite near Mrs. Boynton's and can carry the nosegay there while I come home ahead of you and get supper. I'll take today's eggs to father's store on the way and ask him if he minds our having a little walk. I've an errand at Aunt Abby's that would take me down to the bridge anyway."

"Very well," said Patty somewhat apathetically. "I always like a walk with you, but I don't care what becomes of me this afternoon if I can't go to Ellen's party."

The excursion took place according to Waitstill's plan, and at 4 o'clock she sped back to her night work and preparations for supper, leaving Patty with a great bunch of early wild flowers for Ivory's mother. Patty had left them at the Boyntons' door with Rodman, who was picking up chips and volunteered to take the nosegay into the house at once.

"Won't you step inside?" the boy asked shyly, wishing to be polite, but conscious that visitors from the village very seldom crossed the threshold.

"I'd like to, but I can't this afternoon, thank you. I must run all the way down the hill now or I shall be in time to supper."

"Do you eat meals together, over to your house?" asked the boy.

"We're all three at the table, if that means together."

"We never are. Ivory goes off early and takes lunch in a pail. So do I when I go to school. Aunt Boynton never sits down to eat. She just stands at the window and takes a bite of something now and then. You haven't got any mother, have you?"

"No, Rodman."

"Neither have I, nor any father, nor any relations but Aunt Boynton and Ivory. Ivory is very good to me, and when he's at home I'm never lonesome."

"I wish you could come over and eat with sister and me," said Patty gently. "Perhaps sometime, when my father is away buying goods and we are left alone, you could join us in the woods, and we would have a picnic? We would bring enough for you—all sorts of good things—hard boiled eggs, doughnuts, apple turnovers and bread spread with jelly."

"I'd like it fine," exclaimed Rodman, his big dark eyes sparkling with anticipation. "I don't have many boys to play with, and I never want to a picnic. Aunt Boynton watches for uncle 'most all the time. She doesn't know he has been away for years and years. When she doesn't watch she prays. Sometimes she wants me to pray with her, but praying don't come easy to me."

"Neither does it to me," said Patty. "I'm good at marbles and checkers and backgammon and jack straws, though."

"So am I," said Patty, laughing. "So we should be good friends. I'll try to get a chance to see you soon again, but perhaps I can't. I'm a good deal tied at home."

"Your father doesn't like you to go anywhere, I guess," interposed Rodman. "I've heard Ivory tell Aunt Boynton things, but I wouldn't repeat them. Ivory's trained me years and years not to tell anything, so I don't."

"That's a good boy," approved Patty. "Then as she regarded him more closely, she continued, 'I'm sorry you're lonesome, Rodman. I'd like to see you look brighter.'"

"You think I've been crying," the boy said slowly. "So I have, but not because I've been punished. The reason my eyes are so swollen up is because I killed our old toad by mistake this morning. I was trying to see if I could swing the scythe so as to help Ivory in laying them. I've only trampled after, and I want to begin on mowing soon's I can. Then, somehow or other, the old toad came out from under the steps. I didn't see him, and the scythe hit him square. I cried for an hour, that's what I did and I don't care who knows it, except I wouldn't like the boys at school to hear me. I've buried the toad out behind the barn and I hope Ivory'll let me keep the news from Aunt Boynton. She cries enough now without my telling her there's been a death in the family. She set great store by the old toad, and so did all of us."

"It's too bad, I'm sorry. But, after all, you couldn't help it."

"No, but we should always look round everywhere when we're cutting—that's what Ivory says. He says folks shouldn't use edged tools till they're old enough not to fool with 'em."

And Rodman looked so wise and old fashioned for his years that Patty did not know whether to kiss him or cry over him as she said: "Ivory's always right. And, now, goodby. I must go this very minute. Don't forget the picnic."

"I won't," cried the boy, gazing after her, wholly entranced with her bright beauty and her kindness. "Say, I'll bring something, too—white oak acorns. If you like 'em. I've got a big bagful up attic!"

Patty sped down the long lane, crept under the bars and flew like a lapwing over the highroad.

"If father was only like any one else—things might be so different," she sighed, her thoughts running along with her feet. "Nobody to make a home for that poor lonesome little boy and that poor lonesome little girl. I am sure that he is in love with Waitstill. He doesn't know it. She doesn't know it. Nobody does but me, but I'm clever at guessing. I was the only one that surmised that Ivory was going to marry again. I should almost like Ivory for myself. He is so tall and handsome, but of course he can never marry anybody. He is too poor and has his mother to look after. I wouldn't want to take him from Wally, though, and then perhaps I couldn't get him anyway. If I couldn't, he'd be the only one. I have never tried yet, but I feel in my bones, somehow, that I could have any boy in Edgewood or Silverboro by just crooking my forefinger and beckoning to him. I wish—I wish they were different! They don't make me want to be keen to them! My forefinger just stays straight and doesn't feel like crooking! There's Cephas Cole, but he's as stupid as an owl. I don't want a husband that keeps his mouth wide open whenever I'm talking, no matter whether it's sense or nonsense. There's Phil Perry, but he likes Ellen, and besides, he's too serious for me. And there's Mark Wilson, he's the best dressed and the only one that's been to college. He looks at me all the time in meeting and asked me if I wouldn't take a walk some Sunday afternoon. I know he planned Ellen's party hoping I'd be there! Goodness gracious, I do believe that is his horse coming behind me! There's no other in the village that goes at such a gait!"

It was, indeed, Mark Wilson, who always drove, according to Aunt Abby Cole, "as if he was going for a doctor." He caught up with Patty almost in the twinkling of an eye, but she was ready for him. She had taken off her sunbonnet just to twist it by the string, she was so warm with walking, and in a jiffy she had lifted the clustering curls from her ears, tucked them back with a single expert movement and disclosed two coral pendants. Just the color of her ear tips and her glowing cheeks.

"Hello, Patty!" the young man called in brusque country fashion as he reined up beside her. "What are you doing over here? Why aren't you on your way to the party? I've been over to Lundington and am breaking my neck to get home in time myself."

"I am not going. There are no parties for me," said Patty plaintively.

"Not going? Oh, I say, what's the matter? It won't be a bit of fun without you. Ellen and I made it up expressly for you, thinking your father couldn't object to a candy pull."

"I can't help it. I did the best I could. Waitstill always asks father for me, but I wouldn't take any chances today, and I spoke to him myself. Indeed, I almost coaxed him."

"He's a regular old skulldint," cried Mark, getting out of the wagon and walking beside her.

"You mustn't call him names," Patty interposed, with some dignity. "I call him a good many myself, but I'm his daughter."

"You don't look it," said Mark admiringly. "Come and have a little ride, won't you?"

"Oh, I couldn't possibly, thank you. Some one would be sure to see us, and father's so strict."

"There isn't a building for half a mile just jump in and have a spin till we come to the first house, then I'll let you out and you can walk the rest of the way home. Come, do, and make up to me a little for my disappointment. I'll skip the candy pull if you say the word."

It was an incredibly brief drive at Mark's rate of speed and as exciting and blissful as it was brief and dangerous. Patty thought. Did she imagine it or did Mark help her into the wagon differently from—old Dr. Perry, for instance?

The fresh breeze lifted the gold thread of her curls and gave her cheeks a brighter color, while her breath came fast through her parted lips and her eyes sparkled at the unexpected, unaccustomed pleasure. She felt so grown up, so conscious of a new power, as she sat enthroned on the little wagon seat (Mark Wilson always liked his buggies "couthin' size," so the neighbors said) that she was almost courageous enough to agree to make a royal progress through the village—almost, but not quite.

"Come on, let's shake the old tabbies up and start 'em talking, shall we?" Mark suggested. "I'll give you the reins and let Nero have a kick of the whip."

"No, I'd rather not drive," she said. "I'd be afraid of this horse and, anyway, I must get out this very minute—yes, I really must. If you hold Nero I can just slip down between the wheels. You needn't help me."

Mark alighted notwithstanding her objections, saying gallantly, "I don't miss this pleasure, not by a jugful! Come along! Jump!"

Patty stretched out her hands to be helped, but Mark forestalled her by putting his arms around her and lifting her down. A second of time only was involved, but in that second he held her close and kissed her warm cheek, her cheek that had never felt the touch of any lips but those of Waitstill. She pulled her sunbonnet over her flaming face, while Mark, with a gay smile of farewell, sprang into the wagon and gave his horse a free rein.

Patty never looked up from the road, but walked faster and faster, her heart beating at breakneck speed. It was a changed world that spun past her. Fright, triumph, shame, delight, gratified vanity swam over her in turn.

A few minutes later she heard once more the rumble of wheels on the road. It was Cephas Cole driving toward her over the brow of Saco hill. "He'll have seen Mark," she thought, "but he can't know I've talked and driven with him. I gh! how stupid and common he looks!"

"I heard your father blowin' the spring horn just as I come over the bridge," remarked Cephas, drawing up in the road. "He stood in the doorway blowin' like Reddam. I guess you're late to supper."

"I'll be home in a few minutes," said Patty. "I got delayed and am a little behindhand."

"I'll turn right round if you'll get in and let me take you back along a piece, I'll save you a good five minutes," begged Cephas abjectly.

"All right, much obliged, but it's against the rules and you must drop me at the foot of our hill and let me walk up."

"Certainly, I know the deacon, 'n' I ain't huffy for trouble any more'n you be, though I'd take it quick enough if you just give me leave! I ain't no coward, 'n' I could tackle the deacon tomorrow if so be I had anything to ask him."

This seemed to Patty a line of conversation, distinctly to be discouraged under all the circumstances, and she tried to keep Cephas on the subject of his daily tasks and his mother's rheumatism until she could escape from his overappreciative society.

"How do you like my last job?" he inquired as they passed his father's house. "Some think I've got the ell a little dote too yaller. Folks that ain't never handled a brush allers think they can mix red better 'n them that knows their trade."

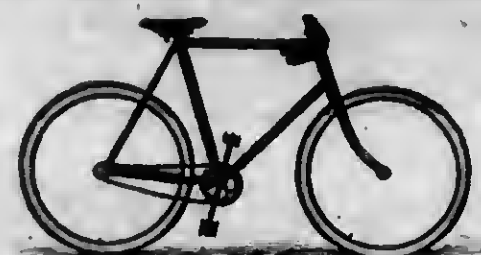

"If your object was to have everybody see the ell a ndie away you've succeeded," said Patty cruelly. She never thought the poor boy a civil word for fear of getting something warmer than civility in return.

"Mother says that two rooms are big enough to set up housekeeping in."

"I'll come down," Cephas responded, rather crestfallen. "I wanted a good, bright, hasty shade. 'T won't look so yaller when father lets me paint the house to match, but that won't be till next year. He makes fun of the yaller color, same as you, says a home's something you want to forget when you're away from it. Mother says the two rooms of the ell are big enough for somebody to set up housekeeping? What do you think?"

"I never think," returned Patty, with a tantalizing laugh. "Good night, Cephas; thank you for giving me a lift!"

CHAPTER VI.

"What dreams may come."

S UPPER was over and the work done at last. The dishes washed, the beans put in soak, the hens shut up for the night, the milk strained and carried down cellar. Patty went up to her little room with the one window and the slanting walls, and Waitstill followed and said good night. Her father put out the lights, locked the doors and came up the creaking stairs. There was never any talk between the sisters before going to bed, save on nights when their father was late at the store, usually on Saturdays only, for the good talkers of the village, as well as the gossips and loafers, preferred any other place to swap stories than the bleak atmosphere provided by old Foxy at his place of business.

Patty could think in the dark. Her healthy young body lying not uncomfortably on the bed of corn husks, and the patchwork comforter drawn up under her chin, she could think, but for the first time she could not tell her thoughts to Waitstill. She had a secret, a dazzling secret, just like SEVERAL things have contributed to brighten the outlook for Republican success in the Congressional elections this fall and in the Presidential election of 1916. Much of the bitterness that was created between the regular Republican wing and the Bull Moosers is being healed by time. The idea of nominating ex-President Roosevelt, on the regular Republican ticket seems to be growing in favor, as it is realized that he is about the strongest man that could be named and with a united party behind would undoubtedly be elected on the record of the weak foreign policy of the Wilson administration. The attitude of ex-President Taft is quite hostile to Col. Roosevelt, but if Roosevelt cannot be defeated for the Republican nomination Mr. Taft will be compelled to support him after he wins the nomination.

THE Mexican peace and mediation delegates are not making much headway towards solving the Mexican problem. In the meantime Gen. Villa is looming large as the leading character in Mexico. While there are many who have criticized him for making wholesale executions the fact remains that those who are executed by him are the real oppressors of Mexico the same as were the nobles and clergy of 1789 in France when the guillotine was so busy chopping off heads of those who insisted on living on the sweat and toil of others. The difference between Villa and Huerta is very great. Villa executes the villains, while Huerta executes the patriots.

THOSE not invited to the state conference will hope to see later moving pictures of Hon. Pat Kelley putting aside the gubernatorial crown at present worn rather firmly by Mr. Ferris of Big Rapids.

ALTHOUGH the coming campaign is several weeks in advance the usual number of one-cylinder men are coming out as candidates for six-cylinder offices.

THE Panama canal has felt a severe earthquake shock. The vibration of all those senate speeches was sure to reach the canal sooner or later.

THE political nature fakers certainly had their troubles at the Detroit pow-wow.

USES FOR COLD CHICKEN.

SUPPER MENU.
Cream Chicken Patties.
Rice.
Canned Peaches.
Sponge Cake.
Tea.

COLD chicken can be converted into many delicious dishes for luncheon or supper. Some hints are as follows:
Cream Chicken Patties.—Cut cold chicken into pieces and mix it with a cream sauce. Make biscuits, adding twice the usual amount of butter. Cut with a doughnut cutter, bake the patties on the centers. Serve the creamed chicken over the patties, with the centers on top. Garnish with sprigs of parsley.

With Plenty of Seasoning.

Blanquette of Chicken.—Cut the meat of a cooked chicken in small pieces and put in a double boiler with one cupful of drawn butter sauce to every pint of meat. When hot add one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, two tablespoonfuls of cream and the beaten yolks of two eggs. Let it stand where it will be very hot for three minutes, but do not let it cook. Serve in a border of hollid rice or with rice croquettes.

Combined With Potatoes.

Chicken Savory.—Cut into dice two medium sized raw potatoes. Put into frying pan two tablespoonfuls olive oil and when hot add the potato dice. Stir to keep from burning and cook five minutes. Then add a dash of paprika, a cupful of boiling water, a crushed clove of garlic, a cupful of cold cooked chicken and salt to taste. Cover and cook until the potatoes are done, stirring frequently. This makes a nice luncheon dish.

Served With Sauce.

Chicken à la Mole.—Take one cupful of cold cooked chicken cut in strips, three cold boiled potatoes cut in one-third inch slices, one truffe cut in strips, three tablespoonfuls of butter, three tablespoonfuls of flour, one and one-half cupful of scalded milk, salt, pepper. Make a sauce of butter, flour and milk. Add the chicken, potatoes and truffe and as soon as heated add seasoning.

A Delicious Dish.

Shirred Chicken With Oysters.—Take one-quarter cupful butter, one-quarter cupful flour, one-half teaspoonful salt, one-eighth teaspoonful pepper, two cupfuls cream, two cupfuls cold cooked chicken cut in slices, one pint oysters, cleaned and drained, one-third cupful finely chopped celery. Make a sauce of first five ingredients, cooking until thick. Add diced chicken and oysters. Cook until oysters are plump. Dish and sprinkle with chopped celery. Serve at once. This may be served on toast if you prefer.

Anna Thompson.

A Gallant Clergyman.

It is said that the Rev. Sydney Smith could be gallant as well as witty on occasion.
"Oh Mr. Smith, I cannot bring this flower to perfection," said a young lady to him once as she showed him about her conservatory.
Whereupon he took her by the hand and said, "Then let me bring perfection to the flower."

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

How to Take Care of the Piano.

THE piano is often neglected by the otherwise careful housewife for the simple reason that her attention is seldom, if ever, called to its care. It seems to some if the tuner arrives periodically and the instrument is carefully dusted that is all there is to the care of the piano.

However, the piano is a very delicate instrument, as all musicians know, and requires very watchful care. The first consideration is the position of the piano. Often the only object in placing a piano is to have the best light fall on the music rack. But the piano should not be placed too near the outer wall, the fireplace or radiator, as it is subject to the influences of the atmosphere.

Extreme heat and extreme cold are very harmful to the piano. If one wishes to have a musical instrument in the best of condition and to keep it so an even temperature should be maintained in the room where it stands. If there is too much moisture in the atmosphere the wires become rusty; if there is too much heat the musical adjustment will be injured as well as the wood in the case.

The rusting of the wires can be prevented by sprinkling them with lime or by placing a bag of unsinked lime in the interior to absorb the moisture in the air.

When the atmosphere becomes too dry it is well to have a plant in the room that requires plenty of water. If there is a hot air radiator in the room a bowl or little kettle of water should be suspended by a hook in the radiator pipe. Heavy articles should never be placed on top of the piano, nor should music or books be piled there either.

The keys should be wiped daily, when the piano is dusted, with a cloth dampened with alcohol. If this plan is followed there is less likelihood of their turning yellow. If the keys are soiled a cloth dipped in whiting and rubbed with alcohol will be found excellent for cleaning them. When the keys have become very yellow and need to be bleached try the following: Make a paste of unsalted lime and bran water. It should be applied and allowed to dry slightly. It should then be rubbed off with a cloth and magnesia powder applied to the keys until dry. In a few minutes the keys can be polished to high luster.

Then care should be taken to prevent moths getting into the piano. Prevention is always worth while. In this case the carpet under the piano should be sprinkled with camphor and ground moth balls placed on the floor underneath. A bag of camphor balls should be suspended inside the piano.

If moths do get into the piano make a mixture of benzine and turpentine, using seven parts of benzine to one of turpentine, and add a drop or two of lavender water. Use a small scent spray or an old syringe to squirt this into the piano.

Dealers in pianos say that the best way, as well as the most satisfactory way, to clean a piano is simply to wash it in lukewarm water, drying each part briskly and rubbing it thoroughly just after it is washed. A chamomile skin can be used to advantage here. This method leaves the polish absolutely unimpaired. The piano tuner usually polishes the wood with alcohol, but this requires great care and skill to prevent the wood from burning.

How to Utilize Worn Lace Curtains.

The housewife who is the owner of some really pretty old lace curtains has in them valuable materials for economical decorative needlework if the fairly good parts of the curtain display effective designs.

If the design is small and dainty and enough duplicates of it are latent then they may be applied successfully to net for yokes, cuffs and even panels for children's wash dresses. For the latter purpose the pattern should be sharply cut out and arranged to the best advantage on a background of linen or washable material and basted firmly, taking care that all of it is perfectly flat. Either button-hole the outline invisibly in white or use a thicker thread and bolder stitch. Let the applique stand out distinctly. If fancy dictates work in velvets and other markings to suit your taste.

It is a comparatively easy matter to convert the larger undamaged pieces of old lace curtains into a variety of table and cushion covers, etc. By combining with linen or batiste very effective bureau or table covers can be made in many attractive patterns.

How to Quiet a Rattling Window.

Never use paper to paste up a window that rattles or admits too much air from outside. Tear strips of muslin or old calico and dip the pieces into starch made with flour and cold water, not warm. Run the strips through this smooth paste and adjust them to the cracks of the window.

The muslin becomes like soft putty and will adjust itself wherever placed and will hold like cement. When you desire to remove it catch one end of the strip, give it a pull and it comes off without the least resistance or injury to paint, which is not true of paper strips used for the same purpose.

BURNED TO GROUND

Farm House and Contents of Mrs. George Schantz a Total Loss.

Monday afternoon about four o'clock fire was discovered in the home of Mrs. George Schantz, who lives in Hayes township, about seven miles northeast of town.

Neighbors rushed to the scene of the fire and the household goods on the first floor were saved, but those on the second floor and basement were a total loss. The loss to Mrs. Schantz is a severe one, as no insurance was carried. At the time the fire was first noticed, it was in the roof and was probably caused by a defective chimney.

THE HOTEL HALLETT

New Addition Built and Many Changes Made in This Popular Summer Hostelry.

Many changes have been made in the Hotel Hallett this season. One that deserves special mention is that of a ladies' parlor built on the west side of the already commodious building. The new addition is 16x21, finished in oak, with a large fireplace, making an excellent room in which the ladies can spend their leisure time.

Other changes have also been made in the hotel. New bathrooms have been added, walls retinted and every effort made to make comfortable quarters for the many visitors who make their home at this popular hostelry during the summer months.

Mr. Hallett will meet all trains and boats with his recently purchased Overland car.

South Side Sewer

Preliminary resolutions were passed by the common council Monday evening for the new south side sewer districts, lying south of Antrim street and west of State. The new district will empty into a septic tank at the foot of Alice street. Better read over the plans and specifications, so that you will know before the resolutions are passed whether or not you want the sewer and the expense incurred by laying it.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM TO BE INVISIBLE.

Luke 17:20-37—June 7.

"The Kingdom of God is in your midst."—Verses 21.

THE Pharisees heard of the claim that Jesus was the long-promised King, and they derided Him. They considered Jesus a deceiver and His followers dupes. Our lesson tells how they attempted to expose what they supposed was a deception. They publicly asked Him, "When will God's Kingdom come?" Jesus answered that God's Kingdom would not come with observation. That is to say, when it comes people will not see it; for it will be God's power exerted everywhere.

Had the translators noticed carefully, they would have guarded against saying that God's Kingdom was within those whom Jesus had designated hypocrites, whited sepulchres, etc. A closer examination shows that the text would better be translated, "The Kingdom of God is in your midst."

A kingdom is not a represented Pharaoh Questioning Jesus.

the King, Jesus, present, but they did not recognize Him. Similarly, throughout the Gospel Age, His Church has been misunderstood by the world. "The world knoweth us not, even as it knew Him not." Christ and the Church in the flesh have been only the Kingdom class preparing for investiture of authority in God's due time.

"Days of the Son of Man."

Turning to His disciples, Jesus said, "The days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye shall not see it. And when they shall say unto you, See here; or, see there; go not after them, nor follow them. For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so also shall the Son of Man be in His day."

This is better understood when we translate the Greek word astrape as shining, instead of lightning. Evidently our Lord referred to the sun. The Day of Christ is the Millennium; and His statement was one of His "dark sayings," revealing which He promised that in due time the Holy Spirit would grant enlightenment. This portion is now becoming clear.

Then, to indicate that these things belonged to a distant time, Jesus explained that first He must suffer many things and be rejected of that nation. Coming back to the signs of His presence, He declared, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man."

Here we have something definite. At the time for the establishment of the Kingdom, everything will go along quietly and orderly, just as before the Deluge and the destruction of Sodom. Then mankind ate, drank, married, built, planted, as usual. These things are mentioned merely to indicate that the world will have no outward sign of Christ's Second Presence.

The Deluge and Sodom's Destruction. Everywhere the Bible foretells that Messiah's Kingdom is to be established upon the wreck of our present institutions. It is this wreck that Jesus illustrated by the Deluge and Sodom's destruction. His own presence is to be unknown to the world until the trouble is precipitated.

The Time of Trouble is frequently described as a burning of the world, and all the creeds of Christendom express the thought that the earth is to be burned. They overlook the fact that the "heavens" are to be burned. In the symbolical language of the Bible, the earth represents the social order; the sea, the restless, discontented masses; and the heavens, the rebellious powers. St. Peter declares that they will pass away with great confusion, and that instead will come new heavens and earth. (2 Peter 3:10-13) The new heavens will be the Church in glory; the new earth, the social order under Messiah's Kingdom.

Saints on the House-top.

The Lord seems to assure us that all His faithful ones will live before the symbolic fire with continuing present institutions. In figurative language He says that in that Day of His Parousia, presence, before His Epiphany, revealing, those on the housetop should not go down to take their goods out.

Let's Flight.

The noise is the House of God, and those on the housetop are God's most saintly people. At that time such will realize the necessity for flight, and are warned not to seek to save any of the stuff—social privileges, honor of men, small offices, deacon, elder, etc.

In the flight from Sodom, Lot and his family were warned to hasten, and not even to look back. So the Lord's people now are to "flee out of Babylon." Lot's wife, disobeying, failed to escape. The Lord applies this illustration to His people and urges that their flight be with a full renunciation of the things of the present.

Whoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it. Whoever will lose his life will thereby preserve it—gaining the life everlasting.

BURIED FRIDAY

Son of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Meech Victim of Dreaded White Plague.

Tuberculosis, that dread disease, claimed another victim last week, when Lavater Meech, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Meech of East Jordan, succumbed to the disease last Wednesday night.

The young man was first taken with the disease a couple of years ago. In spite however of good medical attendance he gradually grew worse and several months ago he went to Texas and other southern states, where he hoped the climate would be beneficial. He found the climate there not what was expected and gradually grew worse. A few weeks ago he returned home, Mrs. Meech going to Chicago to accompany him the balance of the trip. He seemed to recover somewhat upon his return and it was hoped by his many friends that he was on the road to recovery.

Deceased was born at Norwood, May 20th, 1893, being a little over twenty years of age. He was well known and a popular young man in this city where he attended high school. Funeral services were held at his late home Friday noon conducted by Rev. A. D. Grigsby, pastor of the Presbyterian church. The body was brought to this city Friday for burial.

BOAT CAPSIZED

Fishermen at Rond Lake, Near Petoskey, Come to Grief Sunday.

Utterly defying the rule of common sense which should tell anyone and everyone not to stand up in a small row boat, especially when there were three in the boat, three men rowed out into Rond Lake near Petoskey, Sunday afternoon and only two came back.

The three men had been fishing on their way across the lake, when it was noticed by those on shore that two of them were standing up. Shouts of warning were made but no attention was paid, when suddenly one of them was seen to lose his balance and plunge into the lake. The boat was upset and all thrown out.

Two of the men were saved, but the body of Carl Gernip now lies entangled in the weeds somewhere at the bottom of the lake.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Ellen Wilson and some of the other girls who were several years older. Her afternoon's experience loomed as large in her innocent mind as if it had been an elopement.

"I hope I'm not engaged to be married to him, even if he did!" The sentence was too tremendous to be finished even in thought. "I don't think I can be. Men must surely say something and not take it for granted you are in love with them and want to marry them. It is what they say when they ask that I should like, much better than being married, when I'm only just past seventeen. I wish Mark was a little different. I don't like his careless ways! He admires me, I can tell that by the way he looks, but he admires himself just as much and expects me to do the same. Still, I suppose none of them are perfect, and girls have to forgive lots of little things when they are engaged. Mother must have forgiven a good many things when she took father. Anyway, Mark is going away for a month on business, so I shan't have to make up my mind just yet!" Here sleep descended upon the slightly puzzled, but on the whole delightfully complacent little creature, bringing her most alluring and untrustworthy dreams.

The dear innocent had indeed no need of haste. Young Mr. Marquis de Lafayette Wilson—Mark for short—was not in the least a gay dandy or ruthless breaker of hearts, and so far as known no souls of village beauties were hung to his belt. He was a likable, light weight young chap, as indulgent and pleasure loving as the strict customs of the community would permit, and a kinsman in his mind most certainly never would lead to the altar, else he had already been many times a bridegroom. Miss Patience Baxter's maiden meditations and uncertainties and perplexities, therefore, were decidedly premature. She was a natural horn, unconsciously artistic, highly expert and finished. She was all this at seventeen, and Mark at twenty-four was by no means a match for her in this field of effort yet. But sometimes in getting her victim into the net the coquette loses her balance and falls in herself. There wasn't a bit of harm in Marquis de Lafayette, but he was extremely agile in keeping out of nets.

Waitstill was restless, too, that night, although she could not have told the reason. She opened her window at the back of the house and leaned out. The evening was mild, with a soft wind blowing. She could hear the full brook dashing through the edge of the wood lot and even the "kerchug" of an occasional bullfrogs. There were great noisy stars in the sky, but no moon.

There was no light in Aunt Abby Cole's kitchen, but a faint glimmer shone through the windows of Uncle Bart's joiner's shop, showing that the old man was either having an hour of peaceful contemplation, with no companion but his pipe or that there might be a little group of privileged visitors, headed by Jed Morrill, busily discussing the affairs of the nation.

Waitstill felt troubled and anxious tonight, troubled by the little daily torments that lessened her courage but never wholly destroyed it. Any one who believed implicitly in heredity might have been puzzled, perhaps, to account for her. He might fantastically picture her as making herself out of her ancestors, using a free hand, picking and choosing what she liked best, with due care for the effect of combinations; selecting here and there and modifying, if advisable, a trait of Grandpa or Grandma Foxwell, of Great Uncle or Great Aunt Baxter; borrowing qualities lavishly from her own gentle born and gently bred mother and carefully avoiding her respected father's shock, except perhaps to take a dash of his pluck and an ounce of his persistence. Jed Morrill remarked of Benjamin Baxter once, "When old Fox wants anything he'll wait till he freezes over afore he'll give up." Waitstill had her father's firm chin, but there the likeness ended. The proud curve of her nostrils, the clear, well opened eye with its deep fringe of lashes, the earnest mouth, all these came from the mother who was little more than a dim memory.

Waitstill disdained any vague, dreary, colorless theory of life and its meaning. She had joined the church at fifteen more or less because other girls did and the parson had persuaded her, but out of her hard life she had somehow formed a courageous philosophy that kept her erect and unshrunk, no matter how great her difficulties. She had no idea of bringing a poor, weak, dragged soul to her Maker at the last day, saying, "Here I am, I have managed to save out of what you gave me!"

Patty slept sweetly on the other side of the partition, the contemplation of her twopenny triumphs bringing a smile to her childish lips, but even so a good heart was there (still perhaps in the process of making), a quick wit, ready wits, a natural charm, and, indeed, the strongest sister to carnal, protest and und precious, she did with all her mind and soul.

There had always been a passionate loyalty in Waitstill's affection, wherever it had been bestowed. Uncle Bart delighted in telling an instance of it that occurred when she was a child of five. Maine had just separated amicably from her mother, Massachusetts, and become an independent state. It was in the middle of March, but there was no snow on the ground and the village boys had built a bonfire on a plot of land near Uncle Bart's joiner's shop. There was a large gathering in celebration of the historic event, and Waitstill crept down the hill with her homemade rag doll in her arms. She stood on the outskirts of the crowd, a silent, absorbed little figure clad in a shabby woolen coat, with a blue knoll hood framing her rosy face. Deborah, her beloved, her only doll, was tightly clasped in her arms, for Debby, like her parent, had few pleasures and must not be denied so great a one as this. Suddenly one of the thoughtless young scamps in the group, wishing to create a new sensation and add to the general excitement, caught the doll from the child's arms and running forward with a wild warwhoop, flung it into the flames. Waitstill did not lose an instant. She gave a scream of anguish and without giving any warning of her intentions, probably without realizing them herself, she dashed through the little crowd into the bonfire and snatched her cherished offspring from the burning pile. The whole thing was over in the twinkling of an eye, for Uncle Bart was as quick as the child and dragged her out of the imminent danger with no worse harm done than a good scorching.

He led the little creature up the hill to explain matters and protect her from a scolding. She still held the doll against her heaving breast, saying, between the sobs: "I couldn't let my Debby burn up! I couldn't let my Uncle Bart see nobody but me! In my dress scorching so much I can't wear it! You'll tell father how it was, Uncle Bart, won't you?"

Debby bore the marks of her adventure longer than her owner, for she had been longer in the fire, but she was replaced and remained the only doll of Waitstill's childhood. At this very moment she lay softly and safely in a bureau drawer ready to be lifted out, some time, Waitstill fancied, and shown tenderly to Patty's children. Of her own possible children she never thought. There was but one man in the world who could ever be the father of them, and she was separated from him by every obstacle that could divide two human beings.

Village "aunts" and "uncles" were elected to that relationship by the common consent of the community, their fitness being established by age, by decided individuality or eccentricity of character, by uncommon largeness or by the possession of an abundant wit and humor. There was no formality about the thing. Certain women were always called "Aunt Susie," or "Aunt Hitty," or what not, while certain men were distinguished as "Uncle Rish," or "Uncle Pel," without previous arrangement or the consent of the high contracting parties.

Such a couple were Cephus Cole's father and mother, Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart. Bartolomew Cole's trade was that of a joiner. As for Aunt Abby's, it can only be said that she made all trades her own by sovereign right of investigation, and what she did not know about her neighbor's occupations was unlikely to be discovered on this side of Jordan. One of the villagers declared that Aunt Abby and her neighbor, Mrs. Abel Day, had argued for an hour before they could make a bargain about the method of disseminating a certain important piece of news, theirs by exclusive right of discovery and prior possession. Mrs. Day offered to give Mrs. Cole the privilege of Sue Hill and Aunt Betty Jack's, she herself to take Guide Board and Town House hills. Aunt Abby quickly proved the injustice of this decision, saying that there were twice as many families living in Mrs. Day's chosen territory as there were in that allotted to her, so the river road to Milliken's mills was gradually awarded to Aunt Abby by way of compromise, and the ladies started on what was a tour of mercy in those days—the furnishing of a subject of discussion for long, quiet evenings.

Uncle Bart's joiner's shop was at the foot of Guide Board hill on the river, late side of the bridge, and it was the pleasantest spot in the whole village. The shop itself had a cheery look, with its weather stained shingles, its small square windows and its hospitable door, half as big as the front side of the building. The step was an old millstone two worn for active service, and the piles of chips and shavings on each side of it had been there for so many years that sweet williams, clove plinks and purple phlox were growing in among them in the most irresponsible fashion, while a morning glory vine had crept up and curled around a long handled rake that had been standing against the front of the house since early spring. There was an air of cozy and amiable disorder about the place that would have invited friendly confabulation even had not Uncle Bart's white head, honest, ruddy face and smiling welcome coaxed you to be fore you were aware. A fine Redwood apple tree shaded the side windows, and underneath it rested all summer a bright blue sleigh, for Uncle Bart at ways described himself as being "plagued for sled road," and kept things as he liked at the shop, having a "piston nut" wife who did exactly the opposite at her house.

The sort of the sleigh was all white now with scattered fruit blossoms, and one of Waitstill's earliest remembrance was of going down hill with "A shop or a barn has saved many a man's life and reason."

Patty toddling at her side, of Uncle Bart's lifting them into the sleigh and permitting them to sit there and eat the ripe red apples that had fallen from the tree. Uncle Bart's son, Cephus (Patty's secret admirer), was a painter by trade and kept his pots and cans and brushes in a little outhouse at the back, while Uncle Bart himself stood every day behind his long joiner's bench almost knee deep in shavings. How the children loved to play with the white, satiny rings, making them into necklaces, hanging them to their ears and weaving them into wreaths. Wonderful houses could always be built in the corner of the shop out of the little odds and ends and "noddies" of white pine, and Uncle Bart was ever ready to cut or saw a special piece needed for some great purpose.

The sound of the plane was sweet music in the old joiner's ears. "I don't hardly know how I'd made out if I'd had to work in a mill," he said confidentially to Cephus. "The noise of a saw going all day, coupled with your mother's tongue manna's at evenin's, would 'a' been too much for my weak head. I'm a quiet man, Cephus, a man that needs a peaceful shop where he can get away from the comforts of home now and then without shakin' his duty nor causin' gossip. If you should ever marry, Cephus—which don't look to me likely without you pick out a different girl—I'd advise you not to keep your stock of paints in the barn or the shed, for it's altogether too handy to the house and the women folks. Take my advice and have a place to yourself, even if it's a small one. A shop or a barn has saved many a man's life and reason. Cephus, for it's nigh a woman's nature to have you underfoot in the house without hectorin' you. Choose a girl same 's you would a horse that you want to hitch up into a span; 't ain't every two that'll stan' together without kicken'. When you get the right girl keep out of her way considerable an' there'll be less wear an' tear."

USE THE AVAILABLE PLANT FOOD.

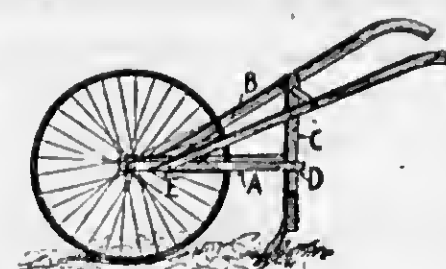

The fertility of the soil is not like a bank account, which is tangible, in sight, can always be drawn out at one or more times or at the will of the depositor, says the American Cultivator. The soil is an investment with many qualifying conditions—namely, available plant food, physical condition and moisture.

SEE THIS, TRUCK GROWERS!

Here's a Homemade Hand Cultivator That Does Excellent Work.

An excellent hand cultivator for a small truck patch that will do excellent work can be made at very little cost. Get a front wheel from an old ball bearing bicycle. Be sure you get the complete bearings, spindle and nuts. Take off the rubber tire. Get the following pieces of the lightest lumber possible, but be sure the wood is tough and straight grained; elm is good: Two pieces for A, 3/4 by 2 by 21 inches; two pieces for B, 3/4 by 2 by 48 inches; one piece for C, 1 1/4 by 3 by 22 inches.

Through the front end of the A pieces bore a hole of size to fit on the spindle. Shave the ends thin enough to take a washer inside and outside and leave room for the nuts. Bore a five-sixteenths inch hole two inches from the other end; also bore the ends of the B pieces to fit against the outside of the A pieces two inches back of the bearing holes at E. With a little stove bolt fasten them there.

Shape the other ends like plow handles. Seven inches from the lower end of piece C bore a five-sixteenths inch hole and two inches from the top end a seven-eighths inch hole. Bore the A pieces to C at D with a five-sixteenths inch bolt three and a half inches long. Cut a broom handle to eighteen inches long and slip it to the middle in the hole at top of C and fasten with small nails. Shave the ends to fit three-quarter inch holes. Make the angle of A and C at D about square. Bore three-quarter inch holes through the handle pieces at the point where the broom handle will fit. drive the ends in and secure with small nails.

Mount the frame on the wheel. Use any small cultivator shoe or shovel. If the handles stand too high cut a little off the lower end of C and set the shoe higher—Farm and Fireside.

VALUE OF SWEET CLOVER.

Stockmen Awakening to Use of the Formerly Despised Plant.

In Farm and Fireside there appears an article about "Sweet Clover," an extract from which follows:

Since colonial days there has grown along our roadsides a legume classed as weed by farmers, weed commissions and even experiment station of flocks.

Until late years the only steadfast friend of sweet clover has been the beekeeper, whose neighbors have in many cases uttered imprecations against him, accusing him of scattering the seed with malicious intent.

This antagonistic attitude is undergoing a change, and the agricultural press now contains many articles by stock growers who are loud in their praises of this "new discovery," which promises to make their poor lands a profitable stock range for horses, cattle and sheep.

Protein is the most expensive constituent of farm feeds. Comparative analyses of sweet clover, alfalfa, red clover, timothy and cowpeas showed that only the alfalfa and cowpeas excelled sweet clover in percentage of protein, the alfalfa by 1 per cent and the cowpeas by 3 per cent. Considered from the standpoint of digestible nutrients, we find the following comparative values for the different feeds:

Per ton

Sweet clover hay 418.19
Alfalfa hay 39.16
Red clover hay 11.12
Timothy hay 9.50
Cowpeas hay 18.75
Shelled corn 29.16

Alfalfa Fine For Hogs.

To determine the value of alfalfa forage for hogs with and without grain the Oklahoma experiment station placed pigs averaging about seventy-five pounds each in weight on an alfalfa field in April. At the end of a hundred days the average daily gain was twenty six one hundredths pound per head when on alfalfa alone; on alfalfa and all the dry corn chop they would eat the gain was 1.28 pounds per head and day; on alfalfa and a half ration of corn chop the gain was seven-tenths of a pound.

Best Ways With Timothy.

To cure timothy cut it just as the bloom is falling. If the crop is not too heavy and rank cut it as soon as the dew is off, let it cure a few hours, rake into windrows and haul to the barn the same day. If crop is rank, cut it in the afternoon. It will wilt some during the night, and dew will cut hurt it. Next day's sun will dry it in a few hours, when it can be raked into windrows. When it is to the barn in the early afternoon—Farm Journal.

FOUR DAY MEETING

Grand Traverse Soldiers' and Sailors' Association
June 9 to 12.

Final arrangements have been made for the annual encampment of the Grand Traverse Soldiers' and Sailors' Association to be held in Traverse City commencing Tuesday, June 9, and lasting until Friday afternoon, June 12. It will be known as Camp Straub, in honor of Mayor John G. Straub of Traverse City. All the meetings will be on the fair grounds, the use of which has been kindly donated by the supervisors of Grand Traverse county. One big exhibition building will be used for sleeping quarters and another for dining room and audience room. Those who drive can find accommodation for their horses in the horse barn and cattle shed. All the buildings and grounds are lighted with electricity.

The big feature of the final day will be the sham battle between the Spanish War Veterans and the Naval Reserves. The last scene will take place directly in front of the grandstand. Over 2000 rounds of ammunition will be used.

Company M will have headquarters and entertain all Cuban and Philippine soldiers. The Naval Reserves will care for all sailors who have served under the Stars and Stripes.

The association covers 23 counties and it is expected that this will be the largest encampment ever held in the region.

THE COST OF CLEARING LAND

Varies Considerably and Depends Upon the Nature of the Soil.

State of Michigan Has 12,000,000 Acres of Logged-off Land—Kind of Machines in Use.

Within the next 25 years it is estimated that most of the remaining merchantable timber in Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin will be logged off. This means that in many counties there will be a change from lumbering to farming and that the problem of clearing economically the logged-off land will assume even greater importance. At the present time there are nearly 12,000,000 acres of such land in Michigan, approximately as much in Minnesota and something less than 11,000,000 in Wisconsin. The greater part of these millions of acres is not only utterly useless now, but, on account of the danger of fire, an actual menace.

Hitherto the development of these lands for agricultural purposes has been seriously retarded by the high cost of clearing. A recent investigation conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture reveals the fact that this cost runs from $20 to $90 an acre. Little logged-off land desirable for farming purposes can be had for less than $15 or $25 an acre and the total cost of cleared land varies, therefore, from $35 to $115. The average, the investigators found, was $65 an acre. This, when the expense of other necessary improvements is taken into consideration, is more than equally good farm land in other sections can be bought for. In view of these facts the proper disposition of other logged-off areas becomes an important problem.

In the first place, as a protection to the settler, the investigators recommend that in every tract sold by land companies there should be at least ten acres cleared and ready for the plough. This will enable the farmer to raise hay and other crops while putting the logged-off land into condition for the most economical removal of the stumps, for clearing can be done much more cheaply after the ground has been in pasture for several years.

Second growth, the investigators assert, must be regarded as a source of expense rather than income. In a few places it may be possible to dispose of it to charcoal and wood-extract companies, pulp mills or mining companies, but in general it does not pay to haul the wood more than four or five miles and in practice it is usually the fact that the second growth has no value except as firewood for the settler's personal use.

The brush should be cut close to the ground when in full leaf, heaped into compact piles and burned as soon after logging as possible. On account of the danger of the fire spreading, however, the local or state fire warden should be consulted before the actual burning is attempted.

After the brush and second growth has been removed it is considered best to put the land into pasture for several years. On hardwood land green stumps are much more difficult to remove than those which have been allowed to rot for six or seven years, and pine stumps are gradually worked out of the ground by the settling of the land and the heaving action of the frost. The practice of harrowing and sowing the land, either immediately after burning or in the spring, is therefore very general. Sprout growth, the great drawback to this system, must, however, be kept down rigorously, and this requires hard work. Dairy herds are now found useful in this respect.

When the time comes to turn the pasture into crop bearing land the farmer has the choice of four methods (1) explosives, (2) explosives used in connection with stump pullers, (3) stump pullers alone and (4) power machines. His choice will depend on the nature of soil and stumps, but it will not often be possible for him to ignore the use of explosives. On heavier soils they are particularly efficient. They do their work thoroughly and quickly, but they do not require a large force of men and the expenditure involved can be spread over as long a time as suits the farmer's convenience. The expense can also be materially lessened by co-operative purchases of wholesale lots. Moreover, dynamite containing only 20 to 30 per cent. nitroglycerine is often fully as effective as the more expensive kinds with higher percentages of nitroglycerine frequently considered necessary.

On lighter soils and with well-decayed stumps pulling machines are sometimes substituted satisfactorily for explosives. The tripod type, which lifts the stump vertically, is more powerful but also more troublesome than the capstan, which pulls from the side. The capstan can pull an acre or more of stumps without being reset, but at the same time it may be successfully resisted by a stump that would not offer the least trouble to a tripod, which, however, must be reset for every stump it pulls. On large tracts of land a power machine with an efficient crew may do the best work of all, but such an outfit can only be employed economically on large operations.

Naturally, the cost of the work varies greatly. The Department investigators found, indeed, that it could be as low as $6 and as high as $100 an acre. The quantity of second growth and logs, the kind of stumps and the time that has lapsed since logging, the size and number of stumps per acre and the character of the soil are all determining factors. Hardwood, which when green is very expensive to remove, decays in time so that it offers little difficulty; on the other hand, white pine and Norway pine will not decay in 50 years. Again hardwood land is likely to contain many more stumps to the acre than white pine areas. On an average an acre may be expected to have about 45 white pine stumps, whereas 400 is not an unusual number for hardwood. Incidentally it is worth remembering that a circle with a radius of 117.8 feet contains an area of one acre. If the stumps in several such areas be counted the total number in any given tract may be estimated with reasonable accuracy.

Formation of Ice.

The cause assigned for the fact that water freezes only for a comparatively small space at the surface of rivers or ponds is thus explained. Scientists authoritatively declare that water is at its heaviest when it reaches 40 degrees F.—that is, 8 degrees above freezing point. On a frosty night, as each top layer of water falls to 40 degrees it sinks to the bottom; therefore the whole pond has to drop to 40 degrees before any of it can freeze. At length it is all cooled to this point, and then ice begins to form. But ice is a very bad conductor of heat, therefore it shuts off the freezing air from the body of warmer water underneath. The thicker it gets the more perfectly does it act as a greatcoat and that is why even the Arctic ocean never freezes beyond a few feet in thickness.

An Untouched Subject.

In L'Esprit des Français is an instance of the sharp, biting wit for which Alexis Dumas, the French epigrammatist, was famous.

A young author whose ability was by no means equal to his conceit was discussing at length upon the merits of his work.

"I am tired of writing of that of which the others write," he said. "I want to create an original work, something that no one has ever written about or ever will write about."

"From turned quickly to the speaker.

"Why not write your own eulogy?" he said.

Very Sweet Words.

"Are there any sweeter words in the English language," musingly inquired Professor Swigges, "than 'I love you'?"

"Well," crumily remarked the pessimistic humorist, "I understand that some authorities regard 'There's that money I owe you' as about the epitome of satisfactory sentences." — New York Globe.

Chinese Cabbage Seed.

Ripe seed is termed by the Chinese trade "mildness seed." While Chinese farmers style it "outage oil seed." As grown in Loowah district, near Shinghai, it yields 200 cabbages equal to 1,000 pounds an acre where the soil is favorable.

Social Scale.

"Pis" said Freddy—"what is a social scale?"

"Generally speaking," replied Pis, "it's a place where they wash money."

frequently sorted out; involving heavy loss of beans as well as the cost of the sorting. Diseased beans used for seed usually give a poor stand and result in the production of a badly diseased crop.

It has been conclusively demonstrated that anthracnose can be avoided by a careful system of seed selection. Save seed from perfectly healthy pods selected with great care for entire absence of spotting. Carefully keep them away from diseased pods, shell by hand to avoid infection and plant on clean land. Pull and burn any plants showing disease. By planting the seed thus secured enough disease-free seed can be secured to plant the whole crop.

In the absence of such disease-free seed (1) secure for planting seed having the least possible amount of disease as shown by actual examination; (2) all seed should be hand picked and no seed showing the slightest discoloration should be planted; (3) practice crop rotation—never plant beans on land where the same crop grew the previous season; (4) do not cultivate or walk through the bean field or pick beans while wet with dew or rain. If the disease is present it is then easily spread from one part of the field to another.

The bean blight is more difficult to control than anthracnose, but the same methods will give the best results at present available.

Hygiene for the Aged.

A British scientist lays down a regimen of hygiene for the treatment of the aged. It is pointed out that the aged require less food of all kinds because they utilize less. Overfeeding, or, rather, a normal adult's ration, overtaxes their digestive powers and floods the blood with effluvia products which the kidneys and other excretories cannot handle. Drinking water should be encouraged and baths which should be taken regularly, should be neither hot nor cold, of short duration and preferably in the evening, when they conduce to a good night's sleep. Fresh air and exercise are indispensable. Clothing should be light, warm, loose and of woolen material. The feet should be well protected.

Pink Pearls For Polly

Or, What Became of Her Birthday Gift

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"It is to be my birthday present," bubbled Polly Newton as she passed with young Dr. Mills before the jeweler's window. "Father allowed me to select what I wanted, and I chose the pearls. 'Aren't they lovely?'" Frank Mills looked long and earnestly at the string of delicate pink pearls perfectly matched, lying on a bed of white velvet. He was not a judge of gems, but it happened that these particular pearls were famous, and he had heard their value discussed at his club where it was said they were worth $10,000.

To a physician whose heart was wrenched with the bitter needs of the suffering poor in a great city it was a sinful price to pay for jewels.

"I shall wear them at my birthday party," went on Polly as they turned away from the window. "You are coming, Dr. Frank?"

"With pleasure, unless something happens. I may have a call. You know, Miss Newton, that my evenings are at the disposal of my poor people. Somebody has to look out for them."

"Oh, yes," said Polly, vaguely conscious that a filmy gray veil had dropped over the rosy happiness of the moment. "I suppose Dr. Mills takes care of them occasionally."

"Dr. Rudd is very busy just now and I try not to call on him to help me out with these evening cases."

"PLEASE GIVE THOSE TO YOUR POOR PEOPLE."

"Ah, but you are busy, too," she cried impulsively. "Father says you are the hardest worked man in New York, and yet you sacrifice your precious evenings to them."

"It is not such a sacrifice as you think. They need my help." He smiled down at her.

"I suppose they do," murmured Polly in a troubled tone.

When Dr. Mills left her at the door of the great house where she lived Polly had a sudden presentiment that something would happen to keep Dr. Frank away from her birthday party. Some dark eyed foreign born baby would be attacked by croup, and away Dr. Frank would go and forget all about her! She could not down the fear that clung at her heart, the terror that perhaps he did not care for her at all and that never could she swerve him from his allegiance to his poor people.

Of course Polly was in love with Dr. Frank or she would never have cared a jot whether he came to her party or not, and she had surmised in a vague, delicious way that the earnest young physician had lost his heart to her.

There had been nothing said, no question asked or answered, no promise given, but there was a sweet, unspoken understanding between them. Benjamin Newton liked the young doctor and, poor though he was, would have sanctioned the match.

Yet the specter of the poor people came between them, and Polly felt instinctively that Dr. Frank would always be loyal to his patients in the profession he had chosen, and pretty spoiled Polly hated to think that she would not be omnipotent in her husband's esteem.

Two days later came Polly's birthday and with it the wonderful string of pink pearls. During the day there arrived many other gifts, among them a huge box of flowers from Dr. Mills. These Polly placed in a tall cut-glass vase in her own room.

"I do hope he will come," flattered Polly's heart, as she dressed for the occasion.

But Dr. Frank did not come. At through the gray evening Polly watched the door for a glimpse of his line head and broad shoulders above the crowd of dancers, but hours passed, and still he did not come. Somebody murmured of a great fire down on the east side, and Polly guessed at once that her doctor was down there.

The thought did not bring any warmth of feeling just then. She felt angry with him and jealous of his poor people, who always stood between them.

Polly's bright spirits sagged. She was looking lovely in her simple white satin gown, with the string of pink pearls about her throat and one of Frank's pink roses tucked in her dark hair.

Other suitors might whisper how charming she appeared; other girls might regard her with envy; even her parents might tell her that never had she looked so nice. Polly yearned for the quick light of appreciation in Dr. Frank's eyes.

When the guests had all departed and Polly had kissed her father and mother and assured them that she had had the loveliest time of her life she was left alone in the great drawing room.

On every side gold framed mirrors repeated the reflection of her charming person until she appeared to be the center of a bevy of lovely girls gowned in white satin and wearing pink pearls.

"But he didn't come," whispered Polly to herself with quivering lips. "He didn't care enough. He would rather go to his poor people. I don't believe he cares for pink pearls or any other kind of jewels. He seems to like just people. I suppose he would like me just as well if I wore pink glass beads."

It was a very thoughtful Polly that lay awake with wide eyes the next morning. She wondered what was the need of these poor people that they had such a hold upon Frank Mills.

They were confessedly poor, but her father could help them. He gave thousands to help the poor. Just then there came half forgotten words to Polly's recollection:

"I was sick and in prison, and ye comforted me not."

Polly sat up in bed.

"It is the personal touch that helps almost as much as the money. If we don't visit them how can we know their needs? Dr. Frank knows their sufferings, and it is breaking his heart because he cannot help them. He does the best he can. But what am I doing?"

With this question Polly Newton hopped out of bed and dressed in a whirl of enthusiasm.

After breakfast she found her father alone in his study.

"Father, dear, I just love the pink pearls, and I know I chose them for my birthday, but do you care if I sell them and do something else with the money?"

Dr. Newton looked at her blushing downcast face, on which was his first troubled expression, and his indulgent heart took fire at once.

"What is it, Polly, girl? Keep your pearls and let me write a check for whatever you want." He dipped a pen in the ink.

Polly's fingers covered his. "No, father, it's something I want to do with the pink pearls. I want to sacrifice them for something. You don't care?"

"Not in the least, darling. I only want you to be happy."

"I am so grateful, father, dear," and Polly kissed him soberly and went away.

That afternoon found her at Dr. Mills' shabby office. He came radiantly to meet her, looking tired about the eyes and drawn about the mouth, but glad—glad to see her.

Polly sat down in a worn old chair and looked contentedly around at the book lined walls and the desk littered with papers, index files, boxes and bottles.

"It smells awfully druggy," she wrinkled her pretty nose at him; then, as if suddenly recollecting her errand, Polly drew out a leather case and laid it on the cluttered desk.

"Please give those to your poor people," she said gravely.

"Miss Newton—Polly—I can't! It is sweet of you, but they are yours and—Polly's hand went out in an appealing gesture.

"Ah, please, please, Dr. Frank! I never knew before, and I've been thinking a lot about it. Won't you show me how to feel just as you do toward them? I am missing something out of life, something more than pearls."

A glad light came into the doctor's eyes. His first impulse was to give the jewels back to her, for he knew their great value, and he knew that they gave Polly happiness, and he loved her. His second impulse was to drop the case into the inner pocket of his coat.

"I cannot thank you for this generous gift, Polly," he said gravely, "but will it make you happy to know that the pearls will help to build a vacation home for little children and their mothers? Do you realize that your gift will save hundreds of lives and make others happy and influence still others for lasting good?"

"Do you know that hundreds of mothers and sickly children, who have never seen the real country, never tasted the joys of country life and freedom from the sickening city streets, will be happy and bless you for your gift?" His voice broke suddenly.

Polly was crying softly. "I want you to tell me all about it," she quavered presently.

"I will," said Dr. Frank. And he did. But first he told her an old story, and he added that the pink pearls had been a barrier between them.

"Now I am on the other side of the barrier with you and your poor people," murmured Polly contentedly. "Our poor people, dear," he corrected.

Both Well and favorably Known in This City—
Will Live at 215 Clinton Street.

The wedding of Miss Catherine Caroline Deibel, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Deibel of Saginaw, and Mason Harry Rose of this city took place at the First Presbyterian Church, Saginaw, Tuesday evening, June 2, at 7:30 o'clock. The ceremony was beautiful in its simplicity and one of the most interesting social functions of the season. Rev. Harry Rogers Stark, D. D., pastor of the church, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by an assemblage of about 350 guests.

A half hour organ recital preceded the service. Promptly at 7:30, as the march from Lohengrin was heard, the bridal party made its way to the altar, where the groom and his best man, Eversz Nordrum, and the officiating clergyman awaited them. The bridesmaids and groomsmen then entered and were followed by the bride and her maid of honor, meeting the groom before the altar. The other members of the party came forward, forming a semi-circle, the ladies passing to the left and the gentlemen to the right. The Presbyterian ring service was used in full.

The bride wore a gown of ivory white crepe de chine trimmed with hand-drawn Venice lace and a simple waist line of pearls. Her veil was of white tulle that was worn by her mother twenty-six years ago. She carried a bouquet of white roses and sweet peas. The maid of honor and the bridesmaids were gowned in crepe de chine of various shades.

The church altar was prettily decorated with palms, amylax and spring flowers in a color scheme of green and white. The home of the bride, where a reception for 100 relatives and friends was held at the conclusion of the ceremony, was decorated similarly.

The bride has resided in Saginaw practically all her life. She is a graduate of the Arthur Hill high school, class of 1907, where she won prominence in the oratorical field, having been the only young woman who ever took first place in the state oratorical, winning honors for Arthur Hill. She is also a graduate of the Michigan state normal college. After her graduation she engaged in educational work, having taught in the Charlevoix high school and the Saginaw public schools.

The groom is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Rose of this city. He is a graduate of the high school, class of 1907, and is also an alumnus of the University of Michigan, class of 1911. He is one of Charlevoix's well-known and progressive young men and holds a responsible position in the post office.

Mr. and Mrs. Rose have the best wishes of their many Charlevoix friends. They took a short trip to Detroit before returning to their home in this city.

TEN INNING GAME

Boys City Wins Over Home Team in Overtime Battle by Score of 7 to 6.

The Charlevoix independent baseball club played on the north side grounds Sunday with a team from Boys City. Snifford and Bradley were the battery for the visitors. Joe Powers started in the box for the local team and when he retired from the game Charlevoix had lead of three runs, the score being 6 to 3.

Jack Adams then went in the box and the visitors made three runs off him in one inning and tied the score. Tenney—who had been playing a good game at third base—finished in the box for the home team and the visitors made one run in the tenth inning and thus won by 7 to 6.

The locals appeared in their new uniforms of gray and red. The lineup has been changed considerably, but the home team is weak in the outfield. Blue played well for Boys City and Hull for Charlevoix.

Putting Up Signs.

West Michigan pike signs are being posted along the 100-mile stretch of highway between the southern border of the state and the Straits of Mackinaw. They are of metal and therefore permanent. One thousand signs will be placed along the route, marking every turn, so no autoist will have trouble making the trip.

HAPPILY WED

Babcock-Matthews Wedding Ceremony Took Place at G. A. R. Hall.

J. E. Matthews of Bellaire and Mrs. M. A. Babcock, formerly of this city, were united in marriage at Bellaire Saturday noon by the pastor of the M. E. church.

The ceremony took place at high noon in the G. A. R. hall in the presence of the members of the G. A. R. and the W. R. C., of which both bride and groom are members. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served by the members of the two orders and congratulations extended to the newly weds.

The groom has been a resident of Bellaire for a number of years and formerly conducted a blacksmith shop. He is well known in that vicinity and has a host of friends. The bride is well known in this city, having lived here for many years. "Auntie" Babcock has a large circle of friends who extend her their best wishes in the short journey of life before them.

Mr. and Mrs. Matthews came to Charlevoix on the evening train and visited among friends over Sunday, leaving Monday on a two weeks visit at Middleville, Michigan.

AFFIRMED DECISION

Decision of Lower Court Held Good by Supreme Court in Damage Suit.

The supreme court last week affirmed the decision of the lower court for $1089 damages in the case of Matthew Duffey vs. Dr. John H. Charters of Boyne City. The case dates back to nearly four years ago, when Mr. Duffey was working on a sewer which caused in, breaking his collar bone. Dr. Charters was called in attendance to set the broken bones, which, Duffey claims, were never properly set, but were overlapped.

He brought a suit for damages against the doctor with the above results.

FAKE HOG CHOLERA CURE

Concern Making a Well Organized Campaign to Delude Farmers.

Claim Remedy is Recommended and Approved by United States Government.

Evidence of what appears to be a well-organized campaign to delude farmers throughout the country into buying an alleged cure for hog cholera under the impression that it has been investigated and approved by the United States government has reached the Department of Agriculture. Articles praising this medicine, Benetol by name, are being sent out widespread to newspapers. These articles are so worded that it appears as if the Department of Agriculture had received reports from the State of Minnesota showing that the medicine has proved most beneficial. As a matter of fact, the one report received by the department was an unofficial and unsolicited statement sent presumably from the promoters themselves. The department attaches no importance whatsoever to this statement. It has no reason to believe in the efficiency of any proprietary cure for hog cholera and does not recommend any. Under certain conditions it urges farmers to protect their stock with anti-hog cholera serum, but that is all.

In connection with this attempt it may be said that the medicine which is now put forward as good for hogs was advertised some time ago as a means of killing tuberculosis, typhoid and cancer germs, according to an article published in the Journal of the American Medical Association. At that time it was asserted that the army was interested in it. As a matter of fact, the army was no more interested then than the Department of Agriculture is now.

In view of the evidence that the attempt to create this false impression is persistent and widespread, all hog owners are warned to communicate with the United States authorities before accepting as true any statement that the government recommends any treatment other than the serum already mentioned.

ORCHARDS ARE BEING RUINED

Tent Caterpillars by the Millions All Over Charlevoix County.

If Not Destroyed at Once Orchards will be Ruined —Take Action at Once.

Something must be done at once to rid this section of the tent caterpillar. During the spring months some work was done by the school children in the way of gathering and destroying the egg masses of the caterpillars, but, despite this, the woods are full of them and those orchards which have not been carefully attended to are suffering badly from the pest.

Last week the writer took a trip through the territory lying south of town and found nearly every orchard packed more or less affected by the destructive pest. In some instances every tree in the orchard had from one to a dozen tents and were literally alive with the caterpillars. In one orchard eleven trees in a row were eaten bare of all foliage. Some trees were nothing but a mass of tents and the ground covered for some distance with the caterpillars.

The orchards are one of this region's most valuable resources and the people cannot afford to lose them. They must be taken care of at once, for within a week or so every tree in the orchard will be stripped of its foliage and destroyed. Farmers and fruit growers should give this matter their immediate attention. Take a day off from the regular farm work and make war on the caterpillars. Destroy them in one way or another or the orchard you have been striving to make one of the paying crops will be ruined. Do not put it off. The loss of a day's work in your fields will not be anywhere near as much a loss to you as will be the loss of your orchard. Get busy now spray, burn them up with torches, destroy them.

One of the great questions, however, is what is the quickest and most economical way of ridding the country of the tent caterpillar and destroying the insect so completely that they will not reappear in the seasons to come. It has been urged that the wild cherry trees along the roadsides and on cut-over lands must be cut down and burned in the hopes of starving the caterpillars to death. But, in the first place, rid your orchards of them and then make an effort to effectually rid the country of them.

Do something to destroy them—and do it at once.

Louie See Married.

Word received from Portland, Oregon, last week by Charles E. See stated that his son, Louie E., who left for that place last fall, was married Friday at Vancouver to Miss Mabel Moline of Chicago. The young couple will make their home at Portland, where Mr. See has a good position. They have the best wishes of their many Charlevoix friends.

AGRICULTURE IN MICHIGAN SCHOOLS

About Forty Schools in State Will Offer
Regular Courses Next Year.

Two Hundred to Graduate from M.A.C. This Year—Nearly All from Michigan.

When the school year opens next September about forty high schools of the State of Michigan will be offering regular courses in agriculture, taught by specially trained graduates of agricultural colleges. This number includes ten new schools, introducing the work for the first time. All of these schools are either giving four year courses or are developing toward that standard. The work is not the result of state bonuses of any kind, but has been promoted by the Agricultural College solely through the interest of school superintendents, farmers and others interested in the extension of agricultural knowledge. The permanence of the place which agriculture now occupies as a high school subject is shown by the fact that the most important colleges of the state accept it for entrance credits. The importance of this movement can be appreciated from the fact that this high school instruction is reaching directly about 1200 young men and through them more than 1000 farms.

When diplomas are given out to the 200 members of the senior class on June 2nd the Michigan Agricultural College will have graduated the largest class since it was founded in 1887. The number—which is four times as great as the class graduated ten years ago—is made up of 77 graduates in agriculture, 59 in engineering, 12 in forestry, 59 in home economics and 29 in veterinary medicine. Nearly all these young men and women are from Michigan, although thirteen other states and two foreign countries are represented.

During the present season over one hundred boys and girls, clubs organized by the Michigan Agricultural College, are in active working order. Through these clubs the members of the extension staff of the college come in contact with approximately 3500 young people and assist them with their projects, such as growing corn, potatoes, strawberries, tomatoes and other vegetables, raising poultry and canning fruits. Training in organization, public reading and speaking is also offered by this plan, which is proving a great influence in developing good farmers, good homemakers, good neighbors and citizens.

Mr. Farmer:

I have been telling you right along that I could save you money on your purchases of all farm implements. During the past week or so, I have proven this to many who were in the market. They bought of me when they found out how low my prices were. You will do the same after we talk the matter over. Let me save you money, too, on your farm implements, the same as I have for the other fellows.

CLOSES ITS DOORS

Palace Clothing House of This City Goes Into Voluntary Bankruptcy.

Street rumors that the Palace Clothing House was in a bad state of affairs financially and would soon close were confirmed Saturday night, when its doors were closed and the stock and furnishings placed into the hands of Charles E. See as trustee.

Meyer M. Cohen, who has been at the helm since the store started, said Tuesday that during the first two years the business was good, but since there has been a gradual falling off until it was impossible to continue further.

Mr. See, as trustee, states that the stock will inventory practically enough to cover all indebtedness and that the goods will be sold as soon as possible to satisfy the creditors.

SEVEN MILL TAX

Annual Budget Presented and Passed by the Common Council Monday Evening.

The promise of reduced taxes for the coming year made by the present administration last spring was confirmed when the annual budget, prepared by City Attorney Lisle Shanahan, was presented to the council by the finance committee Monday evening, calling for a seven mill tax, the lowest in many years.

The total of the seven mills upon the assessed valuation of Charlevoix property amounts to $16,554.61 and is divided among the different funds as follows:

General sewer fund—$300.00.
Bridge fund—$800.00.
Police fund—$1000.00.
Cemetery fund—$400.00.
Fire fund—$750.00.
Alice street paving fund, L. I. S. F., $52.34.
Belvedere avenue paving fund, L. I. S. F., $217.35.
Michigan and Dixon avenues sewer fund, L. I. S. F., $100.00.
Interest and sinking fund—$1729.89.

PROSPECTS FOR BUMPER CROP

Fruit Harvest Will Commence Within the Next Four Weeks.

Berries of All Kind in Splendid Shape.—Means Much to This Community.

Charlevoix county fruit growers will begin their harvest within the next four weeks with a record crop of strawberries, and with other fruits coming in quick succession.

Reports gathered from many fruit growers during the last few days tributary to Charlevoix are to the effect that strawberry crop will be one of the largest in the history of the county and the quality will be the finest. Charlevoix township fruit growers state that the first berries will be ripened in four weeks at the farthest, and that more than usual care in cultivation has been given.

Following these will come the other berries, and the early cherries. The early frosts in May did absolutely no damage to any of these fruits, and now only needs plenty of moisture during the last stages of ripening to insure a wonderful crop.

Raspberry fields have been trimmed and cultivated. The vines are well fruited, as are also the black caps and blackberries.

The fruit crops means something to the business men of Charlevoix and to entire community. Every year for some time an increased acreage has been set out. In some sections as high as from 10 to 40 acres of young apple, plum and cherry trees have been planted. A bumper crop means that money will be put into circulation and will stay here, enriching those who have gone into fruit culture intelligently and made it a business. This approaching crop also means improvement on the farm and better prices for farm property. It means a great deal besides, and it now looks as though all this prosperity could not be stopped.

Do you like pleasant dreams? If so be sure to attend the "Dream of Fairyland" given by the pupils of St. Mary's school at the Charlevoix theatre June 22nd.

BREEZY POINT A MODERN FARM

Fine Buildings Have Been Erected and Every Convenience Installed.

Some of the Best Bred Holstein Cattle in the State are to be Found There.

One of the most modern and up-to-date farms it has been our pleasure to visit for some time is the Breezy Point Farm across the ferry at Ironton owned by the Stewarts of Chicago and managed by Charles Hyres.

The farm is one of the first cleared in that section and was formerly known as the "Bedwin place." Modern buildings have been erected and one of the most comfortable farmhouses you will find in Northern Michigan.

One of the theories under which this farm is conducted is that there should be a place for everything, and cleanliness is the watchword. Commencing at the house you will find steam heat, cold and hot water and plenty of large, airy rooms in which to do the work. The milk house is one of the best equipped in the state. Built of stone, cement floor, piped with water from a large storage tank located in the basement of the house, the taking care of the milk from the large dairy herd is made a pleasure. In one corner of the house is a large cooling room in which the milk, cream and butter is kept.

The barn is an ideal one in every respect. The horses and cattle are kept in the basement. In the section where the cows are kept will be found modern iron stanchions, cement floors and feeding troughs. In fact, everything has been installed a long modern lines. These stables are flushed with water, and thoroughly cleaned every day, as is also the horse stables.

The dairy herd are full blood, registered Holsteins, some fifteen in number. Among the cows some of the best in the state are to be found. When milking time comes the cows are thoroughly cleaned upon entering the stable. An accurate record of weight and the amount of milk from each cow is kept and the per centage of butter fat produced by each can be told at any time.

The belief that it pays better to keep well-bred stock also applies to the drove of swine, which are blooded Berkshires. Pigs a few weeks old from this drove sell as high as from $10 to $20 each.

Buildings have also been erected for the housing of sheep, hogs and chickens, as well as the farm implements. Practically every building is piped with water and modern feeding places installed.

Breezy Point Farm is a credit to the section in which it is located. Farming along scientific lines is followed and during the coming fall a number of acres of alfalfa will be planted.

Charlevoix county needs more farms of this character and it is our belief that Breezy Point Farm under the able management of Mr. Hyres will be a paying investment for its owners.

BLOWS OFF HANO

Two Little Indian Lads and a Loaded Shotgun in Bad Mix-Up Sunday.

Two little Indian lads, one five and the other seven years of age, and a loaded shotgun caused considerable excitement on the Norwood road at the edge of town Sunday.

Allard Francis, stepson of Joe Oliver, and another boy were at play and made their way into a shanty in which some goods had been stored. They found a shotgun and the older boy told the other to hold his hand over the end of the barrels. In some manner the hammers were raised and the gun exploded, blowing off the right hand of young Francis below the wrist.

Medical assistance was summoned and the arm was amputated just above the wrist. Monday the little fellow was playing around the yard, not seeming to notice the loss of the hand.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh, being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer the "Hundred Dollar" reward for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

WATER DISINFECTION.

Hypochlorite Method Reduces Typhoid Death Rate.

In the eight cities where it has been given a thorough trial for the past eleven years the hypochlorite treatment of water disinfection has come to stay, says the Engineering News. In the opinion of C. A. Jennings, consulting engineer of the Chicago Union stockyards, there is now a total of about 600 cities that have adopted the hypochlorite treatment.

The eight cities involved in the test are as follows: Baltimore, Cleveland, O.; Des Moines, Ia.; Erie, Pa.; Evansville, Ind.; Jersey City, N. J.; Kansas City, Kan.; Omaha, Neb.

The population of the eight cities totals about 2,633,000. The average typhoid death rate for all the cities was 30.2 per 100,000 before and 14.4 after the use of hypochlorite, a reduction of 52.3 deaths per 100,000, or 51 per cent.

Of the eight cities considered six had higher typhoid rates in 1913 than in 1912, but Mr. Jennings remarks that 1913 has been called a "typhoid year" and that doubtless the number of typhoid deaths would have been much larger that year had it not been for the use of hypochlorite.

DECEPTION A GRAVE OFFENSE

Exaggeration a Blood Relative to Falsehood.

EXPERIENCE OF CONSUMERS.

In the Art of Deception the Mail Order Houses Excel the World—Where Is the Doubting Thomas Who Does Not Remember the "Sight Unseen" Trades of Boyhood Days?

[Copyrighted, 1914, by Thomas J. Sullivan.] Of all the evil spirits abroad in the land deception is the most dangerous. It is the first and worst of all frauds.

Exaggeration is a blood relative to falsehood and nearly as blamable. Some men and some business concerns can never state an ordinary fact in ordinary terms. All their geese are swans till you see them.

There is no strength in exaggeration. Even the truth is weakened by being expressed too strongly.

A Gaping Monster.

Man kind in the gross is a gaping monster that loves to be deceived and has seldom been disappointed. They say that liars only may be cozened twice, but how about the mail order buyers? How often are they deceived by the large catalogue houses?

In the art of deception the great mail order houses excel the world. In their greed for gain and rush to victimize the poor and unsuspecting they paint their pictures of alleged bargains too alluringly. They lull confidence in the mind of the buyer, only later to fill his heart with doubt and disgust.

Who does not remember the "sight unseen" trades of "swaps" of boyhood days? One of the parties in the transaction usually got the worst of it, didn't he? And as a rule it wasn't the one who proposed the deal, was it? There is a lot of the same sort of "sight unseen" trading going on today, only nowadays it is called mail-ordering.

Catalogues Look Inviting.
The illustrations in the catalogues of the retail mail order houses look inviting. The reading matter sounds nice, and sometimes the deal turns out all right.

But, even supposing it does, where is the buyer any better off than if he bought from the home merchant? Take any article you choose from the long list of things sold by mail and you will find upon investigation that you can buy it just as cheaply and just as well at home. The expense of selling it by mail is just as great as the expense of selling it over the counter.

Your best merchants have real prices, clerk hire, etc., to pay, and the mail order houses have the same expenses, only rent and taxes are higher in the large cities than in the country town. And, in addition, they have to maintain a small army of bookkeepers, stenographers, shipping clerks and other employees, besides the immense cost of advertising.

How many of the rural consumers know that advertising appearing in what are known as mail order advertising mediums costs from $42 to $85 an inch in single columns? It is true nevertheless. Where does the enormous profit come from out of which these enormous bills are paid? Out of the pockets of the consumers.

Would Welcome Such Bargains.

The city people would go wild with joy if these mail order houses actually had values with style and quality. They would not need to leave their own large cities to sell at the prices they quote, as the city people would sweep down upon their bargains like hungry lion hawks on green pastures. But with style and value lacking they do not draw show their goods in the city where the prospective customers would have the opportunity of comparison, but by a clumsy worded and exaggerated description they make the city people believe that they are getting the goods at a price which is well below the market value.

price, and leaving no opportunity for comparison before buying, many people naturally are duped.

Everybody knows the picture of a five dollar suit of clothes looks as good as the picture of a twenty dollar suit. The description reads well. The suit seems to be what you want.

Cash With the Order.

You send your good money because the mail order house will not accept an order where the money does not accompany it. Then the suit arrives. It was to be all wool, but it is not. It is fully a size too large and several years out of date, and, besides, it has the style and general appearance of the prison made garment.

If Mr. Mail Order Man were right there you would not accept the goods, but he is far away, selling suits, no doubt, to some other unsuspecting sons of man.

Next time you are attracted by an ad. of some mail order "bargain" just slip it out and take it to your local dealer and see if he will not duplicate it. That's only neighborly and fair and gives your merchant a chance to make good his statement that his prices are the lowest and his goods the best.

Said of John Hay.

He lived his own life with patience, charity, fair-mindedness, humor, modesty and indefatigable industry. A more conscientious man never lived. To him as to the sternest Puritans the line which divides right and wrong was narrow as a hair, as high as heaven, as eternal as the stars. He drew it for himself, but never hesitated upon drawing it for others. He was an individual conscience, not one for the regulation of the human race.—Joseph Bucklin Bishop.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

BY
KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep home for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochran, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole who is uneducated. Mark kisses her.

CHAPTER VII. Cephas Speaks.

IT was June and the countryside was so beautiful it seemed as if no one could be unhappy, however great the cause. That was what Waitstill Baxter thought as she sat down on the millstone step for a word with the old John, her best and most understanding friend in all the village.

"I've come to do my mending here with you," she said brightly, as she took out her well-filled basket and threaded her needle. "Isn't it a wonderful morning? Nobody could look the world in the face and do a wrong thing on such a day, could they, Uncle Bart?"

The meadows were a waving mass of golden buttercups; the shallow water at the river's edge just below the shop was blue with spikes of arrow-weed; a bunch of fragrant water lilies, gathered from the mill pond's upper levels, lay beside Waitstill's mending basket, and every foot of roadside and field within sight was swaying with long stemmed, white and gold daisies. The June grass, the friendly, humble, companionable grass, that no one ever praises as they do the flowers, was a rich emerald green, a velvet carpet fit for the feet of the angels themselves. And the elms and maples! Was there ever such a year for richness of foliage? And the sky, was it ever so blue or so clear, so far away, or so completely like heaven, as you looked at its reflection in the glassy surface of the river?

"Yes, it's a pretty good day," allowed Uncle Bart judiciously as he took a sip at his T-square. "I don't know's I should want to start out and try to beat it! The Lord can make as good many kinds of weather in the course of a year, but when he puts his mind on to it an' kind o' gives himself a free hand he can turn out a June mornin' that must make the devil sick to his stomach with envy! All the same, Waitstill, my vow ain't beavin' herself any better'n usual. She's been ramplin' since sun up. I've seen mother chasin' her out o' Mls' Day's garden patch twice already! It seems real good an' homey to see you settin' there sewin' while I'm workin' at the bench. Cephas is down to the store, so I s'pose your father's off somewhere?"

Perhaps the June grass was a little greener, the buttercups yellower, the foliage more lacy, the sky bluer, because Deacon Baxter had taken his luncheon in a padd under the wagon seat and departed on a puzzling journey to Moderation, his object being to press the collection of some accounts too long overdue. There was something tragic in the fact, Waitstill thought, that whenever her father left the village for a while day, life at once grew brighter, easier, more hopeful. One could breathe freely, speak one's heart out, believe in the future, when father was away.

The girls had harbored many delightful plans at early breakfast. As it was Saturday, Patty could catch little Rod Boynton if he came to the bridge on errands as usual, and if Ivory could spare him for an hour at noon they would take their luncheon and eat it together on the river bank as Patty had promised him. At the last moment, however, Deacon Baxter had turned around in the wagon and said: "Patience, you go down to the store and have a regular housecleanin' in the side room. Git Cephas to lift what you can't lift yourself, move everything in the place, sweep and dust it, scrub the floor, wash the window and make room for the new stuff that they'll bring up from Milltown 'bout noon. If you fater any time left over put new papers on the shelves out front and clean up and fix the stove whiner. Don't stand round gridin' with Cephas, and see he don't waste time that's paid for by me. Tell him he might clean up the tortoiseshell stains round the stove, black it and cover it up for the summer if he ain't too busy servin' customers."

"The whole day spoiled!" wailed Patty, slouching herself down in the kitchen. "Father's powers of invention lost anything I ever saw! That stockroom could have been cleaned any time this month, and it's too heavy work for me anyway! It spoils my hands grubbing about these nasty, sticky, spittin' boxes and barrels. Instead of being out of doors I've got to be shut up in that smelly, runny, to-laycoy, salt-busy, pepperminty place with Cephas Cole! He won't have a decent morning! I can tell you! I shall snarl his head off every time he speaks to me!"

"So I would!" Waitstill answered composedly. "Everything is so clear, it's his fault that I certainly would work off my temper on Cephas! Still, I can think of a way to make matters come out right. I've got a great basket of mending that must be done, and you remember there's a choir rehearsal for the new anthem this afternoon, but anyway I can help a little on the cleaning. Then you can make Rodman do a few of the old jobs; it will be a novelty to him. And Cephas will work his fingers to the bone for you, as you well know, if you treat him like a human being!"

"All right!" cried Patty, joyously, her mood changing in an instant. "There's Rod coming over the bridge now. Toss me myingham apron and the scrubbing brush and the pail and the tin of soap and the cleaning cloths. Let's see. The broom's down there, so I've got everything. If I wave a towel from the store back up luncheon for three. You come down, and bring your mending. Then when you see how I'm getting on we can consult. I'm going to take the 10 cents I've saved and spend it in raisins. I can get a good many if Cephas gives me wholesale price, with family discount subtracted from that. Cephas would treat me to candy in a minute, but if I let him I'd have to ask him to the picnic. Goodbye!" And the volatile creature darted down the hill singing "There'll be something in heaven for children to do" at the top of her healthy young lungs.

The waving signal a little later on showed that Rodman could go to the picnic, the fact being that he was having a holiday from 11 o'clock until 2, and Ivory was going to drive to the bridge at noon anyway, so his permission could then be asked.

Patty's mind might have been thought entirely on her ugly task as she swept and dusted and scrubbed that morning, but the reverse was true. Mark Wilson had gone away without saying goodbye to her. This was not surprising perhaps, as she was about as much sequestered in her hill-top prison as a Turkish beauty in a harem. Neither was it astonishing that Mark did not write to her. He never had written to her, and as her father always brought home the very infrequent letters that came to the family Mark knew that any sentimental correspondence would be fraught with danger. No, everything was probably just as it should be, and yet—well, Patty had expected during the last three weeks that something would happen to break up the monotony of her former existence. She hardly knew what it would be, but the kiss dropped so lightly on her cheek by Mark Wilson still burned in remembrance and made her sure that it would have a sequel or an explanation.

Mark's sister Ellen and Phil Perry were in the midst of some form of lovers' quarrel, and during its progress Phil was paying considerable attention to Patty at Sabbath school and prayer meeting, occasions, it must be confessed, only provocative of very indirect and long distance advances. Cephas Cole, to the amazement of every one but his (constitutionally) exasperated mother, was "tonguing down" the ell of the family mansion, mitigating the lively yellow and putting another fresh coat of paint on it, for no conceivable reason save that of pleasing the eye of a certain capricious, ungrateful young hussy, who would probably say, when her verdict was asked, that she didn't see any particular difference in it one way or another.

Trade was not especially brisk at the deacon's emporium this sunny June Saturday morning. Cephas may have possibly lost a customer or two by leaving the store vacant while he toiled and sweated for Miss Patience Baxter in the stockroom at the back overlooking the river, but no man alive could see his employer's lovely daughter tingling at a kiss of shingle-nails without trying to save her from a broken heart, although Cephas could have watched his mother move the house and barn without feeling the slightest anxiety in her behalf. If he could—over-get-the-shelf-of-the-blog—genuinely—clearing out of the way so that Patty's mind could be free to entertain his proposition; could over secure one precious moment of silence when she was not snatching and hanging, pushing and pulling things about, her head and ears out of sight under a shelf and an irritating air of absorption about her whole demeanor; if that moment of silence could ever, under Providence, be simultaneous with the absence of customers in the front shop, Cephas intended to offer himself to Patience Baxter that very morning.

Once, during a temporary lull in the rear, he started to meet his fate when Rodman Boynton followed him into the back room, and the boy was at once set to work by Patty, who was the most consummate slave driver in the state of Maine. After half an hour there was another heaven sent chance, when Rodman went up to Uncle Bart's shop with a message for Waitstill, but, just then, in came Bill Morrill, a boy of twelve, with a request for a gallon of molasses, and would Cephas lend him a stone jug over Sunday, for his mother had hers "soakin' out in soap suds 'cause 'twasn't smellin' just right." Bill's message given, he hurried up the road on another errand, promising to call for the molasses later.

The minutes dragged by, and again there was perfect quiet in the stockroom. As the door opened, Cephas, taking his last chance, went forward to meet Patty, who was turning down the skirt of her dress, taking the cloth off her head, smoothing her hair and tying on a clean white ruffled apron, in which she looked as pretty as a pink.

"Patty," stammered Cephas, seizing his golden opportunity, "Patty, keep your mind on me for a minute. I've put a new coat of paint on the ell just to please you. Won't you get married and settle down with me? I love you so I can't eat nor drink nor tend store nor nothin'!"

"Oh, I—I—couldn't. Cephas, thank you. I just couldn't—don't ask me!" cried Patty, as nervous as Cephas himself now that her first offer had really come. "I'm only seventeen, and I don't feel like settling down, Cephas, and father wouldn't think of letting me get married!"

"Don't play tricks on me, Patty, and keep showin' me off so no' givin' wrong reasons," pleaded Cephas. "What's the trouble with me? I know mother's temper's onstrin', but we never need scolding in the main house daytimes, and father'd alters stand up ag'in her if she didn't treat you right. I've got a good trade, and father has $100 o' my savin's that I can draw out tomorrow if you'll have me."

"I can't, Cephas. Don't move—stay where you are. No, don't come any nearer. I'm not fond of you that way, and, besides—and, besides!"

Her blush and her evident embarrassment gave Cephas a new fear. "You ain't promised a'ready, be you?" he asked anxiously, "when there ain't a feller anywhere around that's ever stepped foot over your father's door?"

"I haven't promised anything or anybody," Patty answered solemnly, gaining her self control by degrees, "but I won't deny that I'm considering—that's true!"

"Considerin' who?" asked Cephas, turning pale.

"Oh—several. If you must know the truth," and Patty's tone was cruel in its faintness.

"Several!" The word did not sound like ordinary work-day Riverboro English in Cephas' ears. He knew that "several" meant more than one, but he was too stunned to define the term properly in its present strange connection.

"Whoever 'tis wouldn't do any better by you, I would. I'd take a lickin' for you any day," Cephas exclaimed abruptly, after a long pause.

"That wouldn't make any difference, Cephas," said Patty firmly, moving toward the front door as if to end the interview. "If I don't love you any better liked, now, could I? Goodness gracious, what am I stepping in? Cephas, quick! Something has been running all over the floor. My feet are sticking to it."

"Good gosh! It's Mls' Morrill's molasses," cried Cephas, brought to his senses suddenly.

It was too true! The gallon measure, forgotten by Cephas, had been filled to the brim ten minutes before.

AN OBJECT LESSON FOR YOUR BOY

Every father wants his boy and girl to learn the lesson of habitual saving.

Do you know, fathers, that one of the best ways to teach your children to save regularly is to have a savings account yourselves?

Let that boy of yours bring your savings deposit to the bank as "regular as clockwork" and he will get the habit himself—he can't help it.

Incidentally a little nest egg will be a good thing for father, too.

HOME PATRON'S PHILOSOPHY

Founded on Facts and Should Be Lived
Up to by the American People—Not Religious Creed—People of North, South, East and West Can Unite For Good.

(Copyrighted, 1914, by Thomas J. Sullivan.)
Every failure is a step to success; every detection of what is false directs us to what is true; every trial exhausts some tempting form of error. Not only so, but scarcely any attempt is entirely a failure; scarcely any theory, the result of steady thought, is altogether false. No tempting form of error is without some latent charm derived from truth. With these thoughts in mind I have prepared what I call the consumer's creed.

A Gate to the City.
It is not a religious creed. If it were I would not be writing it; as I am afraid I might get my metaphors crossed. This is a business creed, something like the people of New England unconsciously adopted when Lord North undertook to tax them. Therefore they had always been accustomed to divide on points. It so happened, fortunately, that their opposition to Lord North was a point on which they were all united. It was a business point.

I have written a creed upon which the people of the north, south, east and west can all unite for their own good.
A good creed is a gate to the city which has golden foundations; a misleading creed may be a road to destruction, or if both misleading and alluring it may become what Shakespeare calls a primrose path to the eternal bonfire.
Perhaps my creed is nothing more than a set of principles which it would be well for every consumer to practice. Read them and then adopt them as your very own:

A Business Creed.
First.—I do not patronize the mail order system because it is selfish and greedy and for the reason that I buy at home, where my interests are.

Second.—If this community is good enough for my family and I live in it ought to be good enough for my family and I to buy our necessities in.

Third.—I will not take the word of the mail order house for its goods, as I want to see what I am buying, and I want to get what I pay for.

Fourth.—I do not patronize the mail order houses because they demand cash in advance, and when I am "broke" and sick and need supplies my home dealer is willing to "carry" me.

Fifth.—I patronize the home dealer because he stands back of his goods and in case of error is willing to rectify.

Sixth.—I patronize the home merchant because I believe a man ought to spend his money in the community in which he earns it.

Seventh.—I patronize the home merchant because I believe the man who sells what he produces and buys what he needs at home cannot be injured by deceptive catalogue pictures or alleged bargains.

Eighth.—I do not patronize the mail order houses because they frequently sell damaged and inferior goods, which it avails a man nothing to attempt to exchange, but the mail patronize the home merchant; the man who helps to pay the town, county and state tax will exchange my article I buy from him which is unsatisfactory.

Ninth.—I spend my money with my home merchant in preference to some mail order house in a distant city because the local merchants help to support the public schools where I send my children, the churches and the dependent poor in my vicinity.

Tenth.—I patronize the local merchant because he does not try to trick me into buying "cheap" goods, which because of their defectiveness prove to be expensive, and, further, because should he lack or bereavement come my way my local dealer would not only prove that he was a neighbor and a friend, but a man, with a man's heart and a man's inclination to do good; not a soulless corporation like the mail order system, whose only interest is greed and a further desire for gain.

"Do Unto Others."
Let all citizens follow this creed and they will be blessed with happy homes and a happy life. They will prosper financially and at the same time improve their moral standard. Do for your neighbor what you would like him to do for you; then you are doing your full duty to yourself and to all mankind.

Moral: Buy and sell at home.
Will Charlevoix be another Fourth pass by without celebrating?

SENATOR John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, who was the Democratic leader in the House before Underwood and who berated his colleagues in the Senate recently for quarrelling over the selection of reserve cities and other matters, declared the party was beginning to do just what it could be counted upon doing every time. "The poor, dear, old, foolish Democratic party," said the Democratic senator, "is going through the same game that she can be generally trusted to go through soon after she gets into power. That is the Democratic party, true enough," he continued; "that is its history. That is what led Speaker Tom Reed to say in 1894 and 1895: 'You can't last long enough because you are not accustomed to governing anybody or anything; you cannot govern the country because you cannot govern yourselves. You are incompetent.'"

ROAD Bee Day was observed in hundreds of places in Northern Michigan and a large amount of work accomplished. In the vicinity of Petoskey many miles of roads were repaired and graded. Charlevoix, as usual, paid no attention nor made any attempt to observe the day. About the only thing that will stir up the citizens of this town is city politics. If you are a careful observer you will find some activity among a certain class of our citizens at this time. But when it comes to getting together and working for something worth while, practically everyone is too busy or indifferent.

EVEN Democratic papers are admitting that business is bad and men are idle. The New York Times has made the statement that "in the middle states there are a million idle men with an average loss of $50,000 a day in wages." As an instance of this, in Chicago it has been proposed to appropriate a million dollars to relieve idle wage-earners.

A plow horse in Minnesota was stung to death by bees. It seems as though in the scheme of life the plow horse is always "stung."

CIRCUIT COURT DOINGS

Damages Rendered for Various Amounts in Several Damage Suits.

When we went to press last week the court was busy with the case of Beaubien vs. Baker. The case was brought against Baker by Beaubien to decide as to the ownership of a number of mowing machines. The jury decided in favor of Beaubien, rendering a verdict of $947.63 damages.

A judgment for $357.65 was rendered in the case of Thos. Page vs. the B. C. G. & A. Railroad.

In the case of Irwin vs. Grund a judgment of $28 was rendered.

Divorces were granted in the cases of Iry vs. Iry, Miles vs. Miles, and Gifford vs. Gifford.

"Clothes Pin" Club Spend Sunday Afternoon at Breezy Point Farm.

Twenty-eight members of the "Clothes Pin" club of this city, with well-filled lunch baskets, spent Sunday afternoon at the "Breezy Point Farm" as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hyers.

The well built and staunch launch Olympic was chartered, to convey the bunch of heavy and light "pins," and the trip was a most delightful one. The afternoon was spent in listening to some well rendered musical selections by the distinguished virtuosos of the party and watching the funny acrobatic stunts of some of the male members of the club.

The lunch tables were set in open air on the shady side of the house, and when the signal was given by the leader to commence eating, all "fell to" with more energy than usually displayed. The day will be one long remembered by those present.

Election of Officers.

Charlevoix Rebekah lodge met Tuesday evening, and the following officers were elected for the next six months:

Noble Grand, Jennie Black.
Vice Grand, Maggie Widdfield.
Recording Secretary, Myrtle Mitchell.

Treasurer, Mrs. Hinebaugh.
District Deputy President, Mrs. G. W. Priest.

Mrs. Clark was chosen as delegate to attend the assembly at Flint in October and Mrs. Cowan as alternate. Mrs. Hamilton holds over in the office of financial secretary for the next term.

The literary contest, which was under the leadership of the Noble Grand and Vice Grand, was decided in favor of Mrs. Burdick's side. The losing side will furnish a feed at the next regular meeting, June 23.

Didn't Mind Pneumonia.

African natives treat pneumonia with extraordinary levity. On a big trek in central Africa, writes a correspondent, one of the carrier "boys" fell ill, and a doctor who was of the party diagnosed it as double pneumonia. The Europeans did what they could for him — medicine, a flannel shirt, blankets and the like. "Before turning in that night," says the traveler, "I went across the camp with the doctor to see how he was getting on. He lay quietly, sleeping alongside a fire, clad only in his customary shirt and blanket, having rolled up both the shirt and blanket and given him to act as a pillow! Yet he pulled through all right!"

BANQUET FRIDAY NIGHT

Fifth Annual Event of Republicans to be Held at Elston Hotel in This City.

Preparations have been about completed for the fifth annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club, which will be held at the Elston Hotel Friday evening of this week.

It took considerable skirmishing to round up the list of speakers who were not booked for the date, but the committee are finally able to announce that the following well-known men will be on the program:

Lisle Shuman, toastmaster.

Invocation by Rev. Quinton Walker.

Short addresses will be made by A. J. Grosbeck of Detroit, probable candidate on the Republican ticket for governor; Grant Fellows, attorney general; Hon. Parin C. Gilbert of Traverse City; Frank D. Scott, state senator; Joseph E. Bayliss of Sault Ste. Marie, member of the legislature, and H. I. McMillan, Charlevoix county's member of the state legislature.

Music will be furnished by the Charlevoix quartette and other attractions not as yet complete will appear on the program.

The banquet will be held in the spacious dining room of the Elston Hotel and will commence at 8 o'clock.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SALADS YOU WILL LIKE

SALADS that appeal to the eye and palate are always popular. The appended recipes are for salads that quite these qualities, yet are also quite novel. For luncheon or supper these salads are delicious.

Cottage Cheese Salad.—Mix some cottage cheese with a tablespoonful of finely cut or grated onion, salt and pepper to taste and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley. Mix well. Line the bowl with lettuce, put the cheese in center and garnish with stuffed olives cut into rings and finely cut parsley. Pour over one-half cupful French dressing.

Nutritious Foods.

Cheese and Jelly Salad.—Wash and drain some crisp white lettuce and lay it in a very cold dish. Prepare some small balls of cream cheese mixed with a little cream and salt and make a little depression like a miniature well on top of each one. In the drop any rich red jelly. Put French dressing on the lettuce in generous quantities and on top arrange the little cream balls.

Egg Salad.—Cut hard boiled eggs in quarters and serve on crisp lettuce, with a hotted dressing. For the dressing mix in the following order: A tablespoonful of sugar, a tablespoonful of salad oil, a teaspoonful of dry mustard, the same of cornstarch. Add salt and pepper. Stir until smooth. Add three-quarters of a cup of salad oil, one-third of a cupful of tarragon vinegar, three tablespoonfuls of common vinegar and the beaten yolks of three eggs. Roll until thick, stirring all the time.

A Popular Salad.

Cooked Vegetable Salad.—Take a large pickled beet, cut it into slices and then into strips. Cut three cooked potatoes in a similar manner. Arrange these in layers in a salad bowl containing three tablespoonfuls of best salad oil and one large tablespoonful of vinegar mixed with a hard boiled egg yolk, a little mustard, salt and pepper. Wash and trim half a small bunch of white celery and cut it into fine shreds. Mix these with the other vegetables and place three to four filled anchovies on top, cut into small strips. Garnish the salad with a few sprigs of watercress and serve.

FOR THE INVALID.

How to Tempt the Failing Appetite of the Sick.

French cafe au lait is less likely to cause indigestion than coffee taken with cream. Clear coffee is, of course, the most digestible, but this seems bitter and unpleasant to many. To prepare the cafe au lait properly the coffee must be very clear. The milk, unskimmed, should be heated in a double boiler just to the boiling point, but not long enough for a film to form on the top. Then the hot milk and the clear hot coffee should be poured together in the coffee cup until the right strength is attained.

If coffee produces nervousness rice coffee may be substituted for it. To make this, brown a cupful of rice in the oven carefully without turning it and then grind it fine in a coffee mill. Put it in an earthenware jug and pour a quart of cold water over it. Let it stand an hour. Strain it, heat it and serve it with hot milk or with cream.

Cut yesterday's bread for breakfast toast. Sometimes make the slices not more than a quarter of an inch thick and dry them in the oven until they are golden brown. Serve warm with butter. This sort of toast is most digestible, but it must, of course, be thoroughly unsteamed. If soft toast is preferred cut the slices thicker and toast them quickly on both sides.

Coddled eggs are tempting. To prepare them thrust the eggs, washed clean, into boiling water, cover the dish and let it stand for from five to ten minutes. Then remove the eggs and serve with pepper, salt and butter in an egg cup. Poached eggs are always tempting, and so are scrambled eggs. Scrambled eggs can be surrounded with crisp slices of broiled bacon. The eggs should never be greasy, but should be scrambled in as little butter as possible. They can be daintily garnished with parsley.

A good way to make baked custard is to drop the yolk of an egg in a custard cup, add a big teaspoonful of sugar, two grathings of nutmeg and about five tablespoonfuls of unskimmed milk. Put the cup in hot water and bake slowly until the custard is firm—until a knife thrust in it comes out clean. Beat the white stiff, add a small tablespoonful of sugar, beat again and pile on top of the custard and garnish with a maraschino cherry in the center of the meringue. Cool and serve.

Put the white of an egg, a big tablespoonful of powdered gelatin, a cupful of water, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, three of lemon juice and a little stock cinnamon in a saucepan with the rind of half a lemon. Heat with an egg beater until the mixture reaches the boiling point and move to the side of the stove. Cover and leave for ten minutes. Strain through cheesecloth, add a third of a cupful of sherry and pour into two long stemmed glasses or small mugs to harden.

How to Serve Pineapple Frugally.
The next time you have a pineapple save the skin and core and you may produce two delicious desserts.

First scrub the pineapple in cold water, then dry it and prepare it as usual for one meal. Then cut the parings and core, cut up, into a saucepan, with one quart of cold water. Simmer gently until there is one pint and about a gill over, strain through cheesecloth and permit it to cool. Soak for ten minutes two heaping dessertspoonfuls of sago, drain and put it into a double boiler with the pineapple water and strained juice of one lemon, one gill of granulated sugar and a pinch of salt and cook this until it looks clear, which will be in about twelve minutes after it really boils. Remove from fire. If any bits of pineapple were left over put them in this. Stir well, then pour it into a glass dish. Serve ice cold with whipped or plain cream sweetened to taste.

Lady fingers or any light cake in an acceptable accompaniment.

The young members of the local Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. and friends to the number of about thirty-five chartered the steamer Beaver last Saturday and spent the day on the island.

This was the last event of the season to be pulled off by the members of these associations, and was also one that will be looked back upon in after life as a day of enjoyment. Well filled lunch baskets were taken and the dinner on the beach was of the pot luck order. Games were played until the time of departure and it was a happy bunch of young people that arrived at the dock on their return.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

"Waitstill! When you've swished about in the water, don't do any more good, then after that I should wonder if you'd like to see the floor with a new paper or if it'll never get dry before father comes home. I'll sit on the floor and wait till it's dry, but I can't stay long because I'm going to a picnic. Hurry up and don't look as if you were crying over spilled milk. It's no use crying over spilled milk. You don't suppose I'm going to tell any tales after you've made me an offer of marriage, do you? I'm not so mean as all that, though I may have my faults."

It was nearly 2 o'clock before the waiting Waitstill Baxter's husband, who was removed from the front porch, and when the store was finally reopened for business it was a most dejected clerk who dealt out groceries to the public. The worst feature of the affair was that every one in the two villages suddenly and contemporaneously wanted molasses, so that Cephas spent the afternoon reviewing his misery by continually turning the tap and drawing off the fatal liquid. Then, too, every inquisitive boy in the neighborhood came to the back of the store to view the operation, exclaiming: "What makes the floor so wet? Haven't been spillin' molasses, have yer? Bet yer have! Good joke on Old Fox!"

CHAPTER VIII.

On Tory Hill.

It had been a heavenly picnic, the little trio all agreed as to that, and when Ivory saw the Baxter girls coming up the shady path that led along the river from the Indian cellar to the bridge it was a merry group and a transfigured Rodman that caught his eye. The boy, trailing on behind with the baskets and laden with tin dippers and wild flowers, seemed another creature from the big eyed, quiet little he saw every day. He had chattered like a magpie, eaten like a bear, torn his jacket getting wild columbines for Patty, been nicely dandied by Waitstill and was in a state of hilarity that rendered him quite unrecognizable.

"We've had a lovely picnic!" called Patty. "I wish you had been with us!"

"You didn't ask me," smiled Ivory, picking up Waitstill's mending basket from the hook in the trees where she had hidden it for safe keeping.

"We've played games, Ivory," cried the boy. "Patty made them up herself. First we had the 'Landing of the Pilgrims' and Waitstill made believe she was the friend of the Mayflower. She stood on a great bowl and sang:

"The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and ruckaboo coast
And, oh, she was splendid!—Then Patty was Pocahontas, and I was Captain John Smith, and look, we are all dressed up for the Indian wedding!"

"I shall have to run into father's store to put myself tidy," Waitstill said, "so good-bye, Rodman, we'll have another picnic some day. Patty, you must do the chores this afternoon, you know, so that I can go to choir rehearsal!"

Rodman and Patty started up the hill, gently with their burdens, and Ivory walked by Waitstill's side as she pulled off her black hair crown and twisted her hair around her head with a heightened odor at being watched.

"I'll say good-bye now, Ivory, but I'll see you at the meeting house," she said as she turned the store. "I'll go in here and brush the pie needles off, wash my hands and rest a little before rehearsal. That's a puzzling answer we have for tomorrow."

"I have my horse here. Let me drive you up to the church."

"I can't, Ivory; thank you. Father's orders are against my driving but with any one, you know."

"Very well. The road is free, at any rate. I'll hitch my horse down here in the woods somewhere, and when you start to walk I shall follow and watch you. There's luckily only one way to reach the church from here, and your father can't blame us if we both take it."

And so it fell out that Ivory and Waitstill walked together in the cool of the afternoon to the meeting house on Tory Hill. Waitstill kept the beaten path on one side and Ivory that on the other, so that the width of the country road, deep in dust, was between them, yet their nervousness seemed so tangible a thing that each could feel the heart beating in the other's side.

Their talk was only that of tried friends, a talk interrupted by long, beautiful silences—silences that came only to a man and woman whose understanding of each other is beyond question and answer. Not a sound broke the stillness, yet the very air, it seemed to them, was shuddering meanings, the flowers were exhaling a love secret with their fragrances, the birds were singing it boldly from the tree-tops, yet no word passed the man's lips or the girl's. Waitstill would have longed to see all sorts of signals and hints to draw the truth from Ivory and break through the walls of his self control, but Waitstill, never, and Ivory Boynton was much of stuff so strong that he would not speak a syllable of love to a woman unless he could say all. He was only five and twenty, but he had been reared in a rigorous school and had learned in its poverty, loneliness and anxiety lessons of self denial and self control that bore daily fruit now. He knew that Deacon Baxter would never allow any engagement to exist between Waitstill and himself. He also knew that Waitstill would never defy and disobey her father if it meant leaving her younger sister to fight alone a dreary battle for which she was not fitted. If there was little hope on her side there seemed even less on his.

His mother's mental illness made her peculiarly dependent upon him and at the same time held him in such strict bondage that it was almost impossible for him to get on in the world or even to give her the comforts she needed.

In villages like Riverboro in those early days there was no putting away even of men or women so dejected as to be something of a menace to the peace of the household. But Lois Boynton was so gentle, so fragile, so exquisite a spirit, that she seemed in her sad aloofness simply a thing to be sheltered and shielded somehow in her difficult life journey. Ivory often thought how sorely she needed a daughter in her affliction. If the baby sister had only lived the home might have been different; but, alas, there was only a son—a son who tried to be tender and sympathetic, but after all was nothing but a big, clumsy, uncomprehending man creature, who ought to be felling trees, plowing, sowing, reaping or at least studying law, making his own fortune and that of some future wife. Old Mrs. Mason, a garrulous, good hearted grandmother, was their only near neighbor, and her visits always left his mother worse rather than better. How such a girl as Waitstill would pour comfort and beauty and joy into a lonely house like his if only he were weak enough to call upon her strength and put it to so cruel a test! God help him! He would never do that, especially as he could not earn enough to keep a large family, bound down as he was by inexorable responsibilities. Waitstill thus far in life had suffered many sorrows and enjoyed few pleasures. Marriage ought to bring her freedom and plenty, not earthen care and poverty. He stole long looks at the girl across the separating space that was so helpless to separate, feeling his starved heart upon her womanly graces. Her quick, springing step was in harmony with the fire and courage of her mind. There was a fire in her face—small wonder. But an "inexorable soul" shone in her eyes, shone, too, in an uncertain way, but brightly and steadily, expressing an unshaken joy in living. Valiant, splendid, indomitable Waitstill! He could never tell her, alas! But how he gloried in her!

It is needless to say that no woman could be the possessor of such a love as Ivory Boynton's and not know of its existence. Waitstill never held a breath of it from Ivory's lips; even his eyes were under control and confessed nothing, nor did his hand ever clasp hers to show by a telltale touch the truth he dared not utter; nevertheless she felt that she was beloved. She hid the knowledge deep in her heart and covered it softly from every eye but her own, taking it out in the safe darkness sometimes to wonder over and where in secret. Did her love for Ivory rest partly on a sense of vocation—a religious, impulsive devotion of his vast need of her? He was so strong, yet so weak because of the yoke he bore, so utterly alone in his desperate struggle with life, that her heart melted like wax whenever she thought of him. When she contemplated the hidden journey in her own heart she was awestruck sometimes at the almost divine patience of Ivory's conduct as a son.

"How is your mother this summer, Ivory?" she asked as they sat down on the meeting house steps waiting for Jed Morrill to open the door.

"There's little change in her from year to year, Waitstill—by the way, why don't we get out of this afternoon and sit in the old graveyard under the trees? We're early and the choir won't get here for half an hour. Mr. Perry says that he does not understand mother's case in the least and that no one but some great Boston physician could give a proper opinion on it; of course that's impossible at present."

"They sat down on the grass underneath one of the elms, and Waitstill took off her hat and leaned back against the tree trunk.

"Tell me more," she said; "it is so long since we talked together quietly, and we have never really spoken of our mother."

"Of course," Ivory continued, "the people of the village all think and speak of mother's illness as religious insanity, but to me it seems nothing of the sort. I was only a child when father first fell in with Jacob Cochrane, but I was twelve when father went away from home on his mission, and if there was any one suffering from delusions in our family it was he, not mother. She had altogether given up going to the Cochrane meetings, and I well remember the scene when my father told her of the revelation he had received about going through the state and into New Hampshire in order to convert others and extend the movement. She had no sympathy with his self imposed mission, you may be sure, though now she goes back to her memory to the earlier days of her married life, when she tried hard, poor soul, to tread the same path that father was treading, so as to be by his side at every turn of the road."

"I am sure," there Ivory's tone was somewhat dry and satirical, "that father's road had many turns, Waitstill! He was a schoolmaster in Saco, you know, when I was born, but he soon turned from teaching to preaching, and here my mother followed with entire sympathy, for she was intensely, devoutly religious. I said there was little change in her, but there is one new symptom. She has ceased to refer to her conversion to Cochraneism as a blessed experience. Her memory of those first days seems to have faded. As to her sister's death and all the circumstances of her bringing Rodman home, her mind is a blank. Her expectation of father's return, on the other hand, is much more intense than ever."

"She must have loved your father dearly, Ivory, and to lose him in this terrible way is much worse than death. Uncle Bart says he had a great gift of language!"

"Yes, and it was that, in my mind, that led him astray. I fear that the spirit of God was never so strong in father as the desire to influence people by his oratory. That was what drew him to preaching in the first place, and when he found in Jacob Cochrane a man who could move an audience to frenzy, lift them out of the body and do with their spirits as he willed he acknowledged him as master. Whether his gospel was a pure and unadulterated religion I doubt, but he certainly was a master of persuasive control. My mother was bewitched, entranced, even bewitched at first. I don't mind, for she translated all that Cochrane said into her own speech and regarded him as the prophet of a new era. But Cochrane's last 'revelations' differed from the first and wore of the earth, earthly. My mother's pure soul must have revolted, but she was not strong enough to drag father from his allegiance. Mother was of better family than father, but they were both well educated and had the best schooling to be had in their day. So far as I can judge, mother always had more 'balance' than father and much better judgment—yet look at her now!"

"Then you think it was your father's disappearance that really caused her mind to waver?" asked Waitstill.

"I do, indeed. I don't know what happened between them in the way of religious differences or how much unhappiness these may have caused. I remember she had an illness when we first came here to live, and I was a little chap of three or four, but that was caused by the loss of a child, a girl, who lived only a few weeks. She recovered perfectly, and her head was as clear as mine for a year or two after father went away. As his letters grew less frequent, as news of him gradually ceased to come, she became more and more silent and retired more completely into herself. She never went anywhere, nor entertained visitors because she did not wish to hear the gossip and speculation that were going on in the village. Some of it was very hard for a wife to bear, and she resented it indignantly, yet never received a word from father with which to refute it. At this time, as nearly as I can judge, she was a recluse and subject to periods of profound melancholy, but nothing worse. Then she took that winter journey to her sister's deathbed, brought home the boy, and, hastened by exposure and chill and grief, I suppose, her mind gave way—that's all. And Ivory sighed deeply as he stretched himself on the greenward and looked off toward the snow-capped New Hampshire hills. "I've meant to write the story of the 'Cochrane craze' some time or such part of it as has to do with my family history, and you shall read it if you like."

"I should like very much to read your account. Aunt Abby's version, for instance, is so different from Uncle Bart's that one can scarcely find the truth between the two, and father's bears no relation to that of any of the others."

"Some of us see facts and others see visions," replied Ivory, "and these differences of opinion crop up in the village every day when anything novel or worthy is discussed. I came upon a quotation in my reading last evening that described it. 'One said it thundered; another that an angel spoke.'"

"Do you feel as if your father was dead, Ivory?"

"I can only hope so. That thought brings sadness with it, as one remembers his disappointment and failure, but if he is alive he is a traitor."

There was a long pause, and they could see in the distance Humphrey Barker with his harpoon and Play Waterhouse with his bow and arrow driving up to the churchyard fence to hitch their horses. The sun was dipping low and red behind the Tory House hill on the other side of the river.

"What makes my father dislike the very mention of yours?" asked Waitstill. "I know what they say—that it is because the two men had high words once in a Cochrane meeting, when father tried to interfere with some of the exercises and was put out of doors. It doesn't seem as if that grievance, seventeen or eighteen years ago, would influence his opinion of your mother or of you."

"It isn't likely that a man of your father's sort would forget or forgive what he considered an injury, and in refusing to have anything to do with the son of a disgraced man and a degraded woman he is well within his rights."

Ivory's cheeks burned red under the sun, and his hand trembled a little as he plucked bits of clover from the grass and pulled them to pieces absently. "How are you getting on at home these days, Waitstill?" he asked, as if to turn his own mind and hers from a too painful subject.

"You have troubles enough of your own without hearing mine, Ivory, and anyway they are not all afflictions, heavy sorrows, like those you have to bear. Mine are just petty, nagging, sordid, cheap little miseries, like gnats and flies—so petty and so sordid that I can hardly talk to God about them, much less to a human friend. Patty is my only outlet and I need others, yet I find it almost impossible to escape from the narrowness of my life and be of any use to any one else."

"The girl's voice quivered and a single teardrop on her cheek showed that she was speaking from a full heart. "This afternoon's talk has deflowered me on one thing," she went on. "I am going to see your mother now and then. I shall have to do it secretly, for your sake, for hers and for my own, but if I am found out then I will go openly. There must be times when one can break the lower law and yet keep the higher. Father's law in this case is the lower and I propose to break it."

"I can't have you getting into trouble, Waitstill," Ivory objected. "You're the only woman I can think of who might help my mother. All the same,

Crest of the Sierras.

Mount Whitney, the highest point in the United States, is not an isolated mountain peak like Mount Shasta or Mount Rainier, but is the loftiest point in the great California crest or enormous saw tooth ridge of the Sierra Nevada, including many enormous adobe peaks. Mount Whitney is 14,500 feet above sea level. Among these of slightly lesser height are Mount Russell, less than a mile distant, 14,190 feet; Mount Williamson, 14,384 feet; Mount Muir, 14,025 feet; Mount Langley, 11,042 feet; Mount Barnard, 14,003 feet, and Mount Tyndall, 14,025 feet. All of these high peaks are grouped within six miles. By a strange freak of nature the lowest point of dry land in the United States is less than eighty miles from the highest. The lowest point is in Death Valley and is 274 feet below sea level. It is said that from this point Mount Whitney can be easily seen on a clear day. —United States Geological Survey.

Many Impositors Engaged in the Attempt to Cure the Liquor Habit—Unscrupulous Methods Adopted—If Restoration Can be Affected at All the Keeley Cure is Looked Upon as the Only Genuine Remedy.

Many worthless cures for the liquor and drug habits are continually springing up, blazoning for a while like a comet in a firmament and then disappearing never again to return. If they do any good besides getting hard-earned dollars from the credulous, suffering humanity no one knows anything about it.

"Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever," writes the sublime Tennyson. And so it is with the Keeley treatment. These institutes give value received. Naturally, the wonderful success that has attended this treatment has caused the advent of charlatans without number, but fortunately their career is brief. It is unnecessary to enter into a minute account of the Keeley treatment, its discovery after long years of research by the late Dr. Leslie E. Keeley and its phenomenal success in eradicating the liquor and drug habit. The medicines given here, which, by the way, is the only institute of its kind endorsed by the United States government—and throughout the country have been the means of curing nearly a half million people, among which are classified persons in all stages of life, but when one runs across a number of impositors who even purloin the literature of the Keeley people and republish it as their own it is only fair to the public and to the Keeley treatment to state emphatically that this is the only cure extant known for liquor and morphine and other drug habits.

Here the patients find all the comforts of home while undergoing treatment. The treatment is not only pleasant, but it is the means of eradicating the desire for liquor within a few days, builds up the shattered system and effects a complete cure within four weeks. If one who has taken the Keeley treatment ever returns to drink it will not be because he craves for it, but because of associations or false confidence in himself. No one had a craving for the first drink he had ever taken in his life. And the Keeley treatment virtually places a man in the same position as, far as any craving is concerned as he was before he ever took a drink.

Naturally all the patients who go to the Keeley institute have badly shattered nerves, and it is as of importance to build up this system as it is to eradicate the alcoholic effects and place the tissues in a healthy condition.

Before taking any treatment for either the liquor or drug addiction investigate thoroughly the treatment administered at the Keeley Institute, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Write, phone or call. All correspondence is strictly confidential.

Detachable Hook For Use With Fire or Ordinary Ladders.

While designed primarily for use with fire ladders, a detachable hook recently invented has a wide adaptability in connection with construction work of all kinds in which ladders may be employed. The hook provides a simple, convenient and inexpensive attachment for ladders, whereby any ordinary ladder may be converted into a scaling ladder, and the hook may be applied to the ladder, removed from it or transferred from one ladder to another quickly and easily.

Fire departments find this useful in connection with the life line section, and a total weight of 1,150 pounds has been demonstrated safely and successfully on this hook. Hereafter such hooks as have been used in scaling ladders have been permanently attached to the ladder. Thus when an old hook or ladder became broken or impaired a new ladder had to be provided.

Electrocution of Tereidos.

A new method of destroying tereidos, a pest which has caused enormous damage in the destruction of piles used in wharfage construction in north Pacific coast ports, particularly in Vancouver, Seattle and Tacoma, by turning an electric current into the piles, is being tried in Seattle. These pests have so far successfully defied all attempts to eradicate them from the timbers supporting the various structures along the water front in the Puget sound and British Columbia ports, and a means of destroying them will prove a great saving to individuals and companies maintaining docks and wharf properties on the coast.—Consular Report.

Renewing an Old Square.

Cover the surface of the square thoroughly with blue chalk; then rub off the surplus. This will leave the division marks clear and distinct in a bright blue, and they will remain in this condition much longer than would be expected. Another and a more permanent method is to paint the square with red lead and allow it to dry for five or six hours; then dampen a soft cloth in kerosene and wipe off the surface coat. The paint will adhere in the marks and figures, thus making them plainly visible.

New Rainproof Fabric.

A closely woven fabric has been introduced to the American market by an English manufacturer's agent that is designed for use in the manufacturing of raincoats. No rubber is used in the construction of the fabric, and it is guaranteed rainproof, although smoke may be blown through it at the very point on which the water is falling. The fabric because of this feature, it is said, is self ventilating and will not "cockle up."

Window Screen Hint.

In making window screens put white netting on the outside of the frame and black on the inside. Thus the vision of a person inside will not be obstructed, while no one on the outside can see through the screens.

Origin of Cards.

The origin of cards lies far back in the hidden antiquity of Asia, no record so far having been found to unravel the source. It was from the distant orient that cards, along with chess, were first introduced into southern Europe, Spain and Italy especially. The earliest of these cards have been lost unfortunately and no record of them preserved.

BROOKLYN LABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON THE FRIEND OF SINNERS.
Luke 18:9-14; 19:1-10—June 14.

"I come not to call the righteous, but sinners."—Mark 2:17.

THE parable of today's lesson reveals the heart attitude of some of the Pharisees and of the despised publicans. Two men went up to the Temple to pray. From God's standpoint both were sinners, and needed forgiveness of sins. But the Pharisee trusted in his own imperfect works, and asked no forgiveness; the publican, however, realized his blamableness and prayed for mercy.

We must not get the impression that God is more pleased with those who live in sin than with those who strive to the best of their ability to live in harmony with His Law.

On the contrary, we must all realize that we come short of perfection and need Divine mercy. The sinner who recognizes this fact is more pleasing to God than is the more moral person who fails to see his blamableness.

Jesus referred to this same error of the Pharisees at another time, saying, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance." He thus sought to call attention to the fact that although the Pharisees claimed to be righteous, yet they were not so. Until they should learn that they and all other members of the Adamic race were sinners and needed the remedy which only the Redeemer can give, they were not in condition to come to Him for forgiveness.

Not realizing their need, the Pharisees did not become Jesus' disciples, and thereby missed a great blessing. On the contrary, the majority of His followers were publicans and sinners—people who had not been living proper lives, but who earnestly acknowledged their faults, turned from sin, accepted healing from the Good Physician, and became His followers.

A Little Man—a Big Heart.

The latter part of our lesson relates to Jesus' journey from Jericho to Jerusalem, just prior to His crucifixion. Multitudes were journeying in the same direction, going up to the Passover. Zacchaeus, a rich man of that vicinity, was anxious to see Jesus. He was not a Pharisee, he did not profess holiness of life. He was a tax collector for the Roman government—a publican. On this account he was despised, and declared to be disloyal to Judaism.

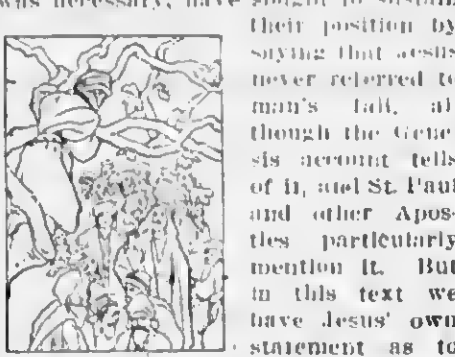

Small of stature, Zacchaeus was unable to see Jesus because of the crowd. Therefore he ran ahead and climbed a tree, to have a good view of Jesus as He passed by. When Jesus came near, He called to Zacchaeus to come down at once, for He was to be his guest. The summons was gladly received by Zacchaeus. But the whole circumstance greatly disgusted the Pharisees, who remarked that Jesus would become the guest of one not orthodox.

Fortwith Zacchaeus addressed the Master as though urging that the charges against him should not hinder the Master from becoming his guest, and as intimating his desire to do right. Jesus replied to Zacchaeus, "This day is salvation come to this house; forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham." From the Lord's standpoint all Abraham's sons were eligible to discipleship. The one thing required was an honest confession of imperfection, an honest turning from sin, a hearty acceptance of Christ and an endeavor to walk in His steps.

Importunately this principle still applies, regardless of what one may think or say to the contrary. The Lord is willing to receive the repentant. The middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile has been broken down, as St. Paul explains. All who have Abraham's faith may be counted in as Abraham's children by becoming related to the Divine Plan as Jesus' disciples.—Galatians 3:6, 29.

"That Which Was Lost."

Our lesson closes with Jesus' words, "For the Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost." Some who deny that Adam was created perfect, who deny his fall from Eden, favor and who deny that redemption was necessary, have sought to sustain their position by saying that Jesus never referred to man's fall, although the Gospels account tells of it, and St. Paul and other Apostles, particularly mention it. But in this text we have Jesus' own statement as to why He came into the world.

He came to be man's Redeemer—to seek and to recover, restore, that which was lost. Everlasting life was lost. Eden was lost, human perfection was lost, the image of the Divine character was lost. These could not be recovered by humanity, all of whom were under death sentence the curse. But God's compassion arranged a Plan, whereby Jesus came into the world and gave Himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time. The very fact that the Master speaks of His work as a ransoming one (Matthew 20:28) corroborates the statement that man needed to be ransomed from death.

Peninsular Grange.

Peninsular grange met in regular session Saturday evening with Worthy Master Heller in the chair. The stormy weather did not dampen the ardor of the members, twenty-four being present.

Four new applications were received and four old members reinstated. Two candidates received the first and second degrees. The grange received a beautiful framed engraving of Father Kelly, founder of the grange, which makes a nice appearance in the hall.

A goodly number of grangers will attend the Pomona meeting at Boyne Falls. Here's hoping the present enthusiasm of Peninsular grange will never lag. Next meeting June 20th.

POOLE-SPRIK

Newly Weds Will Make Their Future Home at 137 Myrtle Street, Detroit.

The wedding of Miss Nellie Sprik and William H. Poole, Jr., took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sprik of Norwood township, Tuesday afternoon, Rev. J. G. C. Irvine performing the ceremony. The bride wore a pretty costume of embroidered voile and carried a bridal wreath. The groom wore conventional black. The young couple stood in the parlor under a nicely arranged canopy of evergreens, with ferns and flowers intertwined. Only the immediate relatives of both parties were present.

A bountiful dinner was provided and the happy couple left on the afternoon train for Detroit, where they will be at home after the eleventh at 137 Myrtle street.

Many pretty and useful presents were received. The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends.

The Charlevoix Beach Hotel opened for the summer season last Saturday. Mrs. Baker states that indications point to one of the best resort seasons in many years.

D. S. Payton attended the funeral Monday of James B. Parmeter, an old resident of East Jordan, who died at his home in that city Saturday. The ritualistic Masonic services were conducted.

Rev. Holden A. Putnam, formerly pastor of the Congregational church of this city but now located at Ludington, is in the city for a few days. He will spend a few days on his fruit farm near Ironton, returning to Ludington the latter part of the week.

Lester J. Gray of Battle Creek, has purchased the 40-acre farm of Wm. Withers of Marion township, known as the old Ward farm. Mr. Gray will take possession next spring. The sale was made through the Gregory & Lien-ton real estate agency.

WHAT ABOUT IT?

Will Charlevoix Let Another Year Pass Without Celebrating the Fourth?

With the Fourth of July but four weeks in the distance, the question arises as to whether or not Charlevoix is going to come to the front and provide some kind of a celebration to keep the people at home on that day and also bring others here from surrounding towns and territory.

The investment of a few hundred dollars in attractions on that day would prove a good proposition for the business interests of the city. If we do not celebrate here the people will naturally seek the places where there is some kind of activity and as a result the money that would be spent locally goes into the coffers of the business houses in the towns where they have enough life to provide some kind of amusement.

There is no need of going upon an expensive scale, but an attempt should be made to provide music during the day and evening, vaudeville or like attractions and some good fireworks. It seems that it will be an easy task to get the necessary funds together for keeping the people together at home on that day and especially so because the Fourth falls this year on Saturday, which is naturally the busiest day of the week.

GOES TO DETROIT

Evers A. Nordrum Advanced to Position of Chief Clerk, with Increased Salary.

In the acceptance of a responsible position with the Booth Fisheries Company in Detroit this city loses one of its well liked and popular young men.

Evers A. Nordrum, son of Oluf Nordrum, has been with the company for a number of years. In fact, he started in their employ while a small boy, working nights after school and Saturdays. From the boy of all jobs he was gradually advanced until he reached the responsible position of head bookkeeper of the Charlevoix branch of the company's many offices.

A young man of 24 years of age, capable and efficient, he was last week advanced to the position of chief clerk of the extensive cold storage plant at the Detroit office. Mr. Nordrum will have full charge of this end of the business at the Detroit office and will have five assistants. The advancement was due to his faithful application to his work, which he justly deserves.

A number of his friends gave him a six o'clock dinner at his home Saturday evening and congratulations upon his advancement were made.

Mr. Nordrum left Monday to take charge of his new duties.

Young Boyne City Man Relieved of Roll by a Smooth-Tongued Stranger.

Robt. Wilson was arrested at Traverse City last week and brought to this city charged with defrauding Harold Stockman, a Boyne City young man, out of $250. It is claimed he sold an imaginary piece of western property, giving a receipt signed by a boy; his name not appearing on the paper at all. When arrested he pleaded not guilty, claiming that he had a legitimate business. He was taken to Boyne City and after a hearing released on $500 bonds.

About $240 of the money was found on him when the arrest was made.

ANNUAL BANQUET WAS A SUCCESS

Charlevoix County Republican Club Holds Event at Hotel Elston.

MANY SPEAKERS PRESENT

Harry Coykendall Chosen as President—
Other Officers Elected.

Eddie Guest, Humorist of the Detroit Free Press, Keeps Audience in Continual Laughter—
Next Meeting at Boyne City.

The fifth annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club, held at the Hotel Elston Friday night, was well attended by prominent speakers from various parts of the state and the usual number of Republicans from the county. It was a very successful affair in every way and sounded the first bugle call for a Republican victory next fall. Boats from Boyne City and East Jordan brought over their usual number besides those who made the trip by auto.

Prior to the opening of the banquet a short business meeting was held. Harry Coykendall of East Jordan was elected president; T. O. Bissell of Boyne City secretary, and Lisle Shanahan treasurer. All the vice-presidents were re-elected. Boyne City was selected as the place where the next banquet will be held.

After the arrival of the last boat the guests made their way to the dining room of the hotel, where plates were laid for about two hundred. The repast which was served did credit to the committee and to the management of the hotel. The tables were prettily decorated with flowers and in the room American flags of all sizes adorned the walls.

Lisle Shanahan acted as toastmaster and as soon as the last course was served announced the program would start immediately, as it was necessary for a number of the speakers to leave the hall at an early hour to enable them to catch the night train at Petoskey.

The first selection was by the Wilkinson quartet. This was followed by Alex. Groesbeck, chairman of the state central committee, who spoke briefly on the political situation of to-day.

A. J. GROESBECK, CHAIRMAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. Groesbeck pointed out what could be done to again attain the prosperity of the years just passed and stated that the people to-day were not satisfied with the present conditions under the Democratic administration. He made an appeal to all candidates to be men, to conduct themselves as such in the primaries, and after the race had come down to one between parties to stand for Republican principles.

Attorney General Grant Fellows was the next speaker. He opened with the statement that the factions were getting together and that all meetings like the banquet were but an evidence of the "get-together" spirit manifested all over the country. He concluded his remarks by stating that the greatest "get-together" meeting would be on November 3rd, which was greeted by hearty applause.

Eddie Guest, humorist of the Detroit Free Press, was next introduced and for fifteen minutes kept his hearers in continual laughter. He closed his remarks by reading a beautiful poem on the raise of wages at the Ford plant and the late laying off of many of the workmen, the latter being a result of Republican production and a lack of Democratic consumption.

Toastmaster Shanahan in introducing the next speakers—all of whom were candidates for some office and some in opposition to each other—ended with the quotation that "many are called, but few chosen."

SENATOR FRANK SCOTT OF ALPENA.

Frank Scott, state senator, spoke of the ideals of politics, showing how they had advanced in the years past, and painted a glorious future. He was followed by Representative H. I. McMillan, who paid a glowing tribute to the Republican party, especially to those who had made possible the overwhelming majorities usually given candidates of this party in Charlevoix county.

Judge Judd Yelland of Escanaba brought the attention of those present to the condition of affairs throughout the country during the last Democratic administration and made an appeal for a united force to again put Republican principles in control.

JOSEPH E. BAYLISS.

Joseph E. Bayliss of Sault Ste. Marie, candidate for representative to congress from this district, was the next speaker. Mr. Bayliss held the close attention of the audience during his talk. In a masterly way he reviewed the causes of political activity which give birth to the standpat and the radical. He claimed we were living in a day of optimism and reviewed the present situation in a manner that made a deep impression on those who were fortunate enough to hear him.

Hon. J. M. Harris of Boyne City, introduced by Toastmaster Shanahan as "the pet of Charlevoix county," completed the program. He stated that the people of to-day demanded more of the candidates than in previous years and that the individual must be worthy of the party and not consider himself above it. No man can be elected to any office without the consent of his friends—a fact in which we agree entirely with the speaker.

The guests then arose and led by the Wilkinson quartet sang "America" in closing.

WEAVER FOR TREASURER

Popular Captain of City of Boyne Makes His Debut in Political Sea.

All indications point to a merry scrap in county politics this fall. The latest to "throw his hat into the ring," is Captain George Weaver, who announces himself as a candidate for the office of county treasurer on the Republican ticket.

Everyone knows Capt. Weaver. For the past nine years he has safely piloted his boat between this port and Boyne City, and carried hundreds of Charlevoix county's citizens to and fro between the two cities. Previous to this he sailed on the lakes, and has been a resident of this city since 1884. Now, on his maiden trip in the political sea, he believes he can pilot his campaign on a course that will land him at the doors of the office he seeks, and give the people of Charlevoix the same excellent service as county treasurer as he has on his boat line. He asks the support of the voters of the Republican party and pledges to give his entire attention to the duties of the office if elected.

Watch the maneuvers of the Captain in the political sea.

To the Public.

The report has been circulated that pasture on the Barrett land is 50c. per month. I hereby wish to notify people that it is only 25c. per month for horses or cattle—D. W. Mahoney. Adv.241

GEO. W. KENT DIED SATURDAY

Had Spent Most of His Life in Newspaper Work in Michigan.

Prominent Member of Elks, Masons, and Knights of Pythias—Funeral Held Monday.

George W. Kent, perhaps one of the best known newspaper men in Northern Michigan, died at nine o'clock Saturday forenoon at his home in Boyne City after an illness lasting for several years.

Mr. Kent passed his 46th birthday last December. He was born in Greenville, Ohio, moving from there when a boy to Kansas, where he spent his childhood. Most of his life had been in newspaper work in Michigan, coming here at the age of about 23. For a number of years he was on the staff of the Evening News at Petoskey and later went to Traverse City. He went to Boyne City about two years ago to assume the management of the Evening Journal, which position he was compelled to resign the following winter that he might go to a different climate in the hope of regaining his fast failing health.

About a year ago he returned to Boyne City and accepted the position of editor of the Boyne City Times, remaining on that paper until the consolidation of the two papers in that city last spring.

George Kent was well liked by everyone who knew him. He was loved by all for his cheery disposition and open-hearted optimism despite his sufferings. His life has been an example and his going had left a vacant spot where he has lived and was known that no one can fill.

He was a prominent member of the B. P. O. E., of Petoskey, and the Traverse City lodge of Masons and of the Knights of Pythias. The funeral services were held at two o'clock Monday from his home in Boyne City. Interment in the cemetery at the place where he died.

Besides his wife and daughter, Dorothy, he leaves a sister, Mrs. Charles Garratt of Grand Rapids; a brother, W. P. Kent of Chicago; a stepson, Robert Huxford of Detroit, and his mother, who has made her home with him in Boyne City for some time.

BOAT BURNS OFF BEAVER ISLAND

Thought to Be Fish Tug Vega With Three Men on Board

Jerry Yettaw, William Heath and Henry Papineau Believed to Have Been Burned to Death.

Monday morning the report came from St. James of the burning of a gasoline boat about three miles from Sand Bay, almost opposite Martin's Point. The fire was first noticed by a woman named Mrs. Brown, who lives some distance from the bay. She immediately ran to Shoemaker Gallagher's home and notified them, and then word was sent to St. James. By the time Mrs. Brown had reached Gallagher's home the boat had disappeared, as no trace could be seen of it by the use of a strong glass.

Monday forenoon at about 11 o'clock the fish boat "Vega" owned by Guy Lamphear and Jerry Yettaw, with William Heath as engineer and Henry Papineau and Yettaw, left this harbor bound for St. James, where Mr. Yettaw was to be employed. Since their departure from here, no trace of them nor the boat has been found, and it is feared that the unfortunate men were aboard the burning boat and all have been lost.

Wednesday morning two tugs from St. James went to the scene of the burning of the boat, but no trace of them nor wreckage was found.

At present, the particulars as to how the accident happened, the name of the burning boat, nor whether the men have lost their lives is not known, but it is thought the boat was the Vega and all on board are lost. At the time the boat left here she had about 50 gallons of gasoline in her tank, and the death of the men must have been a horrible one.

ATTACKS ALL FRUIT TREES

Tent Caterpillar Devastating Orchards
Throughout the Country.

Trees Should be Sprayed at Once and Ravages of Pest Stopped.

Charlevoix county farmers and fruit growers are alarmed over the ravages which have been started by the Clisiocampa Americana; in plain English, the apple tree tent caterpillar.

Mr. Caterpillar has a ravenous appetite and works overtime on the foliage of the apple trees. When it rains or his work is otherwise interrupted the Clisiocampa scampers back into his tent, which is erected conveniently nearby, and lets his digestive apparatus get busy until another onslaught on the foliage. Apple trees alone are not the only sufferers, as the caterpillar attacks other fruit trees. According to J. L. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, many letters have been received from fruit growers asking for some effective treatment which will kill the pests off.

As a matter of fact, the remedy is simple and inexpensive when compared with the saving of the fruit and trees. Here is the remedy: Arsenate of lead, which will not injure foliage or fruit. The arsenate is adhesive and sticks to the leaves, and therefore is effective for a considerable period. It is easy to apply and inexpensive. Two or three pounds of arsenate of lead added to fifty gallons of water, or to fifty gallons of lime sulphur solution, or to fifty gallons of Bordeaux mixture, applied with a spray pump so the foliage is well covered, will rid a tree entirely of the pest.

The young larvae of the tent caterpillar are hatched during May and June from eggs laid during July of the year previous in clusters on twigs, with about two hundred eggs to the cluster. The egg clusters are covered with a peculiar liquid element which upon drying becomes very hard and glossy.

Immediately upon hatching the young worms begin feeding on the foliage and also to spin their silken webs, ordinarily in the crotch or fork of a limb. For six weeks they continue to feed and grow, seeking shelter in their tent or web at night or during cold weather. The full grown caterpillar is about two inches long, hairy and prettily marked with white stripes along the middle of the back with numerous side stripes of blue. He is capable of doing great injury to the quantity and quality of the fruit and the loss from this source can easily be obviated.

Practically every orchard in the county is full of them. In many instances more than half of the trees have been entirely stripped of their foliage. Some trees are a mass of tents with thousands of caterpillars literally covering the trees.

Mr. Farmer and fruit growers, you must get rid of them or your entire orchard will be destroyed. Use the solution given above and spray—spray as long as there is one of the pests in sight.

Destroy them this year, or perhaps next year they will be worse than ever.

ON THE YUKON TRAIL

C. C. Tooley of Boyne City and Capt. H. Berdan Met Jos. Bayliss in Alaska.

Last Thursday while in Boyne City on his way to Charlevoix to attend the Republican banquet, Jos. E. Bayliss of the Soo, candidate for congress from this district, met C. C. Tooley of that city. The two men had previously met in Alaska some fifteen years ago and when they met Thursday, each recognized the other and many past experiences were talked over. At the time the two men were in Alaska, Mr. Bayliss was a pilot on the Yukon river and a prospector in the gold fields. They were through many interesting incidents and drifted apart with only a chance acquaintance between them.

Upon the arrival of Mr. Bayliss to this city he was again reminded of his Alaska career when he met and recognized Capt. Harrison Berdan. These two men had met on the trail and had merely a chance acquaintance. The experiences of old were rehearsed by the two congenial gentlemen the same as had happened a few hours before in Boyne City.

Captain Berdan speaks only words of good for Mr. Bayliss, and expresses gratification of being able to renew his past acquaintance.

BROKE HIS LEG

J. W. Lee of Manistee Meets With Painful Accident on Beaver Islands.

Monday afternoon about 4 o'clock, J. W. Lee of Manistee, engineer on the railroad operated by the Beaver Island Lumber company, had the misfortune to have his leg broken by a falling log.

In some manner a car attached to the train became derailed and during the operation of placing in back upon the track, a log rolled off the car and struck Mr. Lee on the leg, causing a serious break between the knee and hip on the left leg.

The tug McCann brought him to this city, arriving here about 9:30 the same evening. Drs. Wilkinson and Armstrong reduced the fracture, which is said to be a serious one.

Mr. Lee and wife are staying at the Ferguson House, where he is doing as well as could be expected.

Rink Opens Next Week.

Arthur Karslake is busy getting the roller skating rink ready for the opening day, which will be some time next week. The rink will be under the management of Lisle Seat this season, and Mr. Karslake will spend his time between this city and Marquette, where he is interested in the same line of business. Both gentlemen have spent the winter at Mishawaka, Indiana, where they have conducted their winter rink.

INN OPENS JULY 1

Many New and Modern Improvements Have Been Made This Season.

The Inn will open July 1. Mr. Creamer has been here since early May overseeing the usual general repair work. The hotel has been placed in fine condition. Several private baths have been added, so that now practically all the rooms connect with baths. The hotel ranks as the best and most up-to-date resort hotel in Northern Michigan.

The orchestra will be larger than ever. Tango teas will be a daily feature. Another innovation will be the installation of an a la carte menu in the large grill room downstairs, where at all times visitors can have prompt service and attention.

New Cleaning Parlors.

A. Sokoff and Phillip Toubus of Chicago will within a few days open a ladies' tailoring establishment at 313 Bridge street. These gentlemen come well recommended as expert workmen in their line. They will also do French dry cleaning, pressing and dyeing and have in stock all the latest novelties in material.

SILVER CUP WILL BE AWARDED

For Best Exhibit of Fruit at the Greater Michigan Fair.

Cup to be Placed on Exhibition in Various Places
at a Later Date.

G. M. Dame, superintendent of horticulture for the Greater Michigan Fair, has formulated the rules and specifications under which the big silver cup offered for the best showing of fruits is to be secured. This cup, which is sterling silver and valued at $250, may be won by an individual, an association or a county. It will be awarded to the best exhibit of apples, peaches, plums, pears and crabapples. The only limitations put upon the displays are that they shall consist of not more than 20 varieties of apples, 10 varieties of peaches, 10 varieties of pears, 10 varieties of plums and 5 varieties of crabapples and that the exhibit shall not contain more than a total of 50 bushels of fruit.

Each exhibitor will be assigned suitable space and must have his exhibit in place by noon of Tuesday, September 1. All individuals, associations or counties wishing to take advantage of the opportunity of trying for the big cup should register with G. M. Dame, Western Michigan Development Bureau, Traverse City, Michigan. Upon registration full information regarding free storage and instructions for shipping will be furnished.

The big cup will be on exhibit in the early future at the following cities: Charlevoix, Petoskey, Traverse City, Frankfort, Northport, Ludington, Big Rapids, Manistee, Muskegon, Empire, Fenville, Casnovia, Cadillac, Honor, Thompsonville.

SECOND ANNUAL Y. M. C. A. CAMP

Annual Events For Boys of the County Opens June 22.

DAILY PROGRAM ARRANGED

Number of Campers This Year is Limited to Thirty.

Boys Are Taught Many Helpful Things and Have the Time of Their Lives—Same Place as Last Year.

"A camp of ideals, not a summer hotel, nor a supplanter of the home."

At this time in the year practically every normal boy suffers with a desire to "go-a-camping" with some of the other fellows. Perhaps you want your boy to have such a privilege but are unable to leave your work and give the matter your personal attention but you would let him go providing you could be assured that normally and physically he would be carefully and properly cared for. The Young Men's Christian Association of the county does that which you are unable to do and provides your boy with a more enjoyable outing than he could have in a small camping party; for in the usual Y. M. C. A. camp there are enough boys to make possible the games which boys enjoy. "Character is caught and not taught," so why not let your boy catch the spirit shown by a virile, wholesome and vigorous leadership in the work and play of a summer camp? Every precaution is taken for the safety and comfort of all. The camp is under the supervision of the County Y. M. C. A. Secretary, who provides a competent leader for each group of six boys. The following statements indicate what was held under the direction of the association a year ago in July: "For years the question of a vacation for my boy has caused me much anxious thought. The problem was solved last summer when I visited the Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp. I found careful, competent and Christian leaders in charge. They discovered and developed the possibilities of the boys, and inspired my boy to attain the position of leadership. The sportsman-like way in which the boys worked delighted me." "As a mother who visited your summer camp, I wish to say I was surprised with the system and discipline evident, and have noticed a marked improvement in my 12 year old boy since his experience at the camp. He was taught many helpful things and came home a changed boy in many respects and all for the good."

A go-as-you-please camp soon becomes a place of harm and moral deterioration. To guard against "haphazardness" a daily program like the following is arranged and carried out:

6:30 "Reveille" morning plunge, setting-up exercises.
7:00 Breakfast and daily announcements.
7:30 Camp duties.
8:15 Bible study.
9:00 Hikes, fishing, boating.
11:00 Swimming. Campers not allowed in the water only at stated times and under proper supervision.
12:30 Dinner.
1:00 Rest hour.
2:00 Athletics.
4:15 Swimming.
5:30 Tent inspection.
6:30 Supper.
7:00 Group games.
8:00 Camp fire.
9:00 Taps.

This year the number of campers will be limited to thirty and applications will be accepted in the order received until the limit is reached. Boys to be eligible must be 12, 13, 14 or 15 years of age.

A statement as to what a boy should take would not be out of order here for it is the common question asked by prospective campers. In the way of clothing he should have old trousers, (Continued on page 8.)

SERIOUS ERROR IN CHARLEVOIX

Charlevoix Citizens Will Do Well to Profit by the Following.

Many fatal cases of kidney disease have reached an incurable stage because the patient did not understand the symptoms. Even to-day in Charlevoix there are many residents making the same serious error. They attribute their mysterious aches and pains to overwork, or worry, perhaps, when all the time their rheumatic pains, backache and bladder irregularities are most probably due to weak and ailing kidneys. If you are ill, if your kidneys are out of order, profit by this Charlevoix resident's experience:

Henry Newman, 203 Sheridan street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I was troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me great relief. I can now rest better and I don't have much backache."

Price 50 cents at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Newman had. Foster-Milburn Co., Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh, being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and restoring nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for anyone that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Copyright, 1913, by KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Pattie (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Dayton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Pattie chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Pattie. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

CHAPTER IX.

A June Sunday.

It was Sunday in June, and almost the whole population of Riverboro and Edgewood was walking or driving in the direction of the meeting house on Tory hill.

Church toilets, you may well believe, were difficult of attainment by Deacon Baxter's daughters, as they had been by his respective helpmates in years gone by. When Waitstill's mother first asked her husband to marry her a new dress, and that was two years after marriage, he simply said: "You look well enough. What do you want to waste money on finery for these hard times? If other folks are extravagant that ain't any reason you should be. You ain't obliged to take your neighbors for an example, take 'em for a warning!"

"But, Foxwell, my Sunday dress is worn completely to threads," urged the second Mrs. Baxter.

"That's what women always say. They're all alike, no more idea of saving anything than a skunk blackbird! I can't spare any money for gewgaws, and you might as well understand it first as last. Go up attic and open the hair trunk by the window, you'll find plenty there to last you for years to come."

The second Mrs. Baxter visited the attic as commanded, and in turning over the clothes in the old trunk knew by instinct that they had belonged to her predecessor in office. Some of the dresses were neat, though terribly worn and faded, but all were fortunately far too short and small for a person of her fine proportions. Besides, her very soul shrank from wearing them, and her spirit revolted both from the insult to herself and to the poor dead woman she had succeeded, so she came downstairs to darn and mend and patch again her shabby wardrobe.

Waitstill had gone through the same experience as her mother before her, but in despair when she was seventeen she began to cut over the old garments for herself and Patty. Mercifully there were very few of them, and they had long since been discarded. At eighteen she had learned to dye yarns with yellow oak or maple bark and to make purples from elder and sunnec berries; she could spin and knit as well as any old "matron" of the village and cut and shape a garment as deftly as the Edgewood tailors, but the task of making bricks without straw was a hard one indeed.

She wore a white cotton frock on this particular Sunday. It was starched and pressed with a beautiful gloss, while a touch of distinction was given to her costume by a little black sleeveless "pompadour" made out of the covering of an old silk umbrella. Her hat had had a single wreath of coarse daisies around the crown, and her mitts were darned in many places. Nevertheless you could not entirely spoil her; God had used a liberal hand in making her, and her father's parsimony was a sort of boomerang that flew back chiefly upon himself.

As for Patty, her style of beauty, like Cephas Cole's old, had to be toned down rather than up to be effective, but circumstances had been chiefly unrelenting in this process of late. Deacon Baxter had given the girls three or four shapely pieces of faded yellow calico that had been repudiated by the village housewives as not fast enough in color to bear the test of proper washing. This had made frocks, aprons, petticoats and even underclothes for two full years, and Patty's weekly oblations when she removed her everlasting yellow dress from the hall where it hung were not such as should have fallen from the lips of a deacon's daughter. Waitstill had taken a piece of the same yellow material, starched and ironed it out a curving, circular form from a sewed in plaited crown, and "voa, a hat for Patty! What inspired Patty to put on a white ribbon of deepest wine color, with a little band of the same on the pale yellow hat, no one could say.

"Do you think you shall like that dull red right close to the yellow, Patty?" Waitstill asked anxiously.

"It looks all right on the columbines in the Indian cellar," replied Patty, turning and twisting the hat on her head. "If we can't get a peck at the Boston fashions we must just find our styles where we can."

The various roads to Tory hill were alive with vehicles on this bright Sunday morning. Uncle Bert and Abel Day, with their respective wives on the back seat of the Cole's double wagon, were passed by Deacon Baxter and his daughters, Waitstill being due at meeting earlier than others by reason of her singing in the choir. The deacon's one horse, two wheeled "shay" could hold three persons with comfort on its broad seat, and the twenty-year-old mare, although she was always as hollow as a gourd, could generally do the mile, uphill all the way, in half an hour if urged continually, and the deacon, he it said, if not good at feeding was unsurpassed at urging.

Aunt Abby Cole could get only a passing glimpse of Patty in the depths of the "shay," but a glimpse was all.

"Do you think you shall like that dull red right close to the yellow?"

ways enough for her, as her opinion of the girl's charms was considerably affected by the forlorn condition of her son, Cephas, whom she suspected of being hopelessly in love with the young person aforesaid, to whom she commonly alluded as "that red-headed baggage."

"Pattie Baxter's got the kind of looks that might do well enough at a tavern dance or a husking, but they're entirely unsuited to the Sabbath day or the meeting house," so Aunt Abby remarked to Mrs. Day in the way of back seat confidence. "It's unfortunate that a deacon's daughter should be afflicted with that bold style of beauty. Her hair's all but red. In fact, you might as well call it red when she smokes on it. But if she'd ever smacked it down with her'se grease she might darken it some, or anyhow she'd make it lay slicker. But it's the kind of hair that just matches that kind of a girl—sort of an 'un' comb!"

"Then her skin's so white and her cheeks so pink and her eyes so shapely that she'd attract attention without half tryin', though I guess she ain't above makin' an effort."

"She's innocent as a kitten," observed Mrs. Day impartially.

"Oh, yes, she's innocent enough an' I hope she'll keep so. Waitstill's a sight less innocent. If the truth was told, but she's the sort of girl that's made for one man and the rest of 'em never look at her. The other one's not even for the crowd, the more the merrier. She's a kind of mantrap, that girl is. Do you see the horse a little mite, Bartholomew? It makes me kind o' hot to be passed by Deacon Baxter. It's unsatisfactory Sunday, too, when he gaudily airs rheumatism too bad to come out."

"I s'pose we'd ought to be thankful he don't take nothin' out. The Baptists are gettin' ahead faster than they'd ought to be up to the Mills. Our minister ain't no kind of a proselyter. Seems as if he didn't care how folks got to heaven so long as they got there. The other church is havin' a service this afternoon side o' the river, an' I'd kind o' like to go, except it would please 'em too much to have a crowd there to see the immersion. They tell me, but I don't know how true, that that Tillson widdler woman that come here from somewhere in Vermont wanted to be baptized today, but the other converts declared they wouldn't be if she was."

"Jed Morrill said they'd have to hold her under water quite a spell to do any good," chuckled Uncle Bart from the front seat.

"Well, I wouldn't repeat it, Bartholomew, on the Sabbath day, not if he did say it. Jed Morrill's responsible for more blasphemous jokes than any man in Edgewood. I don't approve of makin' light of anybody's religious observances if they're ever so foolish," said Aunt Abby, somewhat enigmatically. "Our minister keeps remindin' us that the Baptists and Methodists are our brethren, but I wish he'd be a little more anxious to have our society keep ahead of the others."

"Jed's 'bout right in sizin' up the Widdler Tillson," was Mr. Day's mild contribution to the argument. "I ain't a readin' man, but from what folks report I should think she was one o' them critters that set on rocks bewilderin' an' bedevilin' men folks out o' their senses—syreens, I think they call 'em—a regular syreen is what that woman is, I guess!"

"There, there, Abel, you wouldn't know a syreen if you found one in your baked beans, so don't take away a woman's character on hearsay." And Mrs. Day, having shut up her husband as was her bounden duty as a wife and a Christian, tied her bonnet strings a little tighter and looked distinctly pleased with herself.

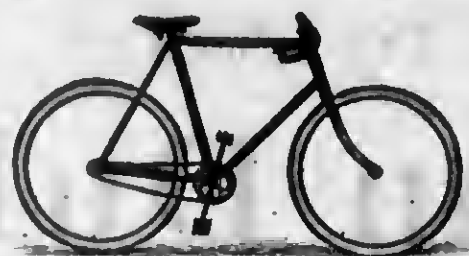

"Abe ain't startin' any new gossip," was Aunt Abby's opinion, as she sprang to his rescue. "One or two more holes in a calender don't make much difference—Bartholomew, we're certainly gittin' to be late this mornin'; we're about the last team on the road," and Aunt Abby glanced nervously behind. "Elder Boone ain't begun the openin' prayer, though, or we should know it. You can hear him pray a mile away, when the wind's right. I do hate to be late to meetin'." The elder sisters took notice; the folks in the wing pews allers gapes an' stares, and the choir peeks through the curtain, takin' notes of everything you've got on your back. I hope to the land they'll chide and keep together a little nite better'n they've done lately, that's all I can say. If the Lord is right in our midst, as the Bible says, he can't think much of our singers this summer."

"They're improv'n', now that Phyl Waterhouse plays his fiddle," Mrs. Day remarked placidly. "There was times in the autumn when they kept together considerable well last Sunday. They didn't always chide, but there they chided some! We're most there now, Abby, don't forget! Cephas won't ring the last bell till he knows his own folks is crossin' the common!"

Those were days of conscientious churchgoing, and every pew in the house was crowded. The pulpit was built on pillars that raised it six feet higher than the floor. The top was cushioned and covered with red velvet, surmounted by a huge gilt edged Bible. There was a window in the tower through which Cephas Cole could look into the church and while tolling the bell could keep watch for the minister. Always exactly on time, he would come in, walk slowly up the right hand aisle, mount the pulpit stairs, enter and close the door after him. Then Cephas would give one tremendous pull to warn listeners on the steps, a pull that meant, "Parson's in the pulpit!" and was answered accordingly. Opening the big Bible, the minister raised his right hand impressively, and, saying, "Let us pray," the whole congregation rose in their pews with a great rustling and bowed their heads devoutly for the invocation.

Next came the hymn, generally at that day one of Isaac Watts'. The singers, fifteen or twenty in number, sat in a raised gallery opposite the pulpit, and there, eyes turned in front, sang with red curtains to hide them when sitting down. Any one was free to join, which perhaps accounted for Aunt Abby's strictures as to time and tune. Jed Morrill, "blasphemous" as he was considered by that acrimonious lady, was the leader, and a good one too. There would be a great whispering and buzzing when Deacon Sumner, with his big fiddle, and Phyl Waterhouse, with his shunter one, would try to get in accord with Humphrey Baker and his clarinet. All went well when Humphrey was there to give the sure keynote, but in his absence Jed Morrill would use his tuning fork. When the key was finally secured by all concerned Jed would raise his stick, beat one measure to set the tune, and all joined in or fell in, according to their several abilities. It was not always a perfect thing in the way of a start, but they were well together at the end of the first line, and when, as now, the choir numbered a goodly number of voices and there were 300 or 400 in the pews, nothing more inspiring in its peaceful way was ever heard than the congregational singing of such splendid hymns as "Oth Hundred," "Duke Street" or "Benediction."

Waitstill led the trebles, and Ivory was at the far end of the choir in the tenors, but each was conscious of the other's presence. This morning he could hear her voice rising a little above, or perhaps, from its quality, separating itself somehow, ever so

Every father wants his boy and girl to learn the lesson of habitual saving.

Do you know, fathers, that one of the best ways to teach your children to save regularly is to have a savings account yourselves?

Let that boy of yours bring your savings deposit to the bank as "regular as clockwork" and he will get the habit himself—he can't help it.

Incidentally a little nest egg will be a good thing for father, too.

little, from the others. How full of strength and hope it was, her voice! How steadfast to the pitch! How golden in its color! How moving in its cadences! How the words flowed from her lips, not as if they had been written years ago, but as if they were the expression of her own faith! There were many in the congregation who were stirred, they knew not why, when there came to be only a few "carrying the air" and they could really hear Waitstill Baxter singing some dear old hymn, full of sacred memories, like—

While I live, protecting Power,
Be my van while I'm stilled,
And may this consecrated hour
With better hopes be filled.

"There may be them in Boston that can sing louder, and they may be able to run up a little higher than Waitstill, but the question is, could any of 'em make Aunt Abby Cole shed tears?" This was Jed Morrill's tribute to his best soprano.

There were Sunday evening prayer meetings, too, held at "candle-light," when Waitstill and Lucy Morrill would make a duet of "By cool Siloam's shady rill," or the favorite "Naomi," and the two fresh young voices, rising and falling in the tender throats of the old times, melted all hearts to new willingness of sacrifice.

DEVELOPMENTS under the Democratic tariff prove that history repeats itself. Things come in cycles. Terrible disasters, as for instance the loss of the Titanic, are, after a little time, almost forgotten, except by those who have suffered personal loss. But it takes about twenty years for us to forget a political disaster. The reason is not difficult to see. Those most active in business affairs twenty years ago are being superseded by others who, twenty years ago, were not old enough to take note of political changes. Thus, the Democratic tariff disaster of twenty years ago, when Cleveland was president, is being repeated to-day under Wilson. Almost identical action in many cases has brought about almost identical results. Business is bad, industrial conditions have slowed down and men are out of work; manufacturers, farmers and workmen are compelled to compete with foreign manufacturers, foreign farmers and cheap foreign labor. But we are waking up to the results of tariff reduction and history is going to repeat itself with the return of Republicans to power. This return will undoubtedly come with the congressional elections this fall.

POLITICAL straws show which way the wind is blowing. General indications point to sweeping Republican victories all over the country this fall. But the two specific instances where judgment has already been passed on the Wilson policies are in the Seventh District of New Jersey and the Twelfth District of Massachusetts. In the former the president wrote a letter asking the people to "pass judgment on the present administration." They took him at his word and elected a Republican to congress, the first time in fourteen years. In the Massachusetts district the Democrats themselves elected a man positively opposed to the president on his tolls repeals policy. Nuff said! You can draw your own conclusions.

WASN'T there something mentioned some time ago about Charlevoix having a six-day Chautauqua this summer? Possibly our good citizens are waiting until they recover from the effects of the coming (?) Fourth of July celebration before this matter is taken up.

So they have at last found a name for Mack Harris, "the pet of Charlevoix county." Better put a bell on him so as to be able to locate him.

PROBLEM of the senior class in math: If it takes the house a month to pass an anti-trust bill, how long will it take the senate?

If the wedding bells would stop ringing for a minute we should like to listen to the cooing of Mr. Bryan's peace dove.

JOHN: by the letters read in the various divorce cases, there will always be a large mush crop in this country.

MARRIAGE may be a failure in some cases, but with the advent of twins it becomes a howling success:

DEATH TAKES MRS. BYRON

Mother of Mrs. W. J. Pearson Dies in Hospital at Petoskey Thursday.

Mrs. Nettie Byron of Boyne Falls, mother of Mrs. W. J. Pearson, died in the hospital at Petoskey Thursday following a serious operation. She had been taken there a few days previous to her death in the hope that the operation might save her life, but she failed to withstand the shock. She was fifty-seven years and eleven months old.

The remains were taken to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Pearson of Boyne Falls, with whom she had made her home. Funeral services were held Saturday forenoon, Rev. Wm. Shepherd officiating.

Mrs. Byron also has a sister, Mrs. Benjamin Byram, who lives west of Petoskey, and a large circle of friends who regret that she has been taken from them.

Political Announcement.

I wish through the columns of this paper to announce that I am a candidate for the office of sheriff upon the Republican ticket and that my name will appear on the primary ballot at the August primaries. If elected I will give the best that is in me to fulfill the duties of the office. I earnestly solicit the support of the Republican voters of Charlevoix county.

MEET JUNE 29TH

Board of Supervisors Will Equalize Assessment Rolls and Transact Other Business.

The board of supervisors will meet the fourth Monday in June this year. This session of the board is called owing to the meeting of the State Board of Equalization which will be held at Lansing at a later date. The meeting is called for the purpose of equalizing the assessment rolls that the state board may have a basis on which to figure a just valuation for state tax purposes. The board will also select a candidate to meet with the state board of equalization and transact other routine business.

Last week's mention of the Baker auction sale stated that "the mowing machines would be sold to the lowest bidder." This was a mistake. The machines will be sold to the highest bidder, as at all auction sales. We have no doubt that the price bid by the highest bidder will be a bargain and in a sense "the lowest price bid" and accepted for mowing machines of the real value of those that will be sold at the sale. Keep the date in mind and attend. The sale will take place on the vacant lots at the rear of the County Bank building and will start at 2 o'clock p. m.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

BY KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Pattie (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father. Ivory Doynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochran, a roystering, chafing under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Pattie and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

CHAPTER IX.

A June Sunday.

It was Sunday in June, and almost the whole population of Riverboro and Edgewood was walking or driving in the direction of the meeting house on Tory hill.

Church toilets, you may well believe, were difficult of attainment by Deacon Baxter's daughters, as they had been by his respective helpmates in years gone by. When Waitstill's mother first asked her husband to buy her a new dress, and that was two years after marriage, he simply said: "You look well enough. What do you want to waste money on dyes for, these hard times? If other folks are extravagant that ain't any reason you should be. You ain't obliged to take your neighbors for an example, take 'em for a warning."

"But, Fawcett, my Sunday dress is worn completely to threads," urged the second Mrs. Baxter.

"That's what women always say. They're all alike, no more idea of 'savin' anything than a skunk blackbird! I can't spare any money for gewgaws, and you might as well understand it first as last. Go up attic and open the hair trunk by the window, you'll find plenty there to last you for years to come."

The second Mrs. Baxter visited the attic as commanded, and in turning over the clothes in the old trunk knew by instinct that they had belonged to her predecessor in office. Some of the dresses were neat, though terribly worn and faded, but all were fortunately far too short and small for a person of her due proportions. Besides, her very soul revolted from wearing them, and her spirit revolted both from the insult to herself and to the poor dead woman she had succeeded, so she came downstairs to darn and mend and patch again her shabby wardrobe.

Waitstill had gone through the same experience as her mother before her, but in despair when she was seventeen she began to cut over the old garments for herself and Patty. Mercifully there were very few of them, and they had long since been discarded. At eighteen she had learned to dye yarns with yellow oak or maple bark and to make purples from elder and sumac berries; she could spin and knit as well as any old "maim" of the village and cut and shape a garment as deftly as the Edgewood tailors, but the task of making bricks without straw was a hard one indeed.

She wore a white cotton frock on this particular Sunday. It was starched and ironed with a beautiful gloss, while a touch of distinction was given to her costume by a little black sleeveless "roundabout" made out of the covering of an old silk umbrella. Her hat had a single wreath of coarse daisies around the crown, and her mitts were darned in many places. Nevertheless, you could not entirely spoil her; for had used a liberal hand in making her, and her father's parsimony was a sort of boomerang that flew back chiefly upon himself.

As for Patty, her style of beauty, like Cephas Cole's old, had to be toned down rather than up to be effective, but circumstances had been cruelly unpropitious in this process of late. Deacon Baxter had given the girls three or four shawny pieces of faded yellow calico that had been repudiated by the village housewives as not fast enough in order to bear the test of proper washing. This had made frocks, trousers, petticoats and even underclothes for two full years, and Patty's weekly obligations when she removed her everlasting yellow dress from the nail where it hung were not such as should have fallen from the lips of a deacon's daughter. Waitstill had taken a piece of the same yellow material, starched and ironed it on a evening, elevated from a sewed in a plaid crown, and, in a hat for Patty. What inspired Patty to put on a waist ribbon of deepest white color with a little band of the same on the pale yellow hat, no one could say.

"Do you think you shall like that dull red right close to the yellow, Patty?" Waitstill asked anxiously.

"It looks all right on the columbines in the Indian cellar," replied Patty, turning and twisting the hat on her head. "If we can't get a peek at the Boston fashions we must just find our styles where we can."

The various roads to Tory hill were alive with vehicles on this bright Sunday morning. Uncle Bert and Abel Day, with their respective wives on the back seat of the Cole's double wagon, were passed by Deacon Baxter and his daughters. Waitstill being due at meeting earlier than others by reason of her singing in the choir. The deacon's one horse, two wheeled "shay," could hold three persons with comfort on its broad seat, and the twenty-year-old mare, although she was always as hollow as a gourd, could generally do the mile, uphill all the way, in half an hour if urged continually, and the deacon, he it said, if not good at feeding was unsurpassed at urging.

Aunt Abby Cole could get only a passing glimpse of Patty in the depths of the "shay," but a glimpse was all.

"Do you think you shall like that dull red right close to the yellow?"

ways enough for her, as her opinion of the girl's charms was considerably affected by the forlorn condition of her son, Cephas, whom she suspected of being hopelessly in love with the young person aforesaid, to whom she commonly alluded as "that red headed baggage."

"Pattie Baxter's got the kind of looks that might do well enough at a tavern dance or a husking, but they're entirely unsuited to the Sabbath day or the meeting house," so Aunt Abby remarked to Mrs. Day in the way of back seat confidence. "It's unfortunate that a deacon's daughter should be afflicted with that hold style of beauty. Her hair's all but red in fact, you might as well call it red when the sun shines on it. But she'd ever smack it down with beer's grease she might darken it some, or anyhow she'd make it lay sleeker. But it's the kind of hair that just matches that kind of a girl—sort of up an' comin'." Then her skin's so white and her cheeks so pink and her eyes so snappy that she'd attract attention without half tryin', though I guess she ain't above makin' an effort."

"She's innocent as a kitten," observed Mrs. Day impartially.

"Oh, yes, she's innocent enough as I hope she'll keep so. Waitstill's a shun here, I'm sure. If the truth was told, but she's the sort of girl that's made for one man and the rest of 'em never look at her. The other one's out and for the crowd, the more the merrier. She's a kind of mantrap, that's all. Do you see the horse a little while, Bar-bolomew?" It makes me kind of hot to be passed by Deacon Baxter. It's missionary Sunday, too, 'when he's usually as rheumatism too had to come out."

"I wonder if he ever gets anything into the plate?" said Mrs. Day. "No one ever saw him that I know of."

I suppose we'd ought to be thankful he don't take nothin' out. The Baptists are gettin' ahead faster than they'd ought to be in the Mills. Our minister ain't no kind of a proselyter. Seems as if he didn't care how folks got to heaven so long as they got there. The other church is havin' a service this afternoon side of the river, an' I'd kind of like to go, except it would please 'em too much to have a crowd there to see the immersion. They tell me, but I don't know how true, that that Tilson widdler woman that come here from somewhere in Vermont wanted to be baptized today, but the other converts declared they wouldn't be if she was."

"Jed Morrill said they'd have to hold her under water quite a spell to do any good," chuckled Uncle Bert from the front seat.

"Well, I wouldn't repeat it, Bartholomew, on the Sabbath day, not if he did say it. Jed Morrill's responsible for more blasphemous jokes than any man in Edgewood. I don't approve of makin' light of anybody's religious observances if they're ever so foolish," said Aunt Abby, somewhat indignantly. "Our minister keeps remindin' us that the Baptists and Methodists are our brethren, but I wish he'd be a little more anxious to have our society keep ahead of the others."

"Jed's 'bout right in sizin' up the Widdler Tilson," was Mr. Day's third contribution to the argument. "I ain't a readin' man, but from what folks report I should think she was one of them critters that set on rocks bewilderin' an' bewildrin' men folks out o' their senses—syreens, I think they call 'em—a regular syreen is what that woman is, I guess!"

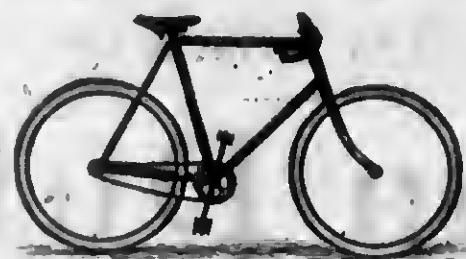

"There, there, Abel, you wouldn't know a syreen if you found one in your baked beans, so don't take away a woman's character on hearsay." And Mrs. Day, having shut up her husband as was her bounden duty as a wife and a Christian, tied her bonnet strings a little tighter and looked distinctly pleased with herself.

"Abel ain't startin' any new gossip," was Aunt Abby's opinion, as she sprang to his rescue. "One or two more holes in a calender don't make much difference—Bartholomew, we're certainly goin' to be late this mornin'; we're about the last team on the road," and Aunt Abby glanced nervously behind. "Elder Boone ain't begun his openin' prayer, though, or we should know it. You can hear him pray a mile away, when the wind's right. I do hate to be late to meetin'." The elder sisters took notice; the folks in the wing pews alters eyes an' stares, and the choir peeks through the curtain, takin' notes of everything you've got on your back. I hope to the land they'll chide and keep together a little more better'n they've done lately. That's all I can say. If the Lord is right in our midst, as the Bible says, he can't think much of our singers this summer."

"They're improvin', now that Piny Waterhouse plays his fiddle," Mrs. Day remarked pacifically. "There was times in the anthem when they kept together considerable well last Sunday. They didn't always chide, but there, they chided some! We're most there now, Abby, don't forget! Cephas won't ring the last bell till he knows his own folks is crossin' the common!"

Those were days of conscientious chiding, and every pew in the house was crowded. The pulpit was built on pillars that raised it six feet higher than the floor. The top was cushioned and covered with red velvet, surmounted by a large gilt edged Bible. There was a window in the tower through which Cephas Cole could look into the church and while tolling the bell could keep watch for the minister. Always exactly on time, he would come in, walk slowly up the right hand aisle, mount the pulpit stairs, enter and close the door after him. Then Cephas would give one tremendous pull to warn listeners on the pews, a pull that meant, "Parson's in the pulpit!" and was acted upon accordingly. Opening the big Bible, the minister raised his right hand impressively, and, saying, "Let us pray," the whole congregation rose to their pews with a great rustling and bowed their heads devoutly for the invocation.

Next came the hymn, generally at that day one of Isaac Watts'. The singers, fifteen or twenty in number, sat in a raised gallery opposite the pulpit, and there was a red in front hung with red curtains to hide them when sitting down. Any one was free to join, which perhaps accounted for Aunt Abby's strictness as to time and tune. Jed Morrill, "blasphemous" as he was considered by that acrimonious lady, was the leader, and a good one too. There would be a great whispering and buzzing when Deacon Sumner, with his big fiddle, and Piny Waterhouse, with his smaller one, would try to get in accord with Humphrey Baker and his clarinet. All went well when Humphrey was there to give the sore keynote, but in his absence Jed Morrill would use his tuning fork. When the key was finally secured by all concerned Jed would raise his stick, beat one measure to set the time, and all joined in or fell in, according to their several abilities. It was not always a perfect thing in the way of a start, but they were well together at the end of the first line, and when, as now, the choir numbered a goodly number of voices and there were 300 or 400 in the pews nothing more inspiring in its peculiar way was ever heard than the congregational singing of such splendid hymns as "Old Hundred," "Lido Street" or "Gloria." Waitstill led the trebles, and Ivory, was of the far end of the choir. In the basses, but each was conscious of the other's presence. This morning he could hear her middle voice rising a little above, or, perhaps, from its quality, separating itself somehow, ever so

Every father wants his boy and girl to learn the lesson of habitual saving.

Do you know, fathers, that one of the best ways to teach your children to save regularly is to have a savings account yourselves?

Let that boy of yours bring your savings deposit to the bank as "regular as clockwork" and he will get the habit himself—he can't help it.

Incidentally a little nest egg will be a good thing for father, too.

little, from the others. How full of strength and hope it was, her voice! How steadfast to the pitch! How golden its color! How moving in its crescendo! How the words flowed from her lips, not as if they had been written years ago, but as if they were the expression of her own faith! There were many in the congregation who were stirred, they knew not why, when there came to be only a few "carry-ing the air" and they could really hear Waitstill Baxter singing some dear old hymn, full of sacred memories, like—

While thou'rt a weak, protecting power,
Be my vain wishes stilled,
And may this consecrated hour
With better hopes be filled.

"There may be them in Boston that can sing louder, and they may be able to turn up a little higher than Waitstill, but the question is, could any of 'em make Aunt Abby Cole shed tears?" This was Jed Morrill's tribute to his best soprano.

There were Sunday evening prayer meetings, too, held at "early candle-light," when Waitstill and Lucy Morrill would make a duet of "My cool Shiloh's shady rill," or the favorite "Nunnet," and the two fresh young voices, rising and falling in the tender thirds of the old times, melted all hearts to new willingness of sacrifice.

STORK BRINGS DAUGHTER

Young Babe Great, Great, Great Granddaughter of the Famous Patrick Henry.

Word has been received by H. P. Parmelee of this city announcing the birth of a daughter to Ensign and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee at Portsmouth, Virginia. The young naval officer is the son of E. F. Parmelee, business manager of The Union, and was married last June to the daughter of Congressman Robert Lee Henry of Texas, the new babe thus being the great, great, great granddaughter of Patrick Henry, the revolutionary patriot and first governor of the State of Virginia.

Ensign Parmelee and wife spent a part of their honeymoon in this city last year at "Breezy Point," the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee.

A New Enterprise.

According to the Daytona Gazette-News, S. C. Archibald and R. L. Pappy of that city have entered into a co-partnership for the manufacture and sale of jellies, preserves and marmalades made from the fruits of that section and will supply the northern market. Mr. Pappy is the son-in-law of William Ranger of this city, having married Miss Maud Ranger, well known here.

DEVELOPMENTS under the Democratic tariff prove that history repeats itself. Things come in cycles. Terrible disasters, as for instance the loss of the Titanic, are, after a little time, almost forgotten, except by those who have suffered personal loss. But it takes about twenty years for us to forget a political disaster. The reason is not difficult to see. Those most active in business affairs twenty years ago are being superseded by others who, twenty years ago, were not old enough to take note of political changes. Thus, the Democratic tariff disaster of twenty years ago, when Cleveland was president, is being repeated to-day under Wilson. Almost identical action in many cases has brought about almost identical results. Business is bad, industrial conditions have slowed down and men are out of work; manufacturers, farmers and workmen are compelled to compete with foreign manufacturers, foreign farmers and cheap foreign labor. But we are waking up to the results of tariff reduction and history is going to repeat itself with the return of Republicans to power. This return will undoubtedly come with the congressional elections this fall.

POLITICAL straws show which way the wind is blowing. General indications point to sweeping Republican victories all over the country this fall. But the two specific instances where judgment has already been passed on the Wilson policies are in the Seventh District of New Jersey and the Twelfth District of Massachusetts. In the former the president wrote a letter asking the people to "pass judgment on the present administration." They took him at his word and elected a Republican to congress, the first time in fourteen years. In the Massachusetts district the Democrats themselves elected a man positively opposed to the president on his tariff repeal policy. Nuff said! You can draw your own conclusions.

WASN'T there something mentioned some time ago about Charlevoix having a six-day Chautauqua this summer? Possibly our good citizens are waiting until they recover from the effects of the coming (?) Fourth of July celebration before this matter is taken up.

So they have at last found a name for Mack Harris, "the pet of Charlevoix county." Better put a bell on him so as to be able to locate him.

PROBLEM of the senior class in math. If it takes the house a month to pass an anti-trust bill, how long will it take the senate?

If the wedding bells would stop ringing for a minute we should like to listen to the songs of Mr. Bryan's peace dove.

By being by the letters read in the various divorce cases, there will always be a large mush crop in this country.

MARRIAGE may be a failure in some cases, but with the advent of twins it becomes a howling success.

Oh, you "Pet."

DEATH TAKES MRS. BYRON

Mother of Mrs. W. J. Pearson Dies in Hospital at Petoskey Thursday.

Mrs. Nettie Byron of Boyne Falls, mother of Mrs. W. J. Pearson, died in the hospital at Petoskey Thursday following a serious operation. She had been taken there a few days previous to her death in the hope that the operation might save her life, but she failed to withstand the shock. She was fifty-seven years and eleven months old.

The remains were taken to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Pearson of Boyne Falls, with whom she had made her home. Funeral services were held Saturday forenoon, Rev. Wm. Shepherd officiating.

Mrs. Byron also has a sister, Mrs. Benjamin Byram, who lives west of Petoskey, and a large circle of friends who regret that she has been taken from them.

Political Announcement.

I wish through the columns of this paper to announce that I am a candidate for the office of sheriff upon the Republican ticket and that my name will appear on the primary ballot at the August primaries. If elected I will give the best that is in me to fulfill the duties of the office. I earnestly solicit the support of the Republican voters of Charlevoix county.

MEET JUNE 29TH

Board of Supervisors Will Equalize Assessment Rolls and Transact Other Business.

The board of supervisors will meet the fourth Monday in June this year. This session of the board is called owing to the meeting of the State Board of Equalization which will be held at Lansing at a later date. The meeting is called for the purpose of equalizing the assessment rolls that the state board may have a basis on which to figure a just valuation for state tax purposes. The board will also select a candidate to meet with the state board of equalization and transact other routine business.

To the Highest Bidder.

Last week's mention of the Baker auction sale stated that "the mowing machines would be sold to the lowest bidder." This was a mistake. The machines will be sold to the highest bidder, as at all auction sales. We have no doubt that the price bid by the highest bidder will be a bargain and in a sense "the lowest price bid" and accepted for mowing machines of the real value of those that will be sold at the sale. Keep the date in mind and attend. The sale will take place on the vacant lots at the rear of the County Bank building and will start at 2 o'clock p. m.

SHIPPING EGGS BY PARCEL POST

This Can Be Done and Good Profit Realized if Care is Taken.

Fresh Eggs from Reputable People Always Bring Top-Notch Market Prices.

That eggs can be marketed successfully by parcel post and that this method frequently secures a better price for the producer and a fresher article for the consumer has now been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the experts in the United States Department of Agriculture. The department conducted tests that covered a period of five months. At the end of that period it came to the conclusion that the parcel post was of particular value to the man whose flock was too small or who lives too far from express service to permit him to ship his eggs in the regular commercial case which holds thirty dozen eggs.

In the course of these experiments the department shipped 9131 eggs in 466 lots. Of these 327, or slightly less than 3.6 per cent., were broken, but only 209, or slightly less than 2.3 per cent., were absolutely wasted. The others, though broken, could still be used. The percentage of breakage, moreover, will be greatly reduced, it is said, when the employees of the post office become more accustomed to handling such fragile matter.

That the eggs should be properly packed is of course essential. This implies time, care and some expense and is one reason why no attempt should be made to market by parcel post any but the finest quality of eggs, for they alone will bring remunerative prices. Moreover, if the customer who buys in small lots finds that any considerable proportion of his purchase is undesirable or even unattractive in appearance he will not trouble to ask for deductions on that account; he will simply discontinue his orders. The producer, therefore, must see to it that all the eggs the postman delivers are what he represents them to be.

This can only be done by candling them. Candling, the process of testing eggs by passing light through them so as to reveal the condition of the contents, is omitted by many producers, who rely on care in collecting to eliminate all bad eggs. It is, however, impossible to avoid an occasional accident and candling is therefore advisable as an extra precaution. A simple outfit can be made out of a small hand lamp and an ordinary pasteboard box sufficiently large to be placed over the lamp after the ends have been removed without risk of fire. In order to supply air to the enclosed lamp notches should be cut in the edge on which the box rests. A round hole is then cut in the box at the level of the lamp flame and the candling done by holding each egg against this hole while the rest of the room is in darkness. The light from the lamp reveals the contents of the egg and those that show any defect can be rejected.

If possible, only infertile eggs should be sent to market. Fertile eggs deteriorate rapidly in warm weather and are the cause of much loss. A broody hen on the nest or accidental exposure to a high temperature may start incubation and cause the egg to spoil, and injure the shipper's reputation. It is advisable, therefore, to retain the fertile eggs for home use or dispose of them in some other way than through the parcel post. This is also true of soiled eggs. Eggs should never be washed when intended for high-class trade, since the process removes a natural mucilaginous coating and opens the pores of the shell.

After this thorough elimination of the unfit eggs that remain should be carefully packed in a container of corrugated metal, pasteboard, metal, wood or other suitable material. The post office regulations require this container to be so wrapped that nothing can escape from the package and each egg in addition to be wrapped separately in excelsior, cotton or some such material. Any soft paper serves the purpose quite well. As for the container itself there are many kinds on the market and the department investigators have not attempted to decide which is the best. Instead they refer inquirers to the various state experiment stations which have available information on this question.

In packing eggs it is well to sort them as far as it is practical according to size and color and to keep for home use those which are irregular in shape, unusually long or thin shelled. Containers that have been badly stained by broken eggs should be replaced by new ones and the package wrapped as neatly as possible. In short, every effort should be made to deliver as attractive a package as possible into the hands of customers. The extra expense will be little and the returns in increased trade great.

The larger the shipments the producer can arrange to make the cheaper can be afforded to sell his eggs. Within the first and second zones of the parcel post service a package costs five cents for the first pound and only one cent for each additional pound. Ordinarily eggs weigh about 1 1/2 pounds a dozen, which with the additional weight of the wrappings and container would make a package of a dozen eggs weigh between two and three pounds. The postage on this would be 7 cents. If another dozen eggs were included in the package the postage would not be more than 9 cents, or 4 1/2 instead of 7 cents a dozen eggs.

To the value of the eggs and the cost of postage must be added the cost of the container and the wrapping. For two dozen eggs this may be estimated at 8 cents. With postage at 9 cents it would, therefore, cost 17 cents to market two dozen eggs, or 8 1/2 cents a dozen. By shipping in ten-dozen lots it is estimated that the marketing cost can be reduced to 4.7 cents a dozen.

Where the container can be used more than once this cost can, of course, be somewhat reduced. Large-sized containers will stand from two to four trips and smaller ones three to five, so that it will pay the producer to induce his customer to return the containers periodically. The postage required for this is deducted from the bill for the next shipment.

Although it is obviously advantageous both to the producer and consumer that the eggs be shipped in large quantities and consequently economically, it must be remembered in taking orders that the supply of eggs undergoes the greatest fluctuations. In times of scarcity it is not good policy for the producer to send all his output to one customer, neglecting his other friends, nor in times of plenty can he expect to dispose of his entire stock to his regular customers. These points must be given due consideration and the quantities that are to be supplied at each season of the year carefully stated in the contract. The price, too, varies with the supply. One good method of determining this is to take as a basis the wholesale price of eggs on the open market and add to this a certain number of cents a dozen for the new-laid parcel post eggs. Care should be taken, however, to see that there is no possibility of any misunderstanding arising in regard to the basic price. To obviate this, the quotations published in a given newspaper or some other similar authority may be accepted.

Eggs are scarcest and highest in the fall. Chickens should, therefore, be hatched early enough to begin laying at this season. Moreover, little difficulty will be experienced then in disposing of the entire outfit and it will in consequence be unprofitable to divert any of the supply to home purposes. This difficulty can be overcome by preserving eggs in the spring, when they are cheap and plentiful. A solution of water glass, which can be obtained at drug stores for 75 cents a gallon, should be used for this purpose, each quart being diluted with ten quarts of water which has been boiled and cured. The eggs should be packed in stone jars or crocks and the solution poured over them, or they may be carefully placed in the solution each day. Eggs kept in this way are perfectly good, but naturally they do not command the prices of those newly-laid. The shells sometimes break in boiling, but this may be avoided by puncturing the end with a pin just before they are dropped into the water.

The only drawback to marketing eggs by parcel post appears to be the time and trouble involved in packing them. This is compensated for by the extra price that can always be obtained for products that are absolutely reliable. At bottom, therefore, the shipper's success depends upon the care with which he safeguards the reputation of his products. Satisfied customers will soon build up his business for him. Any post office will furnish complete information in regard to regulations and rates and, as already stated, the several state experiment stations have information in regard to the various types of shipping boxes.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Give me a calm, a thankful heart,
From every sorrow free,
The blessing of thy grace impart,
And let me live to thee.

How Ivory loved to hear Waitstill sing those lines! How they eased his burden as they were eagles' hars, falling on his languid, longing heart like evening dew on thirsty grass!

CHAPTER X.

The Green Eyed Monster.

WHILE Three I seek, Protection Power," was the first hymn on this particular Sunday morning, and it usually held Patty's rather vagrant attention to the end, though it failed to do so today. The Baxters occupied one of the whig pews, a position always to be envied, as one could see the stagers without turning around and also observe everybody in the congregation—their entrance, garments, behavior and especially their bonnets—without being in the least indiscreet or seeming to have a roving eye.

Lawyer Wilson's pew was the second in front of the Baxters in the same wing, and Patty, seated decorously but unwillingly beside her father, was impatiently awaiting the entrance of the family, knowing that Mark would be with them if he had returned from Boston. Timothy Grant, the parish clerk, had the pew in between and afforded a most edifying spectacle to the community, as there were seven young Grants of a chattering age, and the ladies of the congregation were always counting them, reckoning how many more were in their cradles at home and trying to guess from Mrs. Grant's lively or chastened countenance whether any new ones had been born since the Sunday before.

Patty settled herself comfortably and put her foot on the wooden "creeper," raising her buff calico a little on the congregation side, just enough to show an inch or two of petticoat. The petticoat was as modestly long as the frock itself, and disclosing a bit of it was nothing more heinous than a casual exhibition of good needlework. Deacon Baxter furnished only the unbleached muslin for his daughters' undergarments, but twelve little frocks laboriously dyed by hand, elaborate lace edging, crinkled from white soap suds and stuns of bleaching on the grass in the sun, will make a petticoat that can be shown in church with some justification.

The Wilsons came up the aisle a few moments later than their usual habit, just after the person had ascended the pulpit. Mrs. Wilson always entered the new first and sat in the far end. Patty had looked at her admiringly and with a certain feeling of proprietorship for several Sundays. There was obviously no such desirable mother-in-law in the meeting house. Her changeable silk dress was the latest mode, her shawl of black llama line expressed wealth in every delicate mesh, and her bonnet had a distinction that could only have emanated from Portland or Boston. Ellen Wilson usually came next, with as much of a smile to Patty in passing as she fitted venture in the deacon's presence, and after her sister in her younger sister, Selma, commonly called "Silly," and with considerable reason.

Mark had come home! Patty dared not look up, but she felt his approach behind the others, although her eyes sought the door and her cheeks tinged with signals of abashed but certain welcome. She heard the family settle in their seats somewhat hastily, the click of the new floor and the sound of Lawyer Wilson's cane as he stood in the corner, then the person rose to pray, and Patty closed her eyes with the rest of the congregation.

Opening them when Elder Bone rose to announce the hymn, they fell amazed, resentful, uncomprehending on the spectacle of Mark Wilson finding the place in the book for a strange young woman who sat beside him. Mark himself had on a new suit and wore a seal ring that Patty had never observed before, while the dress, pale and but of the unknown were of a nature that no girl in Patty's position, and particularly of Patty's disposition, could have regarded without a desire to tear them from her person and stamp them underfoot or, better still, fling them herself and show the world how they should be worn!

Mark found the place in the hymn book for the venture, shared it with her, and once when the Grant twins wriggled, and Patty secured a better view, once, Mark shifted his hand on the page so his thumb touched that of his pretty neighbor, who did not remove hers as if she found the proximity either unpleasant or improper. Patty compared her own miserable attire with that of the hated rival in front, and also compared Lawyer Wilson's appearance with that of her father; the former, well dressed in the style of a gentleman of the time, in broadcloth with fine linen, and a tall silk hat carefully placed on the floor of the pew, while Deacon Baxter wore homely wool, of worn from his own sheep, spun and woven, dyed and finished, at the fulling mill in the village, and carried a battered felt hat that had been a matter of ridicule these dozen years. The deacon would be lurked in two coats, too! Morrill always said, for he owned just that number and would be too mean to leave either of 'em behind him.

The sermon was fifty minutes long, time enough for a deal of thinking. Many a housewife, not wholly orthodox, cut and made over all her children's clothes, in imagination, planned the putting up of her fruit, the making of her preserves and pickles, and arranged her meals for the next week, during the progress of those sermons. Patty watched the parson turn leaf after leaf until the final one was reached. Then came the last hymn, when the people stretched their aching limbs and rising, turned their backs on the minister and faced the choir. Patty looked at Waitstill and wished that she could put her throbbing head on her sister's shoulder and cry—mostly with rage. The hymn—this was said, and with the final "Amen" the pews were opened and the worshippers crowded into the narrow aisles and moved toward the doors.

Patty's plans were all made. She was out of her pew before the Wilsons could possibly leave theirs and in her progress down the aisle secretly unsexed her old admirer, old Dr. Perry, as well as his son, Philip. Passing the humbly Cephus and carried him along in her wake, chattering and talking with her little party while her father was at the horse sheds making ready to go home between services, as was his habit, a cold life being always set out on the kitchen table according to his orders.

By means of these clever maneuvers Patty made herself the focus of attention when the Wilson party came out on the steps and vouchsafed Mark only a unobtrusive nod, briefly flagging a little greeting with the nod, just a "How do you do, Mark? Did you have a good time in Boston?"

Patty and Waitstill, with some of the girls who had come long distances, ate their luncheon in a shady place under the trees behind the meeting house, for there was an afternoon service to come, a service with another long sermon. They separated after the modest meal to walk along the common or stray along the road to the academy, where there was a fine view.

Two or three times during the summer the sisters always went quietly and alone to the Baxter burying lot, where three grass grown graves lay beside one another, unmarked save by narrow wooden slabs, so short that the initials painted on them were almost hidden by the tufts of clover. The girls had brought roots of pansies and sweet alyssum and with a knife made holes in the earth and planted them here and there to make the spot a trifle less forbidding. They did not speak to each other during this sacred little ceremony. Their hearts were too full when they remembered a fresh the absence of headstones, the lack of care, in the place where the three women lay who had ministered to their father, borne him children and patiently endured his arbitrary and loveless rule. Even these Flanders' grave—the Edgewood shoemaker, who lay next—even his resting place was marked and, with a touch of some one's imagination, marked by the old man's own lapstone, twenty-five pounds in weight, a monument of his workaday life.

Waitstill rose from her feet, brushing the earth from her hands, and Patty did the same. The churchyard was quiet, and they were alone with the dead, murmured and un-murmured, loved and unloved.

"I planted one or two pansies on the first one's grave," said Waitstill soberly. "I don't know why we've never done it before. There are no children to take notice of and remember her; it's the least we can do, and, after all, she belongs to the family."

"There is no family and there never was," suddenly cried Patty. "Oh, Wally, Wally, we are so alone, you and I. We've only each other in all the world, and I'm not the least bit of help to you as you are to me! I'm a silly, vain, conceited, ill behaved thing."

"Oh, Wally, Wally, we are so alone," but I will be better, I will! You won't ever give me up, will you, Wally, even if I'm not like you? I haven't been 'good lately'!"

"Hush, Patty, hush!" And Waitstill came nearer to her sister with a motherly touch of her hand. "I'll not have you say such things. You are the help-fullest and truest and the best company keeper."

"No one is so kind to me," Patty responded, although she was not a bit consoled.

It was not until that Patty would not be taken for her in early May. The drive to and from the city had been quick and the memory had not been so bad. The kiss was indeed a decisive factor in the situation and had shed a rosy, if somewhat light of romance over the past three weeks. Perhaps even the kiss, had it never been repeated, might have helped into its true perspective the sudden appearance of the stranger in the Wilson pew. The moment that Patty's gaze fell upon that fashionably dressed, instantaneously disliked girl, Marjory Wilson's stock rose twenty points in the market. She ceased in a jiffy to weigh and consider and criticize the young man, but regarded him with wholly new eyes. His figure was better than she had realized, his smile more interesting, his manners more attractive, his eyes—longer, in a word, he had suddenly grown desirable. A month ago she could have observed with idle and alien curiosity the spectacle of his thumb drawing nearer to another thumb, and then the girl's thumb smartly and soundly as it deserved.

The ignorant cause of Patty's distress was a certain Annabel Franklin, the daughter of a cousin of Mrs. Wilson's. Mark had stayed at the Franklin house during his three weeks' visit in Boston, where he had gone on business for his father. The young people had naturally seen much of each other and Mark's infatuation fancy had been so kindled by Annabel's doll-like charms that he had persuaded her to accompany him to his home and get a taste of country life in Maine. Such is man, such is human nature and such is life, that Mark had no sooner got the wilful subject of his affections under his own roof than she began to pull. Annabel was twenty-three, and, to tell the truth, she had pulled before more than once. She was so amiable, so well finished—with her smooth flaxen hair, her neat nose, her lighthouse of a mouth and her trig shape—that she appealed to the opposite sex quite generally and irresistibly as a worthy helpmate. The only trouble was that she began to love her suitors somewhat too early in the game, and they never got far enough to propose marriage. Flaws in her apparent perfection appeared from day to day and child the growth of the various young loves that had bided so long and loyally. She always agreed with everybody and everything in sight, even to the point of changing her mind on the instant if circumstances seemed to make it advisable. Her instinctive point of view, when she went so far as to hold one, was somewhat cut and dried—in a word, prigish. Her father had an ample fortune, and some one would inevitably turn up who would regard Annabel as an altogether worthy and desirable spouse. That was what she had seemed to Mark Wilson for a full week before he left the Franklin house in Boston, but there were moments now when he regretted, fugitively, that he had ever renounced her from her proper sphere. She did not seem to fit into the conditions of life in Edgewood, and it may even be that her most glaring fault had been to describe Patty Baxter's hair at this very Sunday dinner as "warrior," her dress altogether "dreadful" and her style of beauty "unladylike." Ellen Wilson's feelings were somewhat injured by these criticisms of her intimate friend, and, in discussing the matter privately with her brother, he was inclined to agree with her.

And this, so little do we know of the frankness of the blind dog, thus was Annabel Franklin working for her rival's best interests, and, instead of revelling in her set and trailing her tail, she was actually helping her to get rid of her.

Waitstill rose from her feet, brushing the earth from her hands, and Patty did the same. The churchyard was quiet, and they were alone with the dead, murmured and un-murmured, loved and unloved.

WAYS OF SERVING BACON.

BREAKFAST MENU.

Fruit
Canned Muffins.
Broiled Bacon.
Salted Potatoes.
Coffee.

BOILED bacon, properly prepared, is exceedingly good, and it makes an excellent appetizer for serving with other viands.

Chicken Livers With Bacon.—Clean the livers and cut each liver in six pieces. Wrap a thin slice of bacon around each piece and fasten with a small skewer. Put in a boiler, place over a dripping pan and bake in a hot oven until the bacon is crisp, turning once during the cooking.

Crispily Browned.

Broiled Bacon.—Grease an iron pan with lard and heat it to the smoking point. Then put in the slices of bacon. Tip the pan at a sharp angle, so that the fat will run down, and with a fork keep the pieces of bacon from dropping into the fat. Turn them two or three times until they are crisp and dry and golden brown. Broiled bacon served with eggs makes a dainty breakfast dish for spring mornings.

Macaroni and Bacon.—Boil short lengths of macaroni in salted water until they are tender. Drain and mix a little butter with them. This keeps them from sticking together. Put them in a buttered baking dish and pour over them some thick cream sauce and season with salt and paprika. Chop some freshly broiled crisp bacon and put it into the macaroni, sprinkle the whole with buttered crumbs and bake.

Wholesome and Palatable.

Apples and Bacon.—Slice the bacon and fry it, letting the fat drain down into one side of the pan. Then put the slices of bacon on a little wire rack on a plate or pan in an open oven, where they will keep warm. Cut apples in half inch slices and fry them on each side in the bacon fat. Drain them for a moment on brown paper and then serve them with a slice or two of bacon on each piece of apple. The slices should be left on and the cores removed with an apple corer.

Bacon and Cheese Toast.—In a saucepan melt three tablespoons of butter and stir in a tablespoonful of a half of flour. Then add three-quarters of a cupful of rich milk and stir until it thickens. In the meantime broil two slices of bacon for each person and toast a slice of thin brown bread toast for each. When the cream sauce is thick and smooth add half a cupful of grated cheese and as soon as it is melted pour the mixture over the slices of toast. Put two slices of the bacon on each piece and serve at once.

Safety First

"Safety First!" What should it mean to the Motorist?"

"Safety First" should mean that his car is simplest to drive.

French Government laboratory tests, comparing the vital parts of the Ford with the vital parts of a high-priced French car, proved the Ford to be thirty per cent stronger than the best built French car. We hold the French Government's certificate attesting this fact.

More than a half-million Fords in world-wide service have proved the French tests to be correct.

The Ford is strongest—and therefore safest.

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as light as is compatible with utmost strength.

Ford Vanadium steel—by laboratory test and by actual service test—is not only strongest but is also lightest.

The lighter the car the easier it is to control. And ease of control means "Safety First."

A light car can go with perfect safety where a heavy car might be in serious danger.

The Ford is the lightest—and therefore safest. "Safety First" should mean that his car is simplest to drive.

The Ford Planetary transmission keeps the motor always "hitched" to the car. There is no shifting of gears to "hook up" the car with the motor—no bother—no levers to manipulate in a crisis. Simply a touch of the foot to the pedal and the Ford is off.

The powerful Ford foot brake—to say nothing of the emergency brake—will stop the car almost instantly from any speed.

The Ford "picks up" backs up and "gets away" faster than any other car—a big advantage in an emergency.

The Ford ease of control makes it the safest car for congested streets of the city as well as uncertain country roads.

The Ford is easiest to control—and therefore safest.

These are some of the "Safety First" reasons why 145,707 Fords were bought between last October and the first of May this year.

The Ford is the "Safety First" car.

Many Impositors Engaged in the Attempt to Cure the Liquor Habit—Unscrupulous Methods Adopted—If Restoration Can be Affected at All the Keeley Cure is Looked Upon as the Only Genuine Remedy.

Many worthless cures for the liquor and drug habits are continually springing up, blazoning for a while like a comet in a firmament and then disappearing never again to return. If they do any good besides getting hard-earned dollars from the credulous, suffering humanity no one knows anything about it.

"Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever," writes the sublime Tompkins. And so it is with the Keeley treatment. These institutes give value received. Naturally, the wonderful success that has attended this treatment has caused the advent of charlatans without number, but fortunately their career is brief. It is unnecessary to enter into a minute account of the Keeley treatment, its discovery after long years of research by the late Dr. Leslie E. Keeley and its phenomenal success in eradicating the liquor and drug habit. The medicines given here— which, by the way, is the only institute of its kind endorsed by the United States government—and throughout the country have been the means of curing nearly a half million people, among which are classified persons in all stages of life, but when one runs across a number of impositors who even purloin the literature of the Keeley people and republish it as their own it is only fair to the public and to the Keeley treatment to state emphatically that this is the only cure extant known for liquor and morphine and other drug habits.

Here the patients find all the comforts of home while undergoing treatment. The treatment is not only pleasant, but it is the means of eradicating the desire for liquor within a few days, builds up the shattered system and effects a complete cure within four weeks. If one who has taken the Keeley treatment ever returns to drink it will not be because he craves for it, but because of associations or false confidence in himself. No one had a craving for the first drink he had ever taken in his life. And the Keeley treatment virtually places a man in the same position as far as any craving is concerned as he was before he ever took a drink.

Naturally all the patients who go to the Keeley institute have badly shattered nerves, and it is of importance to build up this system as it is to eradicate the alcoholic effects and place the tissues in a healthy condition.

Before taking any treatment for either the liquor or drug addiction investigate thoroughly the treatment administered at the Keeley Institute, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Write, phone or call. All correspondence is strictly confidential.

STORK SURPRISE THEM

Arrives During Evening of Celebration of Grandfather's Birthday.

Friends and relatives to the number of about twenty-five gathered at the home of Henry Dixon, Sr., Thursday evening, June 11, to help him celebrate his 63rd birthday.

Mr. Dixon is one of Charlevoix county's well known and prosperous farmers, and the event was one that was thoroughly enjoyed both by himself and the guests present.

Before the guests had departed from the scene of the evening's festivities, it was announced that another guest had arrived, a little late, but still in time to greet the many friends present before their departure. A hurried call had been sent for the family physician and about eleven o'clock the stork brought a fine baby girl to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dixon, Jr. The arrival of the late guest made the event one of extraordinary interest to Grandpa Dixon.

Hill! Bang! Hurrah for the Fourth!

Broke His Arm.

While Carlton Oberlin, the young grandson of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Dodge, and a number of playmates were playing ball near the store Thursday, the ball lodged in a tree and Carlton climbed into the tree after it. He slipped and fell, fracturing his right arm just above the elbow. The injury, while not serious, is a very painful one.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY ON DIFFICULTIES OF THE RICH.

Mark 10:17-31—June 21.
"Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Luke 16:13.

It must have been an ethereal sight for Jesus' disciples to see a rich young ruler run after the Master and kneel at His feet, saying, "Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" The Great Teacher did not answer directly, but inquired why the title good was applied to Him. He would have the young man notice that everything really good must in some way be in accordance with God.

There were only two ways in which Jesus could be viewed. Either He was as He claimed, the Son of God come into the world on a special mission for humanity; or else He was a deceiver, misrepresenting Himself and deceiving the people. Jesus wished the young man to consider the force of his own expression and decide at once this important question.

Narrow Way—Self-Sacrifice.

What did Jesus mean by telling the young man that the way to everlasting life was the keeping of the commandments? We reply that God's promise to Israel was, "He that doeth these things shall live by the doing of them." All Jews understood this; and this young ruler confessed that he had been striving to live according to this rule, and yet he was dying.

Like the remainder of the race Jesus' answer signified, "You should not only strive to keep the Law, but you must be a sacrificer, take up your cross and follow Me." Example.

We are not hastily to suppose that Jesus meant that riches should be given away recklessly. Had the young man agreed to the terms and asked the Lord how best to distribute his wealth, doubtless the Lord would have said, "Give it all to God; and then as His steward distribute it according to the wisdom which He will give you." Even this full surrender of earthly possessions would not be sufficient. Who even would gain a place in the Kingdom must become active in the Lord's service, and follow patiently in the narrow way of self-sacrifice, in the Redeemer's footsteps.

Sorrowful! For Very Rich.

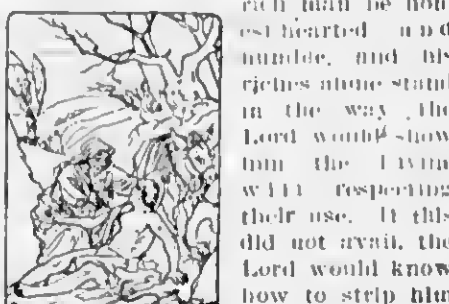

The young ruler's riches were not of themselves harmful. The difficulty was that he had set his heart upon them so that when the test came he demonstrated that he loved God less than he loved his wealth. He forsook the opportunity to do the greatest good, and thus turned his back upon membership in the Kingdom class. We are not, however, to understand that there is no hope for him. Even while unobscured the Kingdom opportunities, he may be one of those blessed by the Kingdom.

Few Rich in the Kingdom.

The rich young ruler's failure to become a disciple on Jesus' terms furnished a text for Jesus. He said to His disciples, "It is easier for a camel to go through the Needle's Eye than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of God."—Matthew 19:24.

The Needle's Eye was a small gate or opening in a large gate in the city wall. The gates were closed at night for protection against robbers; and watchmen were on duty. An arrangement was made, however, for travelers who failed to reach the gate before it was closed. The Needle's Eye was just large enough to permit a camel to go through after having been unloaded. Thus understood, Jesus taught that a rich man could enter the Kingdom of God only by giving up all to the Lord. The amazed disciples inquired, "Who then can be saved?" The rich seemingly had all opportunities of time, influence and money to enable them to give better service to the Lord than could others; and if they would have such difficulty in getting into the Kingdom, how would it be with those less favored?

Jesus answered, "All things are possible with God." That is to say, if a rich man be heartbroken and humble, and his riches alone stand in the way, the Lord would show him the way with respect to their use. It did not avail, the Lord would know how to strip him of his wealth, even as the master would unload the camel to permit it to pass through the Needle's Eye.

The Samaritan Neighbor.

"We Have Left All!"

St. Peter seemed to get the thought that John-baptism in the Messianic Kingdom would mean a full surrender to God. He said, "We have left all, and have followed Thee." Jesus did not fully endorse this statement. Jesus had not nearly left all. In St. Peter himself some self-will still remained, and self-pre-emption would lead him to deny his Master, later on. But Jesus' answer fully covered the question, not only for the Apostles, but for all who have become followers of Jesus, from that day in all time.

Persecution at the hands of the world is sure to come; but everything sacrificed for the Lord is compensated a hundred-fold.

ONE OF THE BEST EVER HELD

This is Opinion Expressed by Those Who Attended Pomona Grange.

Six Candidates Obligated and Instructed in the Mysteries of the Fifth Degree.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange, No. 4, met with Boyne River Grange at the town hall in Boyne Falls and to say that a good time was had would be but to express it very mildly. It was said by many that it was the most enjoyable and instructive meeting ever held in this part of the state.

J. C. Ketcham, the State Master, was there and gave two very fine addresses, one on purely grange matters and the other on "Problems of Rural Life."

After the afternoon program, consisting of many musical numbers and short talks by several of the grangers, including Bro. Maxwell, Master of Emmet County Pomona Grange, Bro. Ketcham held a school of instruction for the benefit of subordinate masters and others who are interested in the secret work of the order.

The violin solos given by W.A. Davol, accompanied by his wife on the piano, were much enjoyed, as was also the singing of Mrs. Dr. Conkle and the Misses Hubbard, Elma Doyle and Barbara Shepard.

Six candidates - Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Perry, E. W. Abbott, W. J. Pearson and Mr. and Mrs. James McNeal - were obligated and instructed in the mysteries of the fifth degree by Worthy Master Ketcham.

Ironton Grange was declared banner grange for the quarter ending March 31, with 110 points, and Bay Shore Grange second, with 90 points.

The time and place of the next meeting was left in the hands of the executive committee, but it is thought that the meeting will be held with Horton Bay Grange some time in August.

BIG FEATURES OF CHAUTAUQUA

To Be Held in Charlevoix Six Days,
August 12 to 18.

Two-day Musical Festival One of the Innovations—Ben Greel Players.

Announcement has just been authorized of the principal features of the Redpath Chautauqua here for this season, from August 12th to August 18th. The program is brim full of good things and not a few innovations. There will not be a dull hour from start to finish.

One of the innovations will be a two-day grand musical festival, during which there will be nothing but music, aside from the literary lectures of the morning hour speaker.

On one day of this festival Marcus A. Kellerman, the great dramatic baritone, who has appeared in solos with the Damrosch Orchestra, the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra and other widely known organizations, will give a recital. Mr. Kellerman has a solo appeared in grand opera at Berlin and other foreign cities and gave up a promising career in grand opera to engage in leader and oratorio singing.

On the evening of the same day the Cathedral Choir will appear in one of their musical programs. The repertoire of the Cathedral Choir includes short modern oratorios by such composers as Buck, Stainer and Schnecker, also a number of old hymns, secular solos, duets, quartets and choruses of a very high order, finally closing with a finale of an operatic nature.

On the next day of this festival Bohumir Kyril and his world-famous band will present a program in the afternoon, including cornet solos by Mr. Kyril. This is the third season of Mr. Kyril and his band on the Redpath Chautauquas this year, there being a unanimous call for them everywhere.

In the evening of the same day Kyril and his band will be heard in another concert during the first part of the program and the latter part will be given up to selections from grand opera by the Denton Grand Opera Company accompanied by the band. These grand opera players will appear in special costume. In fact, it will be a grand finale to these two days such as has never before been seen at a chautauqua.

Another announcement which will be greeted with interest and enthusiasm is the coming of the Ben Greel Players. This company made the tour of 110 Redpath chautauquas last season and this season will appear on 130. There will be thirteen actors in the company, including Percival Vivian, who made so many friends on the chautauquas of last season.

All Ben Greel plays are given with the minimum stage effect. There is nothing to detract attention from the play itself. Every actor is experienced and each plays his part with the sole purpose of depicting the character exactly as it should be. Correct diction and pronunciation are a distinguishing characteristic of the Ben Greel players.

A special feature of the opening day will be a concert by the Dunbar Quartet and Bell Ringers. Carrying a peal of 200 bells made in Europe, this company will furnish a program of interest to old and young.

This opening concert will be given in three parts. One part will include vocal quartet selections, the second will consist of instrumental numbers on violin, cello and piano, and the third division will include the famous bell ringing.

The Kellogg-Haines Singing Party will present in special costume an evening of light opera, probably giving the entire rendition of "Lovely Galatea." This organization is one of the best-known in the lyceum and chautauqua world to-day.

One of the several lecturers who will speak here chautauqua week is to deal with the Japanese problem in this country, a subject which has been discussed a great deal during the past year and yet one upon which people outside of California are but little informed.

Montville Flowers, under the theme of "Color Guard and Picket Line," will fully discuss this important subject.

Having lived in Ohio and California Mr. Flowers has been able to study the Japanese problem from the viewpoint of both eastern and western people. He mentions the fact that 65,000 of the 75,000 Japanese in the United States live in California. In 1878 the number was scarcely 100.

The usual emphasis will be placed chautauqua week on work among the children. Each chautauqua will have a woman playground worker and storyteller. The playground work will be free to all children.

Especially attention will be paid to the Sunday programs and their appropriateness to the spirit of the day. In all places where the Denton Grand Opera Company appear on Sunday they will present selections from the oratorios. All cities where the Kellogg-Haines Singing Party's dates come on Sunday they, too, will present a sacred program.

Other announcements will be made as soon as to other lecturers and musical companies which are coming chautauqua week.

"Backward, turn backward, oh Time in your flight, give us a girl with skirts not so tight; give us a girl whose charms, many or few, are not exposed by too much peek-a-boo; give us a girl, no matter what age, who won't use the street for a vaudeville stage; give us a girl not too sharply in view, dress her in skirts the sun can't shine through. And give us the dances of days gone by with plenty of clothes and steps not so high; put turkey trot capers and hutter-milk slides, hurdy-gurdy twists and wiggletail glides and other such bunny-hugs all on a level as products of hell inspired by the devil. And let us feast our optics once more on the pure, sweet woman of the days of yore. Yes, Time turn backward and grant our request for God's richest blessing, but not undressed."

CORRUPT PRACTICE LAW OF MICHIGAN

New Law Limits Candidates as to Expenditure of Money.

Workers at the Polls and Ward Healers Put Out of Business—Some of the Sections.

Although the corrupt practice law of Michigan permits candidates for office to expend certain sums for political purposes, workers at the polls, heelers, and others who in years past managed to make a portion of their living by serving some candidate or party, will now be cut off from their income according to the provisions of the law, which are as follows:

"Section 3. No candidate and no treasurer of any political committee shall pay, give or lend, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for any nomination or election expenses whatever, except for the following purposes:

"First, for traveling, expenses and personal expenses incident thereto, for printing, stationary, advertising, postage, expressage, freight, telephone and public messenger services.

"Second, for dissemination of printed information to the public;

"Third, for political meetings, demonstrations and conventions;

"Fourth, for the rent, maintenance and furnishing of offices;

"Fifth, for the payments of clerks, typewriters, stenographers, janitors, and messengers actually employed;

"Sixth, for the employment of challengers at primaries and elections, to the number allowed by law as such;

"Seventh, for the pay of public speakers and musicians at public meetings, and their necessary traveling expenses;

"Eighth, for copying and classifying of election registers or poll lists and investigating the right to vote of the persons listed of registered therein, and conducting proceeding to purge the registers and lists and prevent improper or unlawful registration or voting;

"Ninth, for making canvasses of voters;

"Tenth, for conveying infirm or disabled voters to and from the polls;

"Eleventh, for employing as counsel, attorneys licensed to practice in accordance with the laws of the state, and for the necessary expenses of such counsel.

"None of the provisions of this act shall be construed as relating to the rendering of services by speakers, writers, publishers or others for which no compensation is asked or given."

SHOULD USE THE KING ROAD DRAG

And Put Roads on Lake Shore Drive in Better Condition.

Methods Used to Keep Roads in Good Shape in Other Localities of the State.

The State Pike Road from Chicago to Mackinac, laid out along the west shore of Grand Traverse Bay and Lake Michigan, could be made more attractive for the highway commission and others in charge of this work if the farmers along the line were alive to their interests.

Many of them want to sell their farms, but somehow they do not try to make any effort to captivate buyers, which could be done by planting trees, painting their buildings, setting out small fruit, berries, etc., and making the roads better. In some sections where it is much more difficult to make good roads than it is in Antrim or Charlevoix counties they use the King road drag and after a rain a farmer hitches to it and goes up and down the road a few times in front of his own farm, leaving it at a point where the adjoining farmer hitches onto it and he does the same thing with the drag and leaves it for the next adjoining farmer, and this drag surely does the work.

Such a drag was made for the township of Charlevoix and the road superintendents used it to an advantage. Another drag was almost made "and given to the town of Norwood. There are some farmers in Norwood township who also say that the drag is a good thing and that it does good work, but the last time the editor of this paper went down the pike it was lying alongside the road neglected and will in a short time be beyond repair, the same as many agricultural implements are left just where they were last used until they are needed the following year.

It is not necessary to make any remarks concerning the results of the use, or rather misuse, of farm tools. The King road drag is a great road builder and the cheapest way any road can be built. It crows the middle of the road so that all water runs off, fills up the chuck holes and levels down the humps, and until our state roads are built there is really no other way that roads can be kept in good condition. Good roads mean to the farmer (who has anything to haul) a saving of from 50 to 100 percent on each load hauled.

Good roads mean an increased valuation in farm property, a better community to live in and more salable lands if you should wish to dispose of them, and we believe if we lived on a road which would in all probability become a state pike we would see that the road in front of our farm was put into first-class condition for the coming trial trip from Traverse City to Petoskey along the lake shore on July 11th, as this will surely be a deciding case, and no case is ever won until it has been tried.

Just a word to the wise along the Lake Shore pike.

AUTO BANDITS

Local Officers Notified to Keep Sharp Watch for Big Chalmers Car.

The local police officers have been notified to keep strict watch for a green Chalmers automobile bearing an Indiana license tag, which was stolen in Chicago last Friday.

The car was seen in Cadillac Sunday and was chased by the sheriff of that county, who was unable to get near enough to it to stop them. Later in the day the stolen car arrived at Traverse City, but had obtained gasoline and left before the officers had gotten track of it.

While at Traverse City employees of the garage where the gasoline purchase was made noticed a revolver and a box of cartridges in the seat.

The men had a blue print map with the route from Chicago to Petoskey mapped out on it. Sunday night they were seen entering Mancelona, but the officers there failed to stop them. Since then no trace has been learned of their whereabouts. A reward of $100 is offered for their capture.

A potluck supper will be served and a good attendance is desired.

WEDDING BELLS AGAIN RING OUT

Two Prominent Young Charlevoix People Unite in Marriage.

Wedding of Dorothy W. Iddings and George A.
Crouter Took Place Tuesday Evening.

Tuesday evening at 8:00 o'clock at the home of the bride occurred the wedding of Miss Dorothy Winthrop Iddings, daughter of Mrs. H. L. Iddings, and Mr. George A. Crouter, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Crouter. The ceremony was beautiful in its simplicity and one of the interesting social functions of the season. Rev. Quinton Walker, pastor of the M. E. church, performed the ceremony, which was witnessed by about one hundred guests.

Before the ceremony "The Dawn" was rendered by Mrs. J. Gaskin, Jr., sister of the bride, and Miss Nina Bennett sang "Be Thou Faithful After the Marriage." The bridal party entered to the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, sung by a quartet consisting of Mrs. J. Gaskin, Jr., Miss Irene Finucan and Mrs. Frank and Allen Wilkinson, and made its way to the west room, where the groom and his best man, Hugo Hampton, and the officiating clergyman awaited them. The bridesmaid, Miss Irene Harsha, then entered and was followed by the maid of honor, Miss Horatio Iddings, a younger sister of the bride, and the bride on the arm of her uncle, Mr. Charles Gale of Calumet, followed. The other members of the party then came forward and formed a circle. The ribbon bearers were Miss Clara Wilkinson and Master Richard Everett Hall, cousins of the bride. Master Frank Waterman acted as ring bearer, carrying the ring in a white rosebud. The ring service was used in full.

The bride wore a gown of white crepe de meten, en train. She carried a bouquet of rosebuds and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid and the maid of honor were gowned in pink crepe de chene with rosebud trimmings and rose pink with lace over-dress. The bride was given away by her uncle, Charles Gale of Calumet.

The room in which the ceremony was performed was artistically decorated in green, with pink and white peonies. After the ceremony a reception was held and refreshments served.

The out-of-town guests were Mrs. Wm. H. Leaf, Mrs. Eugene Hall and Master Richard Hall of Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. Chas. Shepard of Benton Harbor; (Continued on page 4.)

RULES FOR BORROWING MONEY

Department of Agriculture Issues Bulletin on This Important Subject.

Many Farmers Suffer as Much from Too Much Credit as from Too Little Credit.

Five rules designed to convince farmers that there is no magic about credit are set down in Farmers' Bulletin 593, "How To Use Farm Credit," which the Department of Agriculture has just published. Unless the farmer who is thinking of borrowing money fully understands these rules and is willing to be guided by them, the government's advice to him is: Don't. As it is, there are probably almost as many farmers in this country who are suffering from too much as from too little credit. Of these rules the three most important are:

1. Make sure that the purpose for which the borrowed money is to be used will produce a return greater than needed to pay the debt.

2. The length of time the debt is to run should have a close relation to the productive life of the improvement for which the money is borrowed.

3. Provision should be made in long-time loans for the gradual reduction of the principal.

The first rule is, of course, the key to the wise use of credit. Between borrowing money, to spend on one's self, and borrowing money to buy equipment of some sort with which to make more money there is all the difference between folly and foresight, extravagance and thrift. If the money is borrowed for a wise purpose it will produce enough to pay back principal and interest and leave a fair margin of profit for the borrower into the bargain. If it is borrowed for a foolish purpose it will produce nothing and consequently there will be nothing with which to repay the loan. From this point of view it matters comparatively little whether the interest be high or low. It is the repayment of the principal that is the chief difficulty.

Rules 2 and 3 deal with the most satisfactory ways of repayment. Underneath them both is the same principle: The loan must be repaid with the money it earns itself. For example, if the money is used to buy a machine that will last ten years the machine must earn enough in that time to pay for itself or it never will. The loan, therefore, should be entirely repaid before the ten years are up or the farmer will lose money on the transaction, paying out interest for no benefit in return. On the other hand, if too early a date is set for repayment the machine will not have had sufficient opportunity to make the requisite money and the borrower may have difficulty in raising it elsewhere. Rule 3 provides for some form of amortization, the system by which the principal is repaid in instalments so that the amount of the loan is continually diminishing and in consequence the interest charges also. Such a system is quite feasible when the loan is really productive, when it returns to the borrower a definite revenue each year. Tables showing the payments required to payoff principal and interest in varying periods of time are appended to the bulletin and are recommended to the serious consideration of everyone who contemplates borrowing money. The bulletin also advises the farmer to secure the lowest possible interest. At first sight this seems too obvious to be worth mentioning. Of course, the interest should be as small as possible. Everybody knows that—except the lender. But if the other rules are observed, if the borrower manages his financial affairs soundly, he will be surprised to find how much easier it is to obtain favorable terms. The right kind of lender does not want to foreclose mortgages; he wants his money back with a fair profit, like any other merchant. For money that is sure to be repaid, he charges low interest.

This, in fact, is why the government has published these rules for borrowers. It is not so much a matter of driving a shrewd bargain as it is of observing a few fundamental principles which alone can make credit a blessing and not a curse.

Street Improvements.

The grading of the north end of Michigan avenue is completed and in shape for the top dressing of trap rock. Other streets on the Crouter addition have been graded and made passable, an improvement which will be greatly appreciated by residents of that district.

the effectiveness or failure of this work. If one wanted to wait until the plants had ripened he could do the work in August. The hollow stalks would fill up with water from the rain and rot the plants, it is said, but in the meantime the plants have seeded the country and caused too much mischief.

Well-known Charlevoix county farmers have emphatically declared that the right time to cut the plants is when the sign is in the heart, which will be on the 25th of this month. They say that it would have been still better had the cutting been done at that time in May, but that it is effective any month when that sign is in the ascendancy. This sign is good for killing other noxious weeds, also, and some even say it is the right time to kill underbrush.

There is no harm in trying it on the thistles, as they should be cut anyway during the season, if one wants to destroy them at all. Probably the sign has nothing to do with the death of the plant. It is more than likely that if it is successful it is because the strength of the plant is all in the stalk at this time of its growth, or life, and by cutting it down the roots have not vitality enough to bring forth another stalk.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

BY
KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father. Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochran, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Haying time arrives.

CHAPTER XI.

Haying Time.

EVERYBODY in Riverboro, Edge-wood, Milliken's Mills, Spruce Swamp, Duck Pond and Moderation was "haying." There was a perfect frenzy of haying, for it was the Monday after the Fourth, the precise date in July when the Maine farmer said goodbye to repose and "hayed" desperately and unceasingly until every spear of green in his section was mowed down and safely under cover.

If a man had grass of his own he cut it, and if he had none he assisted in cutting that of some other man, for "to hay," although an unconventional verb, was, and still is, a very active one and in common circulation, although not used by the grammarians.

Whatever your trade and whatever your profession, it counted as might in good weather. The fish man stopped selling fish, the meat man ceased to bring meat, the cobbler as well as the judge forsook the bench, and even the doctor made fewer visits than usual. The wage for work in the hay-fields was a high one, and every man, boy and horse in a village was pressed into service.

When Ivory Boynton had finished with his own small crop he commonly went at once to Lawyer Wilson, who had the largest acreage of hay land in the township. Ivory was always in great demand, for he was a mighty worker—the field and a very glint at "pity" being able to pick up a fair salary by working at one stroke of the fork and fling it on to the cart as if it were a feather.

Lawyer Wilson always took a hand himself if signs of rain appeared, and Mark occasionally visited the scene of action when a crowd in the field made a general jollification or when there was an impending thunder-storm.

In such cases even women and girls joined the workers and all hands bent together to the task of getting a load into the barn and covering the rest.

Deacon Baxter was wont to cull Mark Wilson a "worthless, whey-faced, lily-handed whelp," but the description, though picturesque, was decidedly exaggerated. Mark disliked manual labor, but having inherited enough knowledge of law in his father's office to be an excellent clerk, he much preferred traveling about, settling the tails of small cases, collecting rents and had bills, in any form of work on a farm. This sort of life, on stage-coaches and railway trains or on long driving trips with his own fast "trout-ter," suited his adventurous disposition and gave him a sense of importance that was very necessary to his peace of mind. He was not especially intimate with Ivory Boynton, who studied law with his father during all vacations and in every available hour of leisure during term time, as did many another young New England schoolmaster.

Mark's father's praise of Ivory's legal ability was a little too warm to please his son, as was the commendation of one of the county court judges on Ivory's preparation of a brief in a certain case to the Wilson office. Ivory had drawn it up at Mr. Wilson's request merely to show how far he understood the law and cases he was studying, and he had no idea that it differed in any way from the work of any other student. All the same, Mark's own efforts in a like direction had never received any special mention.

When he was in the field he also kept as far as possible from Ivory, because there, too, he felt a superiority that made him for the moment a trifle disconcerted. It was no particular pleasure for him to see Ivory plunge his fork deep into the heart of a bay-cock, take a firm grasp of the handle, thrust forward his foot to steady himself and then raise the great fragrant bump slowly and swing it up to the waiting hay cart amid the applause of the crowd.

Rodman would be there, too, helping the man on top of the load and getting nearly buried each time as the mass descended upon him, but doing his slender best to distribute and tread it down properly, while his young heart glowed with pride at Cousin Ivory's prowess.

Independence day had passed, with its usual gayeties for the young people, in none of which the Baxter family had joined, and now, at 11 o'clock on this burning July morning, Waitstill was driving the old mare past the Wilson farm on her way to the river field.

Her father was working there, together with the two hired men whom he took on for a fortnight during the height of the season. If mowing, raking, pitching and carting of the precious crop could only have been done at odd times during the year or at night he would not have embittered the month of July by paying out money for labor. But nature was inexorable in the ripening of hay, and Old Fogy was obliged to succumb to the inevitable.

Waitstill had a basket packed with luncheon for three and a great demijohn of cool ginger tea under the wagon seat. Other farmers sometimes served hard cider or rum, but her father's principles were dead against this riotous extravagance. Temperance, in any and all directions, was cheap, and the demon was a very temperate man, save in language.

The fields on both sides of the road were full of haymakers, and everywhere there was bustle and stir. There would be three or four men—one leading, the others following—slowly swinging their way through a noble piece of grass, and the smell of the mown fields in the sunshine was sweeter than honey in the comb.

There were patches of black-eyed Susans in the meadows here and there, white phlox and white hardhack grew by the road, with day lilies and blossoming milkweed. The bobolinks were thrushes in the alder bushes and orioles in the tops of the elms, and Waitstill's heart overflowed with joy at being in such a world of midsummer beauty, though life during the great heat and incessant work of haying time was a little more rigorous than usual.

The extra food needed for the hired men always kept her father in a state of mind closely resembling insanity. Coming downstairs to cook breakfast, she would find the coffee or tea measured out for the pot. The increased consumption of milk angered him beyond words, because it lessened the supply of butter for sale.

Everything that could be made with butter was ordered so to be done, and nothing but water could be used in making the raised bread. The corn-cake must never have an egg; the pie crust must be shortened only with lard or with a mixture of lard and dripping, and so on, and so on, eternally.

When the girls were respectively seventeen and thirteen, Waitstill had begged a small plot of ground for them to use as they liked, and beginning at that time, they had gradually made a little garden, with a couple of fruit trees and a thicket of red, white and black currants, raspberry and black-berry bushes.

For several summers now they had added enough of their own fruit to buy a pair of shoes or gloves, a scarf or a hat, but even this tiny income was beginning to be meager. The deacon positively suffered as he looked at that odd corner of earth, not any bigger than his barn door, and saw what his girls had done with no tools but a spade and a hoe and no help but their own hands. He had no leisure (so he growled) to cultivate and fertilize ground for small fruits and no money to pay a man to do it, yet here was food grown under his very eye and it did not belong to him!

The girls worked in their garden chiefly at sunrise in spring and early summer or after supper in the evening. All the same, Waitstill had been told by her father the day before that she was not only using ground, but time that belonged to him, and that he should expect her to provide "pity pills" out of her garden patch during paying to help satisfy the ravenous appetites of that couple of "great, gorming, greedy lubbers" that he was hiring this year. He had stopped the peeling of potatoes before boiling because he disapproved of the thickness of the parings he found in the pig's pail, and he stood over Patty at her work in the kitchen until Waitstill was in daily fear of a temper of some sort.

Coming in from the shed one morning she met her father just issuing from the kitchen where Patty was standing like a young Fury in front of the sink. "Father's been crying at the eggshells I settled the coffee with and said I'd no business to leave so much good in the shell when I broke an egg I will not bear it. He makes me feel fairly murderous! You'd better not leave me alone with him when I'm like this. Oh, I know that I'm wicked, but I'm wicked too, and who was wicked first?"

"I will not bear it."

Patty's heart had been set on earning and saving enough pennies for a white muslin dress, and every day rendered the prospect more uncertain.

Waitstill's patience was flagging a trifle, too, under the stress of the hot days and the still hotter, breathless nights. The suspicion crossed her mind now and then that her father's miserliness and fits of temper might be caused by a mental malady over which he now had little or no control, having never mastered himself in all his life. Her power of endurance would be greater, she thought, if only she could be certain that this theory was true, though her slavery would be just as galling.

It would be so easy for her to go away and earn a living. She who had never had a day of illness in her life; she who could sew, knit, spin, weave and cook. She could make enough money in Bridgeford or Portsmouth to support herself and Patty, too, until the proper work was found for both.

But there would be a truly terrible conflict of wills, and such fierce arraignment of her undiluted conduct, such bitter and caustic argument from her father, such disapproval from the parson and the neighbors, that her very soul shrank from the prospect. If she could go alone and have no responsibility over Patty's future, that would be a little more possible, but she must think wisely for two.

And how could she leave Ivory when there might perhaps come a crisis in his life where she could be useful to him? How could she cut herself off from those Sundays in the choir, those dear, fugitive glimpses of him in the road or at prayer meeting? They were only slips of happiness, where her thirsty heart yearned for long, deep drafts, but they were immeasurably better than nothing.

Freedom from her father's heavy yoke—freedom to work and read and sing and study and grow—oh, how she longed for this! But at what a cost would she gain it if she had to harbor the guilty conscience of an ungrateful and rebellious daughter and at the same time cut herself off from the sight of the one being she loved best in all the world?

She felt drawn toward Ivory's mother today. Three weeks had passed since her talk with Ivory in the churchyard, but there had been no possibility of an hour's escape from home. She was at liberty this afternoon—relatively at liberty, for, although her work, as usual, was laid out for her, it could be made up somehow or other before nightfall. She could drive over to the Boynton's place, lurch her horse in the woods near the house, make her visit, yet be in plenty of time to go up to the river field and bring her father some to supper.

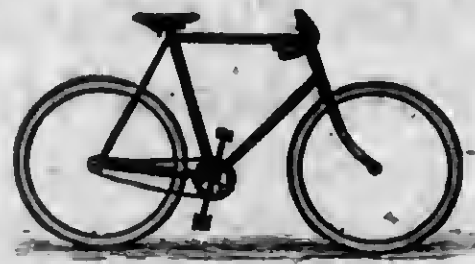

Patty was over at Mrs. Abel Day's learning a new crochet stitch and helping her to start a log cabin quilt. Ivory and Rodman she knew were both away in the Wilson hayfield. No time would ever be more favorable. So, instead of driving up Town-House hill, when she returned to the village she kept on over the bridge.

CHAPTER XII.

Uncle Bart Discourses.
UNCLE BART and Cephas were taking their morning hour under the Northward apple tree as Waitstill passed the Joiner's shop and went over the bridge.

"Uncle Bart might somehow guess where I am going," she thought, "but even if he did he would never tell any one."

"Where's Waitstill bound, this afternoon, I wonder?" drawled Cephas, rising to his feet and looking after the departing team. "That reminds me,

AN OBJECT LESSON FOR YOUR BOY

Every father wants his boy and girl to learn the lesson of habitual saving.

Do you know, fathers, that one of the best ways to teach your children to save regularly is to have a savings account yourselves?

Let that boy of yours bring your savings deposit to the bank as "regular as clockwork" and he will get the habit himself—he can't help it.

Incidentally a little nest egg will be a good thing for father, too.

"If it makes any difference," said his father dryly as he filled his pipe, "Patty's over to Mrs. Day's spending the afternoon. Don't s'pose you want to call on the pig, do you? He's the only one to home."

Cephas made no remark, but gaped his trousers a hitch, picked up a chip, opened his jackknife and, sitting down on the greenward, began idly whittling the bit of wood into shape.

"I kind o' wish you'd let me make the new ell two story, father. 'Twouldn't be much work; take it in slack time after hayin'."

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

THERE is something in the declarations made by the various candidates for public office throughout the country that is lacking, and the people who are thinking along advanced lines are able to discern the hollow sound that comes from their platforms, but the general run of people are liable to be carried off their feet by the fervent oratory that is used as a mantle to cover up the vital effect. There is a strong plea made for the good of the party, but little said about the real needs of the people. The majority of politicians place their party above the common good, which accounts for the conditions that have and are still prevailing in this country. Partisanship has always been a powerful lever to move people, but its potency is not as great to-day as it was in days gone by, which explains the existence of so many new parties at the present time. People who have the faculty of thinking for themselves can readily discern the real motive of the politicians when they argue for a united party, because with the solid backing of partisan followers it is easy to carry out plans that will feather their own nests at the expense of the enthusiasts who rally solidly to their support. The great majority of the people are far enough advanced in thinking power to reason out the situation for themselves without the assistance of the so-called leaders who manufacture policies and platforms for their own convenience. This accounts for the slackening of political ties and the development of new parties that have for their first object real public good. Candidates in this country will not be right until people stop following the politicians and use their own judgment in choosing their candidates and platforms. Real popular government means the exercise of free choice in the selection of candidates and cannot be obtained by blindly following party leadership. The candidate who is really working for the interests of the people is the man to select and not the man who makes the key-note of his campaign a plea for party solidarity. Real sincerity and intention to help the people are the virtues that should be possessed by the candidate instead of ability as a party organizer. Record Eagle.

ONE of our ex-presidents is suffering so from rheumatism that he cannot walk and the other is so affected with boils that he cannot stand. Yes, in 1912 it was discovered that neither of them could run very well.

AN eastern magazine is asking what one would do with a million dollars. We know some potential reformers who, if thus equipped, would immediately start single-handed to put the saloons out of business.

ALL things considered, the nation has reason to congratulate itself that its diplomacy and its military and naval establishments are on a cold water basis.

For County Treasurer.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for the office of County Treasurer, on the Republican ticket, at the August primaries and fall election. If nominated, and elected I will perform the duties of said office faithfully and to the best of my ability.

WEDDING BELLS

AGAIN RING OUT

Mr. Chas. Gale of Calumet, and Mrs. Smatts of Central Lake.

Many beautiful and useful gifts were presented to the bride, among which was a handsome assortment of cut glass and silverware. The gift from Dr. G. W. Crouter, father of the groom, was the fourteen-room cottage on Michigan avenue, furnished and ready for occupancy.

The bride has lived in Charlevoix her entire life. She is a graduate of the C. H. S. class of '08. A year later she took up special work at Roanoke, Virginia, and a two year course in physical training at Detroit. But few young ladies count as many friends as she, both young and old, and that life may shower happiness on her and the mate she has chosen is the wish of all.

The groom is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Crouter. He has been known in Charlevoix his entire life and attended the public schools, later taking a business course at Buffalo, New York.

The happy young couple left Thursday afternoon on their honeymoon. They will go by auto from here to Detroit, and probably from there to Buffalo and Niagara Falls, later returning to their beautiful Michigan avenue home.

How to Cure Hiccups.

Hiccups can be as troublesome as any of the minor ills which aggravate mankind, but from time out of mind there has been a remedy for every ill, and hiccups share the lot of other ills in this respect.

One old cure for hiccups is this: "Take three or four preserved daisies in your mouth at a time and swallow them by degrees." A temptation this would seem to be to children of another generation to have attacks of hiccups.

Water drinking often stops this trouble. The water should be slowly swallowed, not gulped down, swallowed like the daisies, by degrees.

The best water treatment is this: Fill the mouth with cold water. Hold each forefinger over the lobe of the ear, closing it tight. Then swallow the water very slowly. If this operation is properly carried out it is almost sure to cure hiccups.

Still another remedy is sugar, and this acts like a charm with some persons. The sugar should be of the granulated sort and a full teaspoonful should be taken at once. It should be swallowed slowly.

Holding the breath is sometimes efficacious. Hold it and count twenty or thirty slowly.

In severe cases of hiccups accompanying illness champagne, a spoonful at a time, is sometimes found of use. Sometimes, too, expert massage of the abdomen cures hiccups.

What He Did.

When Sir Bon-namp was appointed to his first post in India one of his subordinates who did not know him tried to find out from a brother officer what sort of man they would have to deal with. The dialogue went something like this:

"Does he play bridge much?"

"Not much."

"Billiards, no?"

"Nothing to speak of."

"Does he go in for outdoor sports?"

"At long intervals."

"Then what on earth does he do?"

asked the bewildered man finally.

"The most thing possible," snapped the other. "He works."—Pearson's Weekly.

IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

Joseph E. Bayliss, or "Joe" Bayliss as he is best known, candidate for congress from our district, was in the city last week-end, meeting a number of our people. He impressed people generally as one of those clean-cut, square-toed men, one who is honor and integrity through and through. His campaign will be clean and open, free from bun-kum promises and fourflushing hot air. Mr. Bayliss is every inch a man and commands respect. He's straight before and after election, as his record shows.—Onaway Outlook.

The Alpena Echo states that a Joe Bayliss club is about to be organized here. We have not heard anything definite along any such line, though there is no disputing the fact that there is considerable Bayliss sentiment. There are three other candidates—Judd Yelland, who is not known here at all; Frank Scott, who is too well known, and D. H. Hinkley of Petoskey, who is, generally speaking, not known here.—Onaway Outlook. Since the above was written Mr. Hinkley has withdrawn. Notice what the Outlook, published in Scott's section, says about him: He is "too well known" in that section. Scott is the recognized candidate of the liquor element and as a state senator he was the champion of their cause in the senate. His record is made, and he made it. Judd Yelland of Escanaba as an upper peninsula candidate stands in the same category with Scott. The fight of the liquor element will be against Bayliss, who is persona non grata with the boozers. Try as one may, the "wet" and "dry" features of the fight will come prominently to the front, for the boozers have introduced it into the struggle and are pushing their "wet" candidates, and every booze emporium in the district is supporting Yelland or Scott and instructing its patrons how to vote at the primaries: how to vote to keep the fires of "personal liberty" burning on the shrine of Barleycorn and Gambrinus. The "dry" element in the 11th district should now begin a campaign laying bare the record made by the several candidates. Elk Rapids Progress.

Amiable.

"Daughter, is your husband amiable?"
"Well, he is just exactly like you. When he gets his own way about everything he's just perfectly lovely."

ROBBINS A CANDIDATE

Present Sheriff of County Announces He Will Be a Candidate for Register of Deeds.

The office of register of deeds of Charlevoix seems to be the plum that a majority of the fellows are going to make a fight for this fall. The latest man to announce his candidacy for this office is our present sheriff, Ford P. Robbins of Boyne Falls.

Ford is now serving his second term as sheriff and during the four years has made an enviable record. He has been on the job every minute and with the efficient corps of deputies has enforced the law when violated and made criminals sit up and take notice. When they went after their men they usually landed them.

He is well qualified to fill the office he seeks and will undoubtedly, if elected, make as good a record as register as during his two terms as sheriff.

County Road Commissioners—E. C. Chew, C. J. Herron, F. L. Smith.

Little work has been done by the board as a body up to the time we go to press. The various committees are at work, and some will undoubtedly make their reports Thursday. A motion was made that the firm who is awarded the printing of the proceeding furnish twelve copies of same to each individual supervisor, which was carried.

The Kellogg-Haines Singing Party Who Are to Appear at Our Chautauqua

There are five in the Kellogg-Haines Singing Party, including a pianist. Miss Luogene Gross, the soprano, has been soloist in several of the large churches of St. Louis. She was a pupil of Mrs. Stella Kellogg-Haines, for whom the Singing Party was originally named.

Miss Altha Montague, the contralto, studied for two years under the well known Professor McBurney, Chicago, and was for a time soloist of the mid Hyde Park Baptist Church in that city. She is a graduate of the Chicago University with an A. B. degree.

John Ebenberger, tenor, was soloist in several of the best paid churches in St. Louis, has had theatrical experience and has coached with the best teachers in this country.

William A. Goldburg, baritone, was a boy wonder on the violin, later discovering that he had a fine voice. He gave up the violin for voice, although he had played the violin for years professionally. He had also sung leading grand opera roles in English before entering the Lyceum.

Mr. Belmont Chase, the pianist, is a pupil of Henlot Levy, one of the foremost piano teachers in the United States, and has had work in harmony and theory with Adolph Bruhn.

How to Keep Baby Covered.

Mothers since time immemorial have slept lightly at nights with the necessity of rousing often to draw the coverlets over restless little ones.

The active child simply will not lie quietly all night long, and the more active and healthful it is the more do the little limbs kick and toss about in dreams. Many devices have been resorted to to keep the baby covered, but here is a contrivance that seems the best thing of the sort yet.

At the four corners of the quilt a little larger than the size of baby's crib are metal snap fasteners. Ribbons are sewed to the corners of the crib in such a position that they cannot slip. It is the matter of a moment to snap the buttons fast, the coverlet being drawn so smoothly and snugly over the other bedding that only very strenuous kicking on the part of the child will disarrange it. The snap buttoned coverlet should be large enough to spread roomily over the mattress and bedding.

two rooms, 14 by 13, enough for you to settle down in? If they don't, I guess your mother'd give you one of the chambers in the main part."

"She would if I married Phoebe Day, but I don't want to marry Phoebe," argued Cephas. "A mother's gone and made a summer kitchen for herself out in the ell already. I bet she'll never move out if I should want to move in on a sudden."

"I told you you was taking that risk when you cut a door through from the main part," said his father gently. "If you hadn't done that your mother would 'a' had to go round outside to get in the ell, and maybe she'd 'a' stayed to home when it stormed, nay-how. Now your wife'll have her trooper in on 'er out, in an' out the whole 'durn' time."

"I only cut the door through to please mother, so she'd favor my girl's married, but I guess I won't do no good. You see, father, what I was thinkin' of is, a girl would maybe jump at a two-story, four-roomed ell when she wouldn't look at a smaller place."

"Penda upon whether the girl's the jumpin' kind or not. Hinder you better git everything fixed up with the one you've picked out afore you take your good savin's and go to buildin' a bigger place for her?"

"I've asked her once already," Cephas allowed with a burning face. "I don't s'pose you know the one I mean?"

"No kind of an idee," responded his father with a quizzical look that was lost on the young man, as his eyes were fixed upon his whittling. "Does she belong to the village?"

"I ain't g'n' to let folks know who I've picked out till I git a little mite f'warder," responded Cephas craftily. "Say, father, it's all right to ask a girl twice, ain't it?"

"Cert'nly it is, my son. I never heard there was any special limit to the number of times you could ask 'em, and their power of sayin' 'No' is like the mercy of the Lord—no enderth for ever. You wouldn't consider a widder, Cephas? A widder'd be a good company keeper for your mother."

"I hain't put my good savin's into an ell jest to marry a company keeper for mother," responded Cephas humbly. "I want to be No. 1 with my girl and start right in on trainin' her up to git me."

"Well, if trainin' is your object you'd better take my advice, an' keep it dark before marriage. Cephas, it's astonishin' to how the female sex despises beta trainin'. It don't hardly seem to be in their nature to make any changes in themselves after they once git started."

"How are you g'n' to live with 'em, then?" Cephas inquired, looking up with interest coupled with some incredulity.

"Let them do the trainin'," responded his father, peacefully putting out the words with his pipe between his lips. "Some of 'em's mild and gentle in discipline, like Parson Boone's wife or Mrs. Timothy Grant, and others is strict and firm like your mother and Mrs. Abel Day. If you happen to git the first kind, why, do as they tell you, and thank the Lord 'tain't any worse. If you git the second kind jest let 'em put the thimblers on you and trot as straight as you know how, without shyin' nor kickin' over the traces, nor holdin' 'em back. They've got control of the bit and 'tain't no use fightin' ag'in their superior strength. So far as you can judge, in the early stages of the game, my son, which ain't very far—which kind have you picked out?"

Cephas whittled on for some moments without a word, but finally, with a sigh drawn from the very toes of his boots, he responded gloomily: "She's awful smart, the girl is; anybody can see that. But she's a young thing, and I thought bet'n married would kind o' tame her down."

"You can see how much marriage has tamed your mother down," observed Uncle Bart dispassionately. "How-soever, though your mother can't be called tame, she's got her good plint, for she's always to be counted on. The greet thing in life, as I take it, Cephas, is to know exactly what to expect. Your mother's gently credited with an overabundant temper, but folks does her great injustice in so thinkin' of her. In a long experience I've seldom come across a temper less overbearing than your mother's. You know exactly where to find her every mornin' at sunup and every night at sundown. There ain't nothin' you can do to put her out of temper, 'cause she's all out aforehand. You can't jest go about your regular business, 'thout any fear of disturbin' her any further than she's disturbed already, which is considerable. I don't mind it a mite nowadays, though, after forty years of it. It would kind o' g'n' me to keep a steady watch of a female's disposition day by day, wonderin' when she was g'n' to have a tantrum. A tantrum once a year's an awful upsettin' kind of a thing in a family, my son, but a tantrum every twenty-four hours is jest part of the day's work. There was a moment's silence, during which Uncle Bart puffed his pipe and Cephas whittled, after which the old man continued. "Then if you happen to marry a temper like your mother's, Cephas, look what a powerful worker you kin'ly get! Look at the way they sweep an' dust an' scrub an' clean. Watch 'em when they go at the dish washin' an' how they whisk the rolls! An' you'll wash the eggs an' leave the wood into the stove an' wait the flies out of the house! The mild and gentle ones like-ly enough will be settin' in the kitchen rocker readin' the Almanac when there ain't no wood in the kitchen box, no doughnuts in the crock, an' pies on the swing shelf in the cellar an' the young ones g'n' round without a second shift to their backs."

Cephas' mind was far away during this philosophical dissertation on the ways of women. He could see only a sunny head fairly rioting with curls, a pair of eyes that held his like magnets, although they never gave him a glance at love; a smile that lighted the world far better than the sun, a dimple into which his heart fell headlong whenever he looked at it.

"You're right, father; 'tain't no use kickin' ag'in 'em," he said as he rose to his feet preparatory to opening the Baxter store. "When I said 'em' 'bout trainin' up a girl to suit me, I kind o' forgot the one I've picked out. I'm considerin' several, but the one I favor most—well, I believe she'd live up at the first sight o' trainin', and that's the gospel truth."

"Considerin' several, he you, Cephas?" laughed Uncle Bart. "Well, all I hope is that the one you favor most—the girl you've asked once already—is considerin' you."

Cephas went to the pump and, wetting a large handkerchief, put it in the crown of his straw hat and sauntered out into the burning heat of the open road between his father's shop and Deacon Baxter's store.

"I shan't ask her the next time till this hot spell's over," he thought, "and I won't do it in that dog-eared old store ag'in, neither. I ain't so tongue-tied outdoors, no! I kind o' think I'd be more in the spirit of it after sun-down some night after supper!"

Waitstill found a cool and shady place in which to hunch the old mare, loosening her checkrein and putting a sprig of alder in her beak to assist her in brushing off the flies.

One could reach the Boynton house only by going up a long grassy grown lane that led from the high road. It was a lonely place and Aaron Boynton had bought it when he moved from Saco simply because he secured it at a remarkable bargain, the owner having lost his wife and gone to live in Massachusetts. Ivory would have sold it long ago had circumstances been different, for it was at too great a distance from the schoolhouse and from Lawyer Wilson's office to be at all convenient, but he drended to remove his mother from the environment to which she was accustomed and doubted very much whether she would be able to care for a house in which she had not been wonted before her mind became affected.

Here in this safe, secluded corner, amid familiar and thoroughly known conditions, she moved placidly about her daily tasks, performing them with the same ease and precision that she had used from the beginning of her married life. All the heavy work was done for her by Ivory and Rodman; the boy in particular being the dearest of helpers: washing dishes, sweeping and dusting, laying the table as deftly and quietly as a girl. Mrs. Boynton made her own simple dresses of gray calico in summer, or dark linsey-woolsey in winter by the same pattern that she had used when she first came to Edgewood; in fact, there were positively no external changes anywhere to be seen, fragile and terrible as had been those that had wrought havoc in her mind.

Waitstill's heart beat faster as she neared the Boynton house. She had never so much as seen Ivory's mother for years. How would she be met? Who would begin the conversation and what direction would it take? What if Mrs. Boynton should refuse to talk to her at all? She walked slowly along the lane until she saw a slender, gray-clad figure stooping over a flower bed in front of the cottage. The woman raised her head with a fawn-like gesture that had something in it of timidity rather than fear, picked some loose bits of green from the ground, and, quietly turning her back upon the on-coming stranger, disappeared through the open front door.

There could be no retreat on her own part now, thought Waitstill. She wished for a moment that she had made this first visit under Ivory's protection, but her idea had been to gain Mrs. Boynton's confidence and have a quiet friendly talk, such a one as would be impossible in the presence of a third person. Approaching the steps, she called through the doorway in her soft voice: "Ivory asked me to come see you one day, Mrs. Boynton, I Waitstill Baxter, the little girl on your home hill that you used to love."

Mrs. Boynton came from an inner room and stood on the threshold. The name "Waitstill" had always had a charm for her ears, from the time she first heard it years ago until it fell from Ivory's lips this summer, and again it caught her fancy.

"Waitstill!" she repeated softly. "Waitstill! Does Ivory know you?" "We've known each other for ever so long—ever since we went to the brick school together when we were boys and girls. And when I was a child my stepmother brought me over here once on an errand, and Ivory showed me a humming bird's nest in that blue bush by the door."

Mrs. Boynton smiled. "Come and look!" she whispered. "There is always a humming bird's nest in our blue bush. How did you remember?" The two women approached the bush, and Mrs. Boynton carefully parted the leaves to show the delicate morsel of a home thatched with soft gray green and lined with down. "The birds have flown now," she said. "They were like little jewels when they darted off to the sunshine."

Her voice was faint and sweet, as if it came from far away, and her eyes looked not as if they were seeing you, but seeing something through you. Her pale hair was turned back from her pale face, where the veins showed like blue rivers, and her smile was like the smiling of a moonbeam. She was standing very close to Waitstill.

closer than she had been to any woman for many years, and she studied her a little, wisely yet courteously, as if her attention was attracted by something fresh and winning. She looked at the color edging and downing in the girl's cheeks, at her brows and lashes, at her neck as white as swansdown.

The condition as compared with an average is 94 in the state, 92 in the southern counties, 96 in the central counties, 97 in the northern counties and 100 in the Upper Peninsula.

Safety First

"Safety First!" What should it mean to the Motorist?"

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as strong as the best materials can make it.

French Government laboratory tests, comparing the vital parts of the Ford with the vital parts of a high-priced French car, proved the Ford to be thirty per cent stronger than the best built French car. We hold the French Government's certificate attesting this fact.

More than a half-million Fords in world-wide service have proved the French tests to be correct.

The Ford is strongest—and therefore safest.

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as light as is compatible with utmost strength.

Ford Vanadium steel—by laboratory test and by actual service test—is not only strongest but is also lightest.

The lighter the car the easier it is to control. And ease of control means "Safety First."

A light car can go with perfect safety where a heavy car might be in serious danger.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.— Benjamin Franklin.

How to Do Ironing Satisfactorily.

FIRST of all the iron must be immaculately clean and suited to the article to be ironed. Irons come now to all sizes, for all purposes.

Heat the iron slowly, but have them very hot before starting, even if they must be cooled later. Try them on a soft clean cloth.

The ironing sheet also must be clean. For fine lingerie cover the ordinary ironing sheet with thin material. For embroidery and lace use a Turkish towel, pinned tightly around the board.

To stiffen articles slightly without starch rub them on the wrong side with warm water and borax.

To clean the iron if starch sticks rub them over fine emery paper, then with a little paraffin wrapped to muslin. If an iron becomes rusty scrub it with hot water and soap, then rub it very lightly with hard. Wipe it carefully with absorbent cotton to remove all traces of the hard.

Never allow irons to get red hot, as it takes the temper out. Do not put a hot iron in water to cool it; stand it on one side for a few minutes.

It is unwise to put irons directly over the gas flame, as it spoils the iron. In the absence of a special device for holding them use an asbestos mat.

When possible colored goods should be ironed on the wrong side, then pressed on the right. This brings out the coloring. All wool underwear ought not to be ironed, as ironing causes it to shrink.

Big Money.

Speaking of large coins, the record, both for size and value, must surely be held by one described by Roger Ascham. It was specially made as a gift from the inhabitants of Tyrol to the Emperor Maximilian and was of the size of a "great Suffolk cheese" and as heavy as two men could bear. Over 6,000 soldiers (about 1,200 English) had gone to the making of it, and it was duly stamped with the arms of the emperor and on the other side with his wife's face "most lively printed." This, however, was a freak. The largest coin ever in circulation was probably the old English five pound piece.— London Standard.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON "CALLED OF GOD, AS WAS AARON"

Hebrews 4:14; 5:10—June 28.
"The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke 19:10.

TODAY'S lesson deals with the Priesthood of Jesus and His Church. He is "the High Priest of our profession," in order. The Jews found it difficult to understand how Jesus could be associated with the priesthood; for God had confined the priestly office to the family of Aaron, of the tribe of Levi.

St. Paul argues that because the Church was by faith recognize Jesus as our great High Priest and know that He has sympathy for our imperfections, therefore we can come to Him with great courage, that we may obtain mercy and God grace to help in every time of need. But these blessed assurances are without force unless we realize that Jesus is our High Priest.

Aaronic Priests Were Typical.

The Apostle reasons (5:1) that all few high priests were taken from amongst their fellows and especially ordained, or set apart, to represent their people before God, offering both their gifts and their sacrifices for sin.

These priests could sympathize with the people, because they were subject to the same weaknesses, and needs, and could therefore sympathize with their two sins. But no one could take this office of himself. God must call him.

So, the Apostle points out, Christ, the High Priest spiritual, and His elect Church, the Royal Priesthood on the spirit plane, must also be called of God. God honored Christ in this way, saying, "Thou art My Son; today have I begotten Thee"; "Thou art a Priest for ever after the Order of Melchizedek."

Because of this Divine call, the Apostle declares that Christ is not a priest after the order of Aaron—an earthly priest; but that although typified by Aaron in respect to an earthly sacrifice, He is really a glorified Priest, after the Order of Melchizedek, who was both king and priest. So Christ to glory is not a man. He is the glorified Kingly Priest, able and willing to succor His saints in all their trials.

"In the Days of His Flesh."

Then the Apostle shows the connection between the glorious Kingly Priest beyond the veil and the suffering Jesus in the flesh (5:7). When he writes, "In the days of His flesh," we understand that those days are ended. As St. Peter explains, "He was put to death in flesh, but quickened to spirit"—to the Resurrection. St. Paul seeks to give Jesus' followers confidence in His ability to sympathize with all their troubles. Therefore the Apostle declares that Jesus "in the days of His flesh," was heard in respect to that thing which He feared.

Our minds instinctively recall the Master's experiences in Gethsemane—His prayers, His tears, His agony and bloody sweat. The Apostle's suggestion is that He who had Himself passed through such trying experiences, and who is now in Heavenly glory and power, will surely succor all His true followers, even though He only allow them to have Gethsemane experiences.

Jesus' sufferings, the Apostle shows, were not because He was a sinner, but because He was a Son, whose loyalty the Father would prove. Jesus' sufferings were not only to constitute a sacrifice for human sin and make possible human restitution, but were necessary to the Master. As the Apostle says, "He was perfected through suffering." Jesus had entered into a Covenant of Sacrifice—to prove Himself loyal to the Father's will, even unto death. He had the promise of perfection on the Divine plane as a reward. If He would fulfill His Covenant faithfully, the beginning of this new nature was granted Him at His baptism, when He was begotten of the Holy Spirit. But this new nature needed development, or perfecting; and for this purpose trials and difficulties were permitted.

Saving Him From Death.

Having entered into this Covenant of Sacrifice, the Master realized that failure would cost Him His all. Hence in Gethsemane His strong crying and tears were caused by the fear that He had failed to fully comply with the Divine requirements, and thus should be unworthy of a resurrection. But He was delivered from the fear of death. From that moment onward He was the calm, rest of the calm, in all the stress that followed. Doubtless the Father had assured Him that thus far He had proved faithful.

On the basis of His own victory and exaltation Jesus is "the Author of eternal salvation unto all that obey Him."

The first salvation is that of the Church, a Little Flock, a Royal Priesthood. These are to be saved to the same glorious station which Jesus has Himself attained and by the same narrow way. Additionally, He will be the Author of eternal salvation to as many of mankind as will obey Him during His Messianic Reign. All who then refuse to obey Him will be destroyed in the Second Death.

Grange Column

Ironton Grange.

Ironton Grange, No. 707, met in regular session June 16th with twenty-three members present. Suggestions for the good of the order: 1—Penny march; 2—Talk on the secret work; 3—Report from the Pomona Grange.

Sister Fannie Bowen thanked the ladies of the auxiliary for flowers sent during her mother's recent illness; also the members of the grange for what they had done. Lecturer's hour was observed by songs, readings, recitations and stories. Grange closed in due form in the fourth degree with an invitation of all visitors welcome.

Announcement.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the Republican nomination for the office of prosecuting attorney, subject to the August primaries.

Adv. 21tf Rolie L. Lewis.

Peninsular Grange.

Peninsular Grange met on the regular meeting night and was called to order by Worthy Master Heller, Saturday, June 20th. Twenty-four members and two visitors were present. Two applications were received for membership. A class of five were given the first and second degrees.

Lecturer's hour was observed by recitations, dialogues and speaking. As the next meeting falls on the evening of July 4th, it was decided to postpone it until Monday evening, July 6th.

Eleven members attended the Pomona Grange at Boyne Falls on the 11th and report a very pleasant time.

DIED AT COURT HOUSE

Death Takes Charles Tift of Marion Township After Being Adjudged Insane.

Charles Tift, age 36, died at the court house Tuesday forenoon, after being placed in custody over night by the officials on account of his mind being unbalanced.

The officers were notified Monday that Mr. Tift had become violently ill and at the home of his brother-in-law, M. C. Woodgate of Marion township. He was taken in custody and placed in charge of Under-sheriff Coon. Monday afternoon he was taken before the probate judge and after examination by physicians, adjudged insane. Later in the day, he was taken violently ill and grew worse until death relieved him of his sufferings Tuesday forenoon. He had long been subject to apoplectic fits, which was the direct cause of his death.

Mr. Tift had been a resident of this section since last fall, when he came here with the intention of purchasing a farm and locating. The funeral was held Wednesday.

Forty States and Ten Foreign Countries Represented at a Redpath Chautauqua in Michigan

CHAUTAUQUA SCENE AT BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

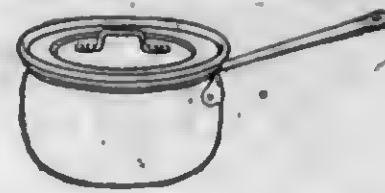

WHEN the Redpath Chautauqua was at Battle Creek, Mich., last season on one day there were representatives present from forty different states and ten foreign countries. The foreign countries represented were England, Mexico, Canada, Chile, France, Germany, India, Norway, Bohemia and Japan. This day was known as Sanitarium Day, as those present from these different states and foreign countries were from the Sanitarium.

There were in the audience 100 nurses and 800 guests from the Battle Creek Sanitarium.

From the School of Home Economics 100 girls were present. Thirty orphans from the Haskell Children's Home were also in attendance.

It is estimated that during the day 4,000 citizens of Battle Creek visited the Chautauqua.

The principal attraction of the day's program was Bohumir Kral and his Band. The audience was a most enthusiastic one. Mr. Kral was called upon to play four encores.

Swissalu, the Top-Notch Aluminum Ware

If you dent the average enamel ware it chips and rusts. If you dent "Swissalu" Aluminum a smooth piece of wood removes the dent quickly. You can't break "Swissalu" Aluminum with ordinary usage.

There are many methods of equipping the kitchen with the necessary cooking utensils, but if you want something that costs a little more on the start, but will last for years with the average usage, we would suggest that you buy "Swissalu" Aluminum ware. The pleasure you would take in its every day use would more than offset the extra cost. Come in and see it.

BAYLISS IN CONTEST TO STAY

Makes Formal Announcement as Republican Candidate from 11th District.

Explains Why Statement Has Been Delayed—Has Campaign Well Organized Throughout District.

Chippewa county's candidate for congress from the 11th district, Joseph E. Bayliss, has issued his formal announcement. From now on Mr. Bayliss wishes to stay until the votes are counted on the night of the primaries and until the election if the Republicans of the 11th district shall have decided by a majority vote that they want him to represent them in the national congress.

Mr. Bayliss tells why he has not before made his official announcement and declares that in order to come fully within the provisions of the Michigan corrupt practices act he will file a statement of his campaign expenses from the date of his tentative announcement, February 6, 1914.

JOSEPH E. BAYLISS.

Mr. Bayliss has his campaign well organized and will push his candidacy from now until the August primaries. He declares after having made a careful canvass of the district, that he is well satisfied with his chances and that he fully expects to be the Republican congressional nominee at the November elections. His formal announcement follows:

To the Electors of the 11th Congressional District of Michigan:

I am a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress, seeking your earnest consideration of my candidacy, your closest scrutiny of my official and legislative record and your vote only in case an investigation of this record together with my character and fitness—convince you that I am worthy of such confidence as should influence you to trust me in the position to which I aspire—that of your representative at the seat of our national government—a position that no honest man may seek purely through a desire to promote his own welfare.

In a few weeks you will be awakened to a full realization of this position in its relation to your needs now and during the next two years, but after the election you are likely to lapse into an attitude of indifference. You may be off the job. You will have filled the place, thinking that, whether for good or ill, you have done your part.

Washington is a long distance from the 11th district of Michigan and you cannot always keep your eye on the man you have hired. Now is the time to use your best judgment in selecting your man. Investigate. Learn where to find each candidate's record and study it. Remember that your representative will be subject to pressure from those who seek special favors, constant and ever increasing, and always subject to the Washington environment; that the tendency is to become unmindful of the folks back home until another election approaches; constantly urged to legislate in favor of special interests and to trim his sails to every apparent political breeze; invited to trade your vote on some matter for the promotion of measures beneficial only to a few in return for something that will bring personal advancement to your man but no benefit to you.

Whether you are worth one dollar or a million, the plan of our government is such that you now have a direct voice in its management and you will be held responsible in a measure for results.

I seek to be your representative. I would not have the office if you are unwilling to entrust me with it, but I ask that you prepare yourself to choose some man worthy of it by investigation of the credentials presented in the official life of myself and my opponent. Your man should have honesty, courage, patriotism, loyalty to principals, diligence, fidelity to those whom he seeks to represent, a sincere desire to be servicable to his fellow men, a mind that understands and a heart that beats in sympathy with our millions of toilers, and yet be broad and courageous enough to insist that every man shall have a square deal. Wisdom enough to see that the success of both the wage earner and the capitalist depends upon the prosperity of each other and that the destiny of this great nation requires that between the two there must be a perfect understanding and co-operation.

I ask that you remember during the coming campaign that where this man has served the public his record speaks louder than promises. Past performance is indicative of future actions. Promises to do this and that for this class and that man are so much puff unless backed by a past which shows no deviation from paths that are right. No dodging, sidestepping and shirking.

Appeals for support in this locality on one issue and in another locality on another, or promises to one class that certain things will be done, while others receive opposite promises, are but insults to the intelligence of the electors.

It may have occurred to you that by withholding formal announcement of my candidacy until this time I was attempting to circumvent the corrupt practices act passed by the last legislature, which is designed to limit the election expense of candidates. Such is not the case. My announcement originally made February 6, 1914, stated that my candidacy was subject to the endorsement of the Republicans of my home county, where at that time there were several prospective candidates. I will include in my report of campaign expenses all moneys spent by me either directly or indirectly for campaign purposes since that date.

To have canvassed the district much of the time since claiming that I have been simply "looking over the field" would be a plain attempt to evade the law I helped to pass. The original announcement having been confined largely to my home county, I make the above general announcement and explanation.

Very respectfully,
Adv. 2611 Joseph E. Bayliss.
Dated June 22, 1914.

BRINGS HOME WESTERN BRIDE

Galo Hines and Miss Harriet Bates Married Thursday, June 18th.

Happy Young Couple Have Best Wishes of Host of Friends—At Home on Park Avenue.

Graceful palms, ferns and masses of hydrangeas and Queen Ann's lace formed an artistic setting for a most charming wedding at the Baptist church in Corona, California, Thursday evening, June 18th, when Miss Harriet Bates of that city became the bride of Galo Hines of this city.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Jacques, assisted by Rev. Reynolds, before the baptism, which had been made into a bower of beauty, from the center of which a bell of pink and white sweet peas was suspended. The impressive rite service was used. The bride was dressed in white brocade with ermine and an overdrape of white silk ermine chine made en traine. The bridesmaids and the maid of honor were also charmingly costumed.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. The wedding presents consisted of handsome gifts of silver, cut glass, china, linen and choice pictures.

After the reception Mr. and Mrs. Hines left on a short honeymoon trip. Mrs. Hines is a young woman of great personal charm and is possessed of musical and artistic talent. She has been carefully reared in a home of culture and refinement, and is indeed fitted to become mistress of the home her husband has prepared for her.

The groom is a young man of excellent character and has lived in this city practically all his life. He was for a time associated at Corona in the Hines & Upright drug store, which they sold last fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Hines arrived at Charlevoix Tuesday on the Manitou and received a most hearty welcome from their host of friends.

J. LEE MORFORD FOR STATE SENATE

Candidate for Republican Nomination from the 29th District.

Twice Elected as Representative to State Legislature and Has Done Good Work.

To the voters of the 29th senatorial district of Michigan:

I desire at this time to make formal announcement of my candidacy for the Republican nomination for state senator from the 29th senatorial district.

The 29th senatorial district is one of the most important in all Michigan because of the diversity of its interests, comprising as it does a large portion of the state that is undergoing that process of transformation from the timber to the farm. The bulk of the remaining timber in the lower peninsula lies in this district and where once stood large blocks of the best timber the state ever grew are now growing up splendid villages and cities, agriculture and manufacturing interests joining hands to transform this section into a new land of greater and more pronounced and permanent wealth. I believe in the development of this great and magnificent section and that the state should in the enactment of laws bear in mind the welfare of this important section and thereby assist in the greater development fostering and encouraging its interests.

It is fitting at this time to state that I shall if nominated and elected endeavor to represent all sections of the district with the utmost impartiality. The best interest of the entire district should guide in all matters without regard to factionalism or sectionalism.

I desire to call attention to the fact that I was twice elected as representative to the state legislature from the Presque Isle district. As a member of the house I was named on important regular and special committees. It was largely through my efforts that the permanent site for the Michigan National Guards was located in Northern Michigan. I was a member of the important special committee appointed to secure the enactment of uniform fishing and game laws in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin and to fix the lake boundaries.

J. LEE MORFORD

The importance of the district as well as the office of state senator demands that the one who fills this office should be a competent and well qualified citizen. I was born in Michigan and have lived in Northern Michigan fourteen years. I am, therefore, more than ordinarily familiar with the interests, conditions and needs of this section of the state. Through strenuous personal efforts I have worked myself up, gaining the success which has come to me in business and other directions. I am connected with one of the important business interests of Oostego county. I own and operate a large farm and am a member of the Grange. So, naturally, I have the interest of the farmer and the business man at heart, for their best interests are mine. I believe that the interests of the laborer—an all-important factor in the production of wealth—should not be overlooked and that in all matters of legislation the laborer's interests should be safeguarded.

I have been a lifelong Republican and a stalwart supporter of Republican principles, believing that the forward movement of the country can best be brought about through the great Republican party, which is broad enough and filled with that true progressive spirit that means prosperity and the best welfare of the people.

I will fully appreciate the support of the voters of the 29th district at the primaries which will be held Tuesday, August 25th, 1914.

Sincerely,
Pol. adv. 2611 J. Lee Morford.

SCOTT MAKES ANNOUNCEMENT

Man from Alpena Says He Has Received Great Encouragement.

From Citizens of Eleventh District—Names a Few Things Which He Will Stand For.

To the Editor:—Through the columns of your paper I desire to formally announce that I will be a candidate for representative in congress in the 11th congressional district on the Republican ticket at the primaries on August 25, 1914.

That I am ambitious is undeniable, but I have deferred making my announcement in order that I might ascertain whether a goodly number of citizens in this district considered me worthy and qualified to fill this important position, and I feel now that I have somewhat determined that sentiment. My candidacy is being encouraged and supported by the laboring men, farmers, merchants, business and professional men of this entire congressional district; not by word of mouth have they encouraged it, but approximately five thousand citizens from the various walks of life, without my personal solicitation, have subscribed their assurance of confidence and support over their own signatures and I therefore feel justified in submitting to the electors of this district my candidacy.

In this announcement I deem it not improper to state a few of the things for which I stand and which I believe if followed and adopted—would result beneficially to the people of this country.

They are as follows:

First—A protective tariff which will protect the farmer, laboring man and also the manufacturer who is entitled to protection.

Second—Governmental ownership and control of the railroads.

Third—Governmental maintenance of and contribution to public highways.

Fourth—National protective and regulatory labor laws.

Fifth—Conservation and reservation of mineral rights on government land.

Sixth—To be the servant of the people, not the boss.

I have been a lifelong Republican, not as a business, but through a conviction that its policies are most conducive to the general welfare and betterment of the people of this country. I have served in the Michigan state senate for the past four years and I invite and solicit an examination of my record in that body. A year ago I was unanimously chosen as the president pro tem of the senate and in that capacity as chairman of the judiciary committee and a member of several other important committees I had the privilege and opportunity of a real schooling in legislative experience which I feel and hope has fitted me for the position to which I aspire.

While a member of the senate it was my aim to represent the people of this senatorial district. To ascertain their judgment I sent out thousands of letters and I believe my record will bear out the assumption that I did represent rather than dictate, and I wish to assure the electors of the 11th congressional district—that should I be favored with the nomination and election—I will make my record, as your representative in congress, a reality and not a misnomer.

Very sincerely,
Pol. adv. 2611 Frank D. Scott.

Purchase Store.

Word reached this office Tuesday that Mr. and Mrs. Clarence LaPeer, long and well known residents of this city, had purchased the stock of general merchandise owned by Levi Varous, deceased, father of Mrs. LaPeer, and will conduct the same under the name of "The Farmers' Store." Mrs. LaPeer and children went to their present location, Fish Creek, Wisconsin, early in the spring and were followed later by her husband. They have the best wishes of their many Charlevoix friends in their new venture.

CIRCUS COMING

San Brothers' Great Shows Will Give Two Performances Here July 24th.

Show day with its many alluring sights will soon be here and indications point to large attendances. Sun Bros.' Shows will give their two advertised performances at Charlevoix on Wednesday, July 24. A notable example of the superior quality of the acrobatic numbers with this great show is to be found in the marvelous act by the Carl H. Lamy troupe; Garcinetti brothers, Neapolitan acrobats; the astounding displays by the three Hardsels, the leaping acrobats; the unique stunts by the Tan Araki Royal Court Athletic Troupe; the three dashing Kobers; the electric De Kamos; the seven celebrated Wallotts, great wire runners and acrobats. A hundred other sterling artists appear, together with a college of twenty-five first-class clowns, forming one of the most satisfying and attractive performances ever presented under canvas.

Other great features include the Huge Freak Bazaar, the Regal Blue Ribboned Horse Fair, the German Zoologic Congress and Dean's Matchless Double Military Band.

The show uses the largest spread of canvases seen here in many a day. Seats are provided for many spectators and all attending will be assured of a seat. The show is also the cleanest and most refined traveling. The performances will be given afternoon at 2 and night at 8, the doors opening one hour earlier.

Kohler-Ackert.

The marriage of Julius E. Kohler and Miss Dorothy Ackert, both of this city, took place Tuesday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Ackert, 124 Belvedere avenue. The full congregational ring service was performed by Rev. C. E. Taggart. The bride was attended by Miss Nellie Shearer. Clarence Withers was best man. Both of the contracting parties are well known in Charlevoix and have the best wishes of their many friends.

FIRE CLAIMS OLD MANISTEE

Well Known Lake Steamer Burns to the Water's Edge Sunday Morning.

Captain Johnson and His Crew Had Narrow Escape From the Burning Vessel—Total Loss.

Early Sunday morning the steamer Manistee, owned by the Northern Michigan Transportation Company, was burned to the water's edge at Ferrysburg, a short distance from Grand Haven. Two men were badly burned and the entire crew only escaped by fighting their way through to the windows, from which they jumped into the water. The loss is estimated at $300,000, with partial insurance.

The fire, of unknown origin, started in the stern of the boat about 3 o'clock Sunday morning. The crew was on board, as the craft, which had just received a new set of boilers, was to have left at 10 o'clock for Chicago to resume traffic operations. The watchman and cook discovered the fire. Not knowing its seriousness they first made a tour of inspection before awakening the crew. When they gained the deck they found the boat almost a mass of flames. The lines had burned and driven by a stiff breeze the Manistee was forced out into Spring Lake. With flames bursting from every part of the hull, in the morning light she resembled a phantom ship. For several hours she tossed about and finally broke in two and sank.

The Manistee was one of the oldest excursion boats on Lake Michigan, and had been plying between Chicago and the Soo. She was built at Benton Harbor and was first called the Laura, the Petoskey, and later the Alice Stafford. The boat weathered the terrific gale on Lake Michigan last November, but the strain so weakened the hull and boilers that she was laid up for repairs. About $30,000 had just been spent in overhauling and repairing. A new boat will undoubtedly be obtained to take her run.

Recital a Success.

The recital given at the M. E. church Tuesday evening by the pupils of Prof. Babbitt's class was well attended and a success in every respect. The musical numbers were well rendered, signifying that the instruction received was practical in every sense of the word.

TWO BODIES ARE FOUND

Lake Michigan Gives Up Victims of Vega Burning Sunday.

Bodies of Yettaw and Papineau Show No Signs of Burning—Funerals Tuesday.

The bodies of Jerry Yettaw and Henry Papineau, who lost their lives in the burning of the gasoline boat Vega off Beaver Island Monday, June 16th, were found Sunday on the shores of the island and brought to this city on the Beaver Monday evening.

The body of Yettaw was found on the shore at French Bay, on the west side of the island, Sunday by a party who were out horseback riding. It was fully dressed and had on a life preserver, which probably accounts for the distance it was found from the scene of the accident, which occurred near Martin's Point on Sand Bay, on the eastern shore of the island. The life preserver had kept the body afloat and had drifted with the wind, until Sunday, when it was found on the shore. In his pockets were found $102.75. Upon examining his watch it was found that it had stopped at 4:20, which corresponds to the time the burning boat was first discovered on the day of the burning by Mrs. Cole, who gave the alarm. The body was in a badly decomposed condition, but showed no signs of being burned. It is believed that when the boat was discovered on fire that he grabbed a preserver and jumped into the water, hoping to make the shore, a distance thought to be about three quarters of a mile, but in the extremely cold water and heavy sea he was unable to make it and died from exposure.

The body of Henry Papineau was found the same day on the shore about fifty rods from Cole's mill by a young boy named Raymond Cole. The place where the body was found was on the same side of the island where the accident happened and had probably been brought to the surface during the heavy seas of Friday and Saturday. He had evidently hurriedly escaped from the burning boat, as no coat was found on the body, nor were the clothes he wore burned in any manner. In his pockets was found a key to the barber shop where he had been employed prior to making the fatal trip. The body was badly decomposed, but by the key found in his pocket and other marks known to his relatives the remains were identified.

Upon finding the bodies their relatives in this city were immediately notified. The remains of each of the unfortunate young men were taken to Saint James, where they were taken care of Monday by Undertaker Redman and brought to this city on the Beaver in the afternoon.

The funeral of Jerry Yettaw was held from Saint Mary's church Tuesday forenoon at 9 o'clock. Interment in the Catholic cemetery.

The funeral of Henry Papineau took place on the afternoon of the same day, short ritualistic services of the L. O. O. M., of which he was a member, being held at Brookside cemetery.

The burning of the Vega and the loss of three lives if one of the saddest affairs in this vicinity for a long time and the relatives of the deceased have the deepest sympathy of the community.

The body of William Heath, the other member of the party, has not been found.

PAYTON IN THE RACE

Announces His Candidacy for County Treasurer to Succeed Himself.

D. S. Payton, at present treasurer of Charlevoix county, announces that he will again be a candidate in the August primaries for a second term of the office which he now holds.

Mr. Payton needs no introduction to the people of Charlevoix county. He has been one of the wheelhorses of the Republican party for years. He has also been one of the most active members the county has ever had. During the time he has been a servant of the people of this county he has done his work faithfully. One word—efficiency—covers the manner in which he has conducted each office he has held.

He states that he believes the people of Charlevoix county appreciate the efficient manner in which he has done his work in the past and he solicits their support at the coming primary. He also believes that his experience in the affairs of the county is one of the best recommendations of ability he can place before them.

Season Tickets for Our Forthcoming Redpath Chautauqua

In arranging to inaugurate this chautauqua this year the local committee bought 1,000 $2.50 season tickets, which will be sold, while they last, by them for $2.00 each.

When these tickets are exhausted no season tickets thereafter can be had for less than $2.50. Also, the price of season tickets will not be reduced from the first day to the close of the chautauqua.

The single admissions to the different sessions of this chautauqua aggregate more than $8.00, so it will pay you to buy a season ticket even after the program is half completed. For the single admissions to the respective entertainments see program. Season tickets are non-transferable except within the owner's family.

CHILDREN'S TICKETS admit children aged six to fourteen years inclusive. All children are admitted to the children's work free.

HAS PETOSKEY FOUND THE SAME?

The Answer is Found in the Straightforward Statement of a Petoskey Resident.

We have been reading week after week in the local press of Charlevoix citizens who have been rid of distressing kidney and bladder troubles by Doan's Kidney Pills and we have often wondered whether the same high opinion of this medicine is to be found in our neighboring towns. This frank and earnest statement by a well-known and respected resident of Petoskey will set this doubt at rest:

John E. Warren, 923 Howard street, Petoskey, Michigan, says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills at different times for kidney complaint and lame back and have always been benefited. I was subject to attacks of lame back and at times my kidneys didn't act as they should. I had to get up frequently at night and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they relieved me."

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. met last Friday afternoon with Mrs. J. H. Blackwood. Arrangements had been made with Howard Blackwood to take those wishing to go and a goodly number availed themselves of the opportunity, and all seemed to enjoy the meeting and the picnic supper at the close.

It was a pleasant surprise to have Mrs. Alex, president emerita of our union, and Mrs. P. J. Howard, district president, with us for the meeting. Our local president, Miss Agnes Rodger, who attended as delegate from our union to the state W. C. T. U. convention held in Flint recently, gave a report of that meeting, which is said to have been one of the best. It was a good report and a rising vote of thanks was given Miss Rodger for it.

Mrs. Alex made a motion that our president send a night-letter telegram to our senator and congressmen as follows: "The undersigned petition congress to submit amendment prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.—This in behalf of the ninety odd members of our local Women's Christian Temperance Union."

It is expected, that the vote on this amendment will be taken July 6th. The "wets" are sending petitions and doing their utmost to carry their point, and it behooves the "drys" to do all in their power to save our land from the unmitigated curse the American saloon. It surely is time that our government dissolved partnership with the liquor traffic.

Dr. Wilkinson came in at a rather late hour in the proceedings and, as all were busy with their supper, he was prevailed on to accept the hospitality offered him, and he, too, enjoyed the good things to eat. "Good as a banquet" it was pronounced.

After supper he made some remarks, telling some things that had come to his knowledge that he thought we ought to know. Even though we have not been granted the right of suffrage we may be able to help those who have that privilege to win out in the fight for "dry" clean men to represent us at our nation's capital—men who will not be sidetracked or bought, but will stand for the right and not need to have petitions sent in for fear they will not do the right thing.

For County Treasurer.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for the office of County Treasurer, on the Republican ticket, at the August primaries and fall election. If nominated and elected I will perform the duties of said office faithfully and to the best of my ability.

How French People Cure Stomach Trouble.

A household remedy of the French peasantry—consisting of pure vegetable oil and said to possess wonderful merit in the treatment of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles—has been introduced in this country by Geo. H. Mayr, who for twenty years has been one of the leading downtown druggists of Chicago and who himself was cured by its use. So quick and effective is its action that a single dose is usually enough to bring pronounced relief in the most stubborn cases and many people who have tried it declare they have never heard of anything to produce such remarkable results in so short a time. It is known as Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and can now be had at almost any drug store. It is now sold here by all druggists.

These warm days remind us that although we may have got along during the winter, if we expect to have good, sweet, wholesome food, we must use ice. The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

BANANAS FOR DESSERT.

SUPPER MENU.
Baked Eggs.
Toasted Biscuit.
Frozen Banana Custard.
Tea.

WITH bananas so abundant and cheap, the housewife need never be at a loss for a good desert. Many tempting ways of serving them are possible.

Banana Pie.—Take one cupful of sifted banana pulp, one-half cupful of half cupful of milk and the grated rind and juice of one-half a lemon or two tablespoonfuls of molasses. Mix the ingredients together and bake until firm in a pie pan lined with pastry.
The cracker may be omitted unless a firm pie is preferred.

For Festive Occasions.

Frozen Banana Custard.—Take one teaspoonful of powdered gelatin, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, four bananas, three eggs, three cups of milk, three tablespoonfuls of boiling water and one-half a pint of whipped cream. Put the boiling water into a saucepan, add the gelatin, eggs, sugar and milk, stir until they thicken, then cool and add the bananas, rubbed through a sieve and fold in the whipped cream. Freeze.

Banana Trifle.—Take one dozen lady fingers, six bananas, two cupfuls of whipped cream, one-fourth of a cup of powdered sugar and one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Cover the bottom of the dish with a layer of the lady fingers, put a layer of sliced bananas over this and then a layer of the cream, which has been whipped with the sugar and vanilla. Repeat until the ingredients are all used. Serve cold.

A Novel Salad.

Banana Salad. Take bananas cut from end to end to preserve the shells.
Then mash the fruit to a pulp, mix with pineapple juice and form into balls. These balls are again moistened and rolled into mashed or ground English walnuts or almonds. These little balls are placed, like peas in a pod, back into the banana skins. One may add different fruits, such as pieces of pineapple, citron, raisins, chopped marshmallows, etc.

Banana Cornstarch.—Take two cupfuls milk, one egg, one tablespoonful cornstarch, four tablespoonfuls sugar, a pinch of salt and two bananas. Put the milk in top of double boiler. Mix the cornstarch with a little cold milk.
Beat the yolk of egg and add to the cornstarch, sugar and salt, then add to the boiling milk. Boil three minutes, then add the bananas, which have been skinned, scraped and put through fruit press or wire strainer. Pour into an earthenware mold which has been rinsed with cold water. Beat the white of egg until dry, add one tablespoonful granulated sugar, put on top of custard and place in cool oven to brown lightly.

LADIES GREETED WITH WELCOME

Fortieth Annual W. C. T. U. Convention Held at Flint Recently.

Dry Territory from Lansing to Flint Result of Splendid Work Accomplished.

The fortieth annual convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union was greeted in Flint with "Welcome" in stores, on wires, on buildings and in every conceivable place. June 2nd at 11 a. m. a prayer and consecration service was held. The afternoon meeting was opened by reading the Crusade Psalm (146th) and singing the Crusade hymn, "Give to the Winds Thy Fears."

The organization superintendents spoke especially of the need of more work for foreign-speaking people and colored people. Michigan W. C. T. U. has been slow in taking up young people's branch work. Each county needs a Y. P. B. superintendent.

Open parliament on present conditions and the outlook brought many helpful suggestions. Local unions are the foundation of the whole structure. Without them there could be no county, district or state unions. Reports told of dry territory most of the way from Flint to Lansing; also of unions that spend regular money for outside work. Members were advised to buy the state report and learn what each department is expected to do and stick to that work; then raise extra money for the outside work.

A discussion came up on disbanding the district convention and it was agreed that the present organization is better for Michigan conditions. Eighty-four counties would furnish eighty-four vice-presidents for the state union and would require too large committees and traveling expenses and would be unwieldy in selecting delegates.

Detroit gave some items concerning educating public sentiment. A year ago the liquor council held open sessions to enlighten the public, speaking for and against the saloons.

One man said he had a clean saloon, but did not consider it a safe place for a mother and her daughter to sit down to lunch. Another said no question came before the council but the "wet" and "dry" question came up. All "dry" counties report better payments of bills, better place for boys to grow up, more money in banks. Men who cannot get drunk are better workers.

All local unions need better comprehension of our work and methods. Success depends upon each member becoming efficient in some line of work and giving of our interest, time, talents and money.

Mention was made of $145,000,000 spent on the navy to prevent war. Why not encourage peace by allowing every one to go heavily armed? Officers are punished for drinking, but the wine is furnished by the government. Advertise truths and the places where truths are told.

There were 310 voting delegates present. The sixth district had 82, the eleventh district 5 and the twelfth only one.

Without parliamentary law there could be no civil life, no government.
No one could appoint or vote in church or state.

A deaconess spoke for a Michigan reformatory for women. Sabbath observance and tithing run along side by side. Read the Jewish law given by God Himself. Keep God's law this coming year. The Lord will bless you if you do your duty. He is a good paymaster.

The next convention is to be held in Grand Rapids.

THE HUM OF THE HUMBUGS

Catalogue House System Offspring of Humbuggery.

CHEAP AND FLIMSY SECONDS

It is supposed that Satan was the original humbug—The Retail Catalogue House People Have Developed the Art Until It Has Become a Disease With Them.

[Copyrighted, 1914, by Thomas J. Sullivan.]
On a certain occasion some boys thought they would play a trick on the great naturalist, Darwin.

They caught a beetle, glued various parts of other insects upon its head and body, placed it in a little box and bumbly knocked at Darwin's door, seeking to know what the great scientist would call this wonderful bug they had assembled.

Mr. Darwin looked it over very critically and asked the boys very seriously, "Did this bug hum when you caught it?" "Yes, sir," it hummed a great deal," replied the boys, with sly winks at each other.

"Then this must be a humbug," said Darwin.

It is supposed that Satan was the original humbug, but since the mail order houses have been established he has had to take a back seat, and among so many modern improvements he must feel dreadfully useless and antiquated.

Love to Be Humbugged.

That the American people love to be humbugged long since has passed into a proverb. Trickery may be called our national vice, our besetting sin like liberty. We take to it as naturally as we do to politics. Our entire social system has become saturated with it. Even at times it masquerades under the mantle of charity, which, like a well filled purse, covers a multitude of sins.

There are various kinds and classes of fakers and tricksters, but the princes of them all, the incarnations of fraud, are the advertising humbugs, who, when stripped of the sugar coating by which they impose upon the public, are simply professors of falsehood.

Would Strike Liars Dead.

The ancient scribes tell us that the Lord once attempted to check the leading light by striking the liars dead, but when he looked into the future and saw the huge catalogue houses looming in the distance he reluctantly relinquished the idea, as he saw that such a plan in the congested centers would prove more fatal than a second flood.

The mail order houses word their advertising so as to appeal to the credu-lity and weakness of human nature.
As it is generally known that every son of Adam and daughter of Eve possesses a disposition to resort to games of chance, an inclination to get something for nothing.

Possess the Gambling Instinct.

A noted gambler once said: "Life consists in taking chances. Providence has instilled into the brains and hearts of men the betting instinct." So when the mail order houses came into existence they at once opened up an avenue for the development of humanity's well known weakness—a desire for gambling.

As the catalogue houses passed from the elementary and experimental stages to that of a permanent and pronounced reality the gambling instinct of the consumer kept pace with the humbug's progress.

The consumers read the bewitching circulares describing the many wonderful bargains; they fondled the pages of the huge catalogue in bewildering amazement. The angel of doubt hovering near whispered warnings to the fascinated buyer, but the god of chance was beckoning from the distance, and the order was sent forth.

Cheap, Flimsy "Seconds."

The advertising humbug's advertisements and catalogues depict his goods as something marvelous. Bedsteads, chairs, tables, couches, picture frames, lusters, etc., which appear to be unsuperb, handsomely carved pieces of work, are nothing but cheap, flimsy "seconds" when delivered, and the buyer is often ashamed to cart them home in the daytime, but waits for the darkness of night to cast its mantle over their defects.

Sometimes the gambling instinct is so deeply set in the natures of some consumers that one evidence of the trickery of the advertising humbug is insufficient, and they again indulge their passion for gambling by taking a "chance" with another order and again getting imposed upon, and so on ad infinitum.

Paraguay's Sweet Plant.

A herb called by the natives caa ehé, but botanically Eupatorium re-boultonii, grows wild in Paraguay.
It is remarkable for its sweetness. Indeed, the native name means the "sugar plant." It grows along the borders of the river Amambay and attains a height of only about five feet.
The smallest bit of this plant when placed upon the tongue produces a surprisingly sweet flavor, which, it is said, lasts for hours. The saccharine power is much greater than that of sugar.

LOST IN THE WOODS

Aged Lady Near St. Ignace Found in Swamp After Wandering from Home.

Charlevoix county's bloodhound again demonstrated her ability in tracking near St. Ignace last week.

Friday evening the sheriff of Mackinac county called Jailer Fred Coon by long distance phone, asking him to come to that city at once with his dog, stating that a German lady about 75 years old had wandered from her home at Allen-ville, a small town in Mackinac county, and could not be found. Coon took the evening train for Saint Ignace. He was taken to the home of the missing woman and within four hours after placing the bloodhound on the trail, found the aged woman a number of miles from her home leaning against a broken-off tree in a cut-over swamp.

Mr. Coon states the dog had no difficulty in following the trail.

Lands Firemen's Convention.

The 1915 convention of the state firemen will be held at Petoskey. Fire ladies from that city and vicinity have been working to this end for a number of years and finally succeeded in landing the convention for 1915. The convention means the coming to Petoskey of some 600 men and women and the city is to be congratulated on its abilities for handling meetings of this nature. Fire Chief H. D. Marshall of Charlevoix attended the convention held at Saginaw last week.

PENCIL DAY JULY 7

Headquarters for Day will be at the Charlevoix State Savings Bank.

Pencil Day will be conducted in Charlevoix on Tuesday, July 7, by the ladies of this city for the benefit of the Michigan Child Welfare League, which is doing a great work in helping the less fortunate in Michigan. The pencil day committee asks the interest, co-operation and help of all in this benefit day for child betterment work.

Pencils will be sold for whatever gifts friends may wish to give for them. The committee this year will be composed of the following well known women:

Chairman, Mrs. A. L. Coulter.
Vice chairman, Mrs. Harry Nicholls.
2nd vice president, Mrs. W. J. Rachow.

Medadames A. F. Bridge, J. L. Crane, W. E. Hampton and many others will assist in the work.

The aim of the organization is to teach people in all communities the value of social work to the community, the state and the nation. Every effort is made to hold families together when poverty is the principal cause of separation of children from their own parents. The work is state wide and is supported entirely by voluntary gifts and membership fees.

WELCOME GEESE.

An Unexpected and Badly Needed Feast in the Arctic.

Norh in this ark could not have been more delighted over the return of the dove than were the members of Einar Mikkelsen's party. In the desert of Greenland ice, with the sight of a flock of wild geese. In "Lost in the Arctic" Captain Mikkelsen tells of their need of food, of the fatigue of a long sledge journey and of his own illness. He had become so weak that he was obliged to ride on the sledge. Consequently their progress was very slow.

We drive on through a lot of little islands or banks of glacial ice. Suddenly Iversen makes a snatch at the sledge, causing the dogs to halt in astonishment, and whippers eagerly. "Look, look! What's that?" He points to something that looks like a lot of round stones, and I can scarcely believe my eyes. It is a big flock of geese, sitting there sound asleep. They have not heard us. In a few seconds Iversen is on his way toward them. I of course remain where I am on the sledge.

He takes aim, fires and the whole flock rises. Stop a minute! Isn't there one on the ground? I snatch up the glass. Not one, but two are left upon the field, and after following the shrieking flock a little way Iversen returns, beaming with joy, a big fat goose in either hand. We are delighted and drive off southward in the best of spirits. Iversen even stops every now and then to feed the splendid fat bodies of the birds, and we do nothing but talk of what a feast we are to have when they are cooked. The dogs are doing their best. Iversen marches at the rear of the sledge, singing at the top of his voice, and even I feel a little better.

POLAR RESEARCH.

Arctic and Antarctic Problems That Still Remain Unsolved.

The era of pole hunting is now happily over, and the best result of Peary's and Amundsen's athletic feats in the north and south is that the really important problems of the circumpolar regions can henceforth be attacked with a single mind. From a scientific standpoint enough work remains to be done in these regions to last for several generations.

The antarctic has only been scratched, so to speak. Owing to the diverse scales used in school geographies the average man goes through life with badly warped ideas concerning the relative sizes of various parts of the earth's surface, and so probably few people realize that the antarctic continent is very much larger than Europe. In fact, about as large as Europe and Australia combined. Of this huge continent we do not know even the shape and location of the coast line, except for one long stretch south of Australia and a few widely scattered points elsewhere, while the whole interior, apart from a narrow wedge between Ross sea and the pole, is virtually blank on our maps.

In the arctic a patch of a million square miles is still absolutely untouched. So much for mere surface geography; but, of course, modern polar research includes a wide range of nongeographical problems pertaining to such diverse subjects as geology, glaciology, meteorology, terrestrial magnetism, seismology, oceanography, zoology, botany, physiology, ethnology and urethmology.—Review of Reviews.

Sure to Return.

One morning a merchant whose goods did not very strongly substantiate his advertising claims put out a new sign. He was pleased to see that a great many people stopped to read it, but directly he was puzzled and angered to notice that they all went on laughing. There was nothing funny about the sign. It merely read:

If You Buy Here Once
You Will Come Again

The merchant went outside in a usual sort of way and glanced at his sign to see what was the matter. Some one, no doubt a former customer, had added another line. It now read:

If You Buy Here Once
You Will Come Again
To Bring It Back.

Colored Glasses.

Wearing spectacles to protect the eyes from the glare of the sun is a very old custom. The natives of the far northern regions long ago invented spectacles of wood with a very narrow slit in the center to diminish as far as possible the continual glare of the long arctic day. It is said that the Emperor Nero, who was an albino and whose eyes were therefore very sensitive to light, used amethysts or emeralds to shield his eyes.

His Preference.

"Good gracious," exclaimed a vicar as he met in village laborer wearily pulling a loaded wheelbarrow. "It would be much easier if you pushed it."

"Daresay," was the answer, "but I'm sick of the very sight of it."—London Telegraph.

TWO WELL KNOWN UNPOPULAR MEN

The Soil Robber and the Community Robber.

SOME FARMERS ROB LAND.

Which is the Greater Robber, the Farmer Who Robs His Soil or the Man Who Robs the Community?—A Glorious American Privilege—Time to Pause and Consider.

[Copyrighted, 1911, by Thomas J. Sullivan.] There are many and various kinds of robbers known today in this land of plenty, but perhaps the two most unpopular of them are the soil robber and the community robber—the farmer who robs his land of its producing strength and the consumer who robs his community of his dollars.

This high grade, successful farmer is the one who increases rather than diminishes the fertility of his land. Every year he changes his crop with that one object in view. He subscribes for and reads very carefully the agricultural reports, paying particular attention to the reports on experiments made by advanced and progressive farmers. Why he does this is plain. He knows very well that it would be useless to plant good seed in worn-out soil. It's his wish and intention to make a profit on his investment in seed and labor as well as in soil, and this, of course, could not be accomplished if the soil were not fruitful.

Bleeding Home Communities. Today there are hundreds of thousands of American citizens who are bleeding their home communities by taking out of the channels of local trade the money needed to transact business and sending it to dealers who do not and who cannot by any possible means return it to do its proper and necessary work in local business circles.

The big city mail order houses that sell goods at retail through the medium of catalogues to farmers and others all over the country buy nothing from their customers. They invariably exchange goods for money, never money for goods. They employ no labor in the communities where their customers must earn their living; they buy no farm products; they own no real estate; they pay no taxes; they have no money on deposit in the local banks; they do not advertise in the local newspapers; they do not give credit; they do not even pay the freight on goods they sell. Every cent taken by them out of the community is permanently lost to the business of that community.

These are all plain and evident truths, are they not? We would ask this very same farmer

What would he do if he were charged with the duty of keeping his soil and his community in the best possible degree, to explain how he can deliberately rob his community by buying his goods from out of town concerns.

Farmer Planted in Community. The farmer plants seed in the soil, and in order to produce results he must keep that soil fertile. Being himself planted in the community, he does his duty. In a foreign city and thereby assists his community in becoming poor.

Why should this farmer have greater respect for the seed which he plants than he has for himself, his family or his neighbor?

There is a community in Minnesota in the center of which is a city embracing about 10,000 people, and it is conservatively estimated that something more than $200,000 annually is sent from there to mail order houses for the purchase of goods which could just as well be secured at the home stores.

This estimate is based on the figures secured from reliable sources in the aforementioned community—that is, from the banker, the express agent and the postmaster.

This, perhaps, is the strongest evidence of "robbing" a community. The answer to the above may be that a man has a right to buy where he pleases. It is his money he is spending, and he has the right to send it away if he wishes, particularly if he feels that he is to be the gainer thereby.

A Glorious American Privilege. Quite true. In this glorious America of ours every citizen is privileged to consult his own pleasure in spending his money. He can spend it or hoard it up, or he may contribute it for the purpose of building monuments to the memory of great men. No one can lawfully dispute that right. Likewise the soil robber has the right to use his land as he wishes and without any consideration for its future fertility. The land belongs to him, and he can do as he pleases with it. He is a free man, surrounded by hundreds of laws enacted for the protection of his rights.

Pause and Consider. The parallel drawn between the two cases has a tendency to give the community robber a chance to pause and reconsider.

He should give the matter very serious attention and thought and endeavor to figure out a method by which he can increase his wealth, just as the honest farmer increases the richness and productivity of his soil. In this way only can a large and substantial community be attained.

He Was Changed. At a certain Scottish mansion notorious for many years, a gentleman was talking of the gardener about a dog which came there before he had given to the lady. The gardener showed him a link greyhound, upon which the gentleman said:

"No, no. The dog I gave your master was a mastiff, not a greyhound."

The gardener quietly answered:

"Indeed, my dog might soon become a greyhound by stopping here."—Exchange.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

LABORERS IN THE VINEYARD.

Matthew 20:1-16—July 5.

"Be watchful. He that is on the evil and on the good, and watcheth unto the just and on the unjust."—Matthew 2:1.

THIS parable is difficult of interpretation so as to make all its features and fulfillment. The Great Teacher gave it as a parable of the Kingdom; hence it applies to the Church's experiences during this Gospel Age. If we apply the different intervals to different epochs in this Age, we have difficulty; for the Apostles and others called early in the Age did not labor throughout the entire period. Again, in so applying it, we face the proposition that only those at the beginning of the Age had definite promise as respects a reward—that all others received merely the assurance that they would get what would be right.

Another difficulty in interpreting the parable is how to apply the murmuring of those first called and last rewarded. Other Scriptures show us that the Apostles and others of the early Church will experience their resurrection change before those living at Christ's Second coming.

Furthermore, it is unthinkable that the Apostles and others of the early Church would murmur at their reward.

All these difficulties must be borne in mind when we attempt to fit this parable to the experiences of the Church as a whole during the Age.

If we apply the parable to individual experiences, we have trouble also. Applying it thus, we might say that those who began a Christian life early, and are found faithful in the Lord's service at the evening-time of life, would be those first called and promised a reward. Others coming in later and serving the Lord with only a portion of their time, strength and talent would correspond to those called later—even at the eleventh hour. If we interpret the parable as meaning that all will get a similar reward regardless of the time spent in the Master's service, we still have difficulty with the fact that those called earliest were dissatisfied.

How then can we apply this parable consistently, in harmony with other Scriptural teachings respecting the reward of the Kingdom class? The only way of which we can think is to apply it entirely to present-life experiences of the Kingdom class, especially of those living at the close of this Age.

Privilege of Discipleship the Penny. For sixteen hundred years and more the Jews awaited Messiah's Coming and the blessed opportunities which it would bring. When Jesus began His ministry, He preached, "The Kingdom of God is at hand," and gave the Jews the privilege of entering into it. That privilege was a "penny"—a reward for their faithful endeavor to keep the Law. But when the offer of the Kingdom was promulgated, some pharisees and sinners were attracted. These new laborers were received by the Lord Jesus and given opportunity to become His disciples.

The Scribes and the Pharisees, faithful to God all their lives, murmured at any arrangement as unfair which would not give them the first opportunity of the Kingdom. If pharisees and sinners were to obtain the blessed privileges of discipleship with Messiah, surely, they thought, some still higher favor should come to them.

As the Kingdom was offered to the Jews in Jesus' day, and those newest in Divine service received the same opportunities for a share with those long engaged, so apparently it is to be in the end of the Gospel Age. As greater knowledge of Present Truth is now coming as a reward to all in the Lord's vineyard, let us not be surprised if this shall be equally distributed to those recently coming in and to those long in the Master's service.

Let not our hearts be angry because the Lord is gracious to those who have entered His service even during the eleventh hour. Are they not brethren? Any feeling on the part of those long in Divine service that they must have more manifestation of the Lord's favor now is evidently wrong.

Lesson of the Golden Text. Our Golden Text tells us that as our God is gracious, loving, merciful, kind even to the unthankful, the unjust, to sinners, so we should be kind, generous, loving, should do good unto all as we have opportunity, especially to the household of Faith. The more we study this God of Love, the more we realize that He is the only loving and true God, and that our previous misconceptions were unreal, untrue—goods of our own manufacture—and the more we see that celestial lands have made with pen, ink and paper, crowd lots more horrible than any which the heathen ever made of iron, stone, brass or clay. Let us hold fast the sure Word of God, and discard the theories of the Dark Ages which greatly misrepresent to us the Father's Message.

Two of the Thirteen Ben Greet Players Who Will Appear at Our Chautauqua This Season

GRACE HALSEY MILLS AND PERCIVAL VIVIAN.

THE above picture portrays Percival Vivian as the Prince and Grace Halsey Mills as Portia in the production of "The Merchant of Venice." These are two of the best known Ben Greet players in this country. Also Mr. Vivian has played before the king of England. In whatever Ben Greet production is presented here Chautauqua week both of these players will appear. In all the company will comprise thirteen players. Never have Shakespearean plays been presented with greater satisfaction than by the Ben Greets. All companies are personally coached by Ben Greet himself, who has been before the public for nearly thirty years. His players are known not only widely in this country, but in England as well.

CITY WILL BE IN GALA ATTIRE

Unique Plans for Decorating Charlevoix
Chautauqua Week.

Fifteen Big Streamers to Span Bridge Street, Besides Banners and Pennants.

This city is surely to be in gala attire Chautauqua week, according to plans now being perfected at the Redpath Chautauqua headquarters in Chicago.

Last year in all places where Redpath Chautauquas were held nine pennant streamers spanned the business streets. This year the number will be increased to fifteen, and in addition the streamers are much larger than heretofore.

Three hundred small banners for use on awnings and the like are also being sent to each city.

There will be a general supply of cloth pennants for the autos. In many towns these will be used first in an automobile "booster" trip around the county.

A neat and unique pennant printed on good paper in blue and orange colors and bearing the words "This home believes in the Redpath Chautauqua" will be furnished for the winnows of the homes ten days in advance of the coming of the Chautauqua. The pennant measures two feet in length and is ten inches wide at the top. In the foreground is a typical Chautauqua tent filled with people.

The number of pennants will be limited to 500 in each town. This pennant is very appropriate inasmuch as the Chautauqua is an institution which appeals directly to the homes of a community.

On the opening day of the Chautauqua tags will be hung on the door knobs of each home and also on the harnesses of the horses on the streets.

Mister Voter of Charlevoix County.

In this issue I am making my formal announcement as a candidate for the Republican nomination for County Clerk. I know very little about politics, but I have a knowledge of bookkeeping that will be of value if I am successful in securing the office. I am not a candidate at the solicitation of my friends, although they have been very kind since I have declared my intentions, but because I decided that I want to be the next County Clerk, and if you can conscientiously support a young man who is working as hard as any candidate in the field, your efforts will be greatly appreciated.

Respectfully, T. O. Bissell.

CHANGES ITS NAME

Baker's Inn Will From Now on be Called the Hotel Charlevoix.

Landlord Sam Beaubien has changed the name of the hotel he owns and manages. Baker's Inn will hereafter be called the Hotel Charlevoix, one of the most appropriate names that could have been selected for this well known hostelry.

The hotel was built some 30 years ago. It was first known as the Bridge Street House, and was conducted under this name until purchased by Dr. L. B. Bartlett, who changed its name to the Bartlett. This continued to be its name until sold to J. S. Baker, who changed it to Baker's Inn. Since then it has been run under this name.

From now on it will be known as the Hotel Charlevoix. Extensive improvements have been made in the hotel while under Mr. Beaubien's management. The dining room has been moved from the east side of the building to the front of the house, facing Bridge street. The space it formerly occupied is now filled with suites of rooms, with

HAMMOND A ROAD BUILDER

Has Under Construction Three Miles of Excellent Gravel Road.

Hills Cut Down and Work Progressing—Saving the County Money.

People interested in the building of good roads should take a trip out on the Petoskey road north of town and see the work laid out by Commissioner O. D. Hammond.

Commencing at the Pere Marquette railroad and running northeast, the initial steps have already been taken for a fine 15-foot gravel road. The road bed has been made and for about half a mile the first course of gravel placed.

From this point until you reach Greensky hill evidence is at hand on every side of the work already accomplished. One of the first hard hills to tackle was the Cooper hill. This has been lowered from four to six feet and the dirt taken out used to make the fill between the two hills. Here the road bed has been raised, and the grade at each side is an easy one to make. Mr. Hammond states that it was the most difficult work he has had on the three miles. Huge rocks had to be moved, and many springs of water on the hillside made the work very difficult to accomplish.

Greensky hill has been cut down, making this difficult piece of road one built along modern lines. New cement culverts have been placed where needed and they have been constructed in such a manner that they will last for years.

One of the most interesting parts of the work of road building is the screening of gravel. The new screening plant has been recently purchased. The way Mr. Hammond has this arranged is saving the county at least 50 per cent. over the same amount of gravel screened and hand-shoveled. Instead of shoveling the gravel into the screen by hand it is so arranged that by placing the carrier in a pit the gravel is hauled by teams and dumped directly into the pit, where it runs on the carriers to the revolving screen above.

Charlevoix will have one of the best gravel roads in the state when these three miles are completed and Commissioner Hammond is to be congratulated on the excellent manner in which he is conducting the work.

THE STORM AND ITS FURY

City of Boyne Went Ashore Twice Last Saturday—Now in Dry Dock.

Orchards Were Badly Shaken Up By Southeasterly Gale—Lightning Struck Sutton's House.

Last Saturday's terrific storm has left in its wake several serious disturbances in and about the city and county. It has been some time since a storm has reached this locality with the exceedingly low temperature in the month of June.

The City of Boyne was the victim of the raging winds on Pine Lake Saturday afternoon. While trying to effect a landing at Halsted's dock she was grounded in the mud. The tug was called to her assistance and soon had the boat released. She returned to Charlevoix and about nine o'clock she again started on her trip to Boyne City. About ten o'clock the Boyne again went ashore at Hayden's point. Word was sent at once to this city and Don Campbell aroused the crew of the Beaver and started out to release the ill-fated boat. Upon her arrival at the scene of the accident the Beaver's tow line was not long enough to reach the Boyne so they returned to this city.

Immediately after breakfast Sunday morning the Beaver returned to the assistance of the Boyne and soon had her back in the water and then she came back to this city. The Boyne, which had sprung a leak caused by the breaking of her shoe, left for Manistee Monday morning to be dry docked a few days for repairs.

The Beaver on her return trip from the Islands Saturday was badly shaken up by the turbulent waters of Lake Michigan. It took about five and one-half hours to make the trip back to Charlevoix, and upon her arrival here not a spot on the boat was visible that had not received a good drenching.

Joe Guiles' barn was blown a foot out of place on its foundation and badly wrecked by the severe gale. The farm home of Mrs. William Sutton was struck by lightning and considerable damage to the house resulted. Orchards and trees in and around this city were preyed upon and limbs of numerous sizes were scattered about Sunday morning.

Lord Curzon exhibited brilliant qualities both at Eton and Oxford, but was by no means a quiet, studious boy. One of his mathematical masters told how Curzon gave him more trouble than any boy he ever taught. "He was incessantly playing the fool and 'mugging' and apparently paid no attention to what I was teaching. But what made him more especially aggravating was that, whenever I came down on him suddenly and asked him to go through some difficult problem that I had been explaining, he never failed to give me a perfectly held and satisfactory proof. JOS. E. BAYLISS FOR CONGRESS

A Man of Good Morals and Clean Personal Habits

His Record Should Be an Inspiration to Every Man in 11th Congressional District

As the days roll by and the date of the August primaries grows nearer the political situation in the 11th congressional district has simmered down to where there are practically but two active candidates in the field.

The withdrawal of D. H. Hinkley of Petoskey some time ago left the field to Frank D. Scott of Alpena, Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo and Judd Yelland of Escanaba. In other words, there are two candidates from the upper peninsula and one from the lower, and the lower peninsula casts a trifle larger vote. In the face of these facts one might expect that Scott would be the successful candidate, but a close study of the situation will quickly dispel whatever thought you might have had in this direction.

After a careful review of the situation we believe it is safe to say that Mr. Bayliss will carry every county in the upper peninsula with the possible exception of Delta, the home county of Yelland, which will be split between the three candidates. Yelland is not a popular man and a majority of the voters in his home county are radically opposed to him and his political aspirations.

Frank D. Scott, at present state senator from this district, who in the last primaries received splendid support from this county, is by no means a popular man throughout the district. While undeniably an able and astute lawyer, he has become a typical politician and holds nothing more sacred than his own political ambitions. Just what Mr. Scott's position might be on many legislative matters cannot be judged by his past experience while representing this district as senator, nor by present declarations.

In the person of Joseph E. Bayliss of Sault Sainte Marie the Courier believes that the people of the eleventh district have seldom had an opportunity to support such a candidate.

It may be well doubted if any man in Michigan has made a more brilliant record, fought his way to distinction with such splendid courage and shown himself so thoroughly a friend to the average everyday man as Jos. E. Bayliss.

Born on a farm in Chippewa county, he lived with his parents until 14 years of age. Being the son of a poor man, he started to work in a saw mill and about a year later went to work with his father in a harness shop. In want of something better Bayliss decided to take up the work as his life's vocation. Scarcely had he done so, however, then he was engaged by the United States government in survey work, where he remained until he was 21, when he was granted a pilot's license. From the age of 21 to 23 he was a licensed pilot of steam vessels.

In 1898 Mr. Bayliss went with the throng in the rush to the Klondike, where he remained for about two years, after which he returned to the Soo and started sailing a boat for the United States government. In 1900 he secured a position as letter carrier in the Soo, which position he held for five years and a half. At this time he was named as customs officer in charge of examining the baggage of passengers from the United States into Canada.

At this time Mr. Bayliss first broke into politics, when he ran for sheriff on the Republican ticket, to which office he was elected for the first time by an overwhelming majority. Displaying his ability as an officer to a marked degree, Mr. Bayliss was again induced to take office, to which he was elected by a majority of over 1,000.

In 1912 Mr. Bayliss had planned upon quitting politics entirely, but after much urging from his friends he made the run for the state legislature. In the election he received 2000 out of 3000 votes cast.

Mr. Bayliss was prominently identified as a legislator with every really progressive measure of legislation. He proved himself a fair-minded, broad, statesman-like man, one who had the courage of his convictions, and above petty spite or puerile jealousies, and was repeatedly commended by the press and political leaders for his uniform good judgment, fairness and ability in putting through the many provisions he championed.

In closing this brief sketch of Mr. Bayliss' career the Courier cannot at a more appropriate time quote the words of praise spoken by his home paper and friends:

"Unimpeachable integrity, ability and daring always to do the right have featured Bayliss' conduct both in public and private life. Few young men have encountered greater obstacles or fought worse political opponents than this Chippewa county man. He is a man of good morals and clean personal habits. His record should be an inspiration to every young man of this district. Jos. E. Bayliss deserves to win."

This is not merely a personal contest. It is a contest in which those who love the Republican party, who through the long years of its splendid service have stood shoulder to shoulder, should again get together on the sound platform of protection to American industries and rational progress along real Republican lines. This, the Courier believes, is what Mr. Bayliss stands for in a greater degree than any other candidate now in the field for nomination to congress in the eleventh district, and for these reasons the Courier favors his nomination.

PIKE SIGN POSTS ALL IN PLACE

Signs on Twelve-Foot Posts Mark Route Through Country.

Money Raised by One-Dollar Subscriptions—Pike Booklets Are Out.

The firm of Payton & VanPelt are still doing business at the old stand. When Van arrived the first of June he brought the report that neither Antrim or Charlevoix counties had done for the West Michigan Pike Road what had been promised would be done. So these two gentlemen immediately got busy, turned up a few long distance telephone wires in getting the information necessary and in a short time had made good, obtaining eight advertisements at $8.00 each for the Charlevoix section of the 5000 booklets to be gotten out for the pike trip.

One of the most pleasing features of the stunt was the fact that no one to whom they applied for an $8 card in the booklet refused them and in less than an hour they secured the eight necessary names, made the collection of the amounts and had the money on the road to the secretary of the association at Muskegon.

They next began a hold up game for a dollar each, the funds to be used to place "West Michigan Pike" signs on twelve foot poles at all diverging corners on the Pike in Charlevoix county.

These posts are now all set from here to the Antrim county line and as soon as sufficiently dry they will be painted red, and on the post at the line of Antrim and Charlevoix counties there are signs calling attention to the dividing line.

The new firm of "road boosters" have already secured several one-dollar each subscriptions and hope to have all that is necessary by the time we go to press. Next week we have the promise of a sworn statement for publication containing all the receipts and disbursements. Just where the "swear" will come the editor is not now ready to state. The fact is, a simple statement of what they have done and the money collected and disbursed would never be questioned.

NOXIOUS WEEDS SHOULD BE CUT

Law Should Be Enforced in Every Section of Charlevoix County.

Duty of Highway Commissioners to See That This Law Is Strictly Enforced.

It is the duty of every owner, possessor or occupier of land or of any person having charge of any lands in this state to cut or cause to be cut down and destroyed all Canada thistles, milkweed, wild carrots, oxeye daisies or other noxious weeds growing thereon or on any highway passing by or through such land at least twice in each year—once before the first day of July and again before the first day of September—and as much oftener as may be necessary to prevent them going to seed, and if any owner, possessor or occupier of land—or any person or persons, firm or corporation having charge of any land in this state—knowingly suffer any Canada thistles, milkweed, wild carrots or other noxious weeds to grow thereon or on any highway passing by or through such land or shall suffer the weed to ripen so as to cause or endanger the spread thereof he or they shall on conviction in any court of competent jurisdiction be liable to a fine of $10, together with costs of prosecution, for every such offence and he or they shall pay the cost of cutting and destroying such weeds and an additional 10 per centum.

In case the owner, possessor or occupier of land or the person or persons, firm or corporation having charge of any land shall fail, refuse or neglect to comply with the notice posted by the commissioner of highways and cut the weeds on or before the date stated in such notice or within ten days thereafter it shall be the duty of the highway commissioner and overseer of highways—or someone whom said overseer may employ to assist in carrying on said work—to enter upon the land and to cause all such noxious weeds to be cut down with as little damage as possible to growing crops as may be, and he shall not be liable to be sued in any action of trespass therefor.

Highway commissioners are to keep an account of the expense of the work. The township board is required to pay for it out of the general fund and the supervisor is required to assess such expense against the lands, together with 10 per centum additional.

Any highway commissioner or overseer of highways who shall refuse or neglect to perform the duties of this act is liable to prosecution and a fine of from $10 to $25.

W. H. Bryan of New London, Ohio, guest of Mr. and Mrs. William Provost, pays his compliments to our city while here on a two weeks visit.

Mr. Bryan, who has visited many of the inland cities both east and west of his home town, says there is no need of anyone getting rusty for the want of something to do while here, as the bracing air instills in your veins new energy to take life anew. Its beautiful scenery and lakes all have a tendency to make Charlevoix a place where thousands of excursionists will come to spend their vacation. These in connection with the beautiful spring and mineral water have had a far-reaching effect and have made Charlevoix famous both as a summer resort and a haven of rest for the weary traveler.

The products of the farm also give mute evidence of the prosperous condition of the tiller of the soil, and the courteous treatment shown visitors by the merchants and citizens gives one the home like impressions of earlier days, when on entering the city the key is handed to you.

OUTLINES HIS POLITICAL POLICY

Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo Tells What He Will Stand For.

Follows Announcement of Candidacy with Statement of Attitude on Public Matters.

Representative J. E. Bayliss, Chippewa county's candidate for congress from the 11th district, follows the announcement which he made concerning his candidacy a few days ago with a second statement in which he outlines the policy he expects to follow if he is nominated and elected. The statement follows:

To the Electors of the Eleventh Congressional District of Michigan:

Gentlemen,—Being a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress from this district, I feel that a statement is due you regarding my attitude on public matters.

If nominated and elected as your representative I will only be one of a body of more than 400 men and consequently it would be presumptuous for me to make positive promises as to what I will do for you or what legislation I will secure. I can, however, tell you what I will constantly and earnestly strive for if nominated and elected and the political principles in which I believe.

First—The enactment of a tariff law sufficiently high to protect American labor and industry, which in no case shall be less than the difference of cost of production at home and abroad, the present day industrial conditions demonstrating that future tariff law makers should not for a moment lose sight of the right to protection of the American wage earner, manufacturer and farmer.

Second—I believe in the full recognition of the competency as well as the right, under the Constitution of the American people to govern themselves and of their right to have submitted to them any important question for which there is a real and general demand.

Third—In the fullest measure of governmental control of corporations, publicity as to the methods in use by them in their dealing with the public, and in case of the violation of anti-trust laws prosecution of the individual offender rather than the punishment of the corporation; the clearing up of the statutes governing corporations so that the honest business man may proceed to do business without fear of molestation.

Fourth—In the largest possible measure of national aid in the building of highways, the appropriation to be fairly and equitably distributed, to facilitate travel throughout the state and to the end that the farmer may be assisted in marketing his crops, thus assisting in keeping down and possibly reducing the already high cost of living.

Fifth—Governmental aid in the matter of farm credits along whatever line may be found, upon investigation, to give promise of the best results.

Sixth—National aid in the suppression and prevention of crime and in the apprehension of criminals.

Seventh—I believe in better social and industrial conditions for our people—sanitary housing, prohibition of child labor, pure food, adequate wages, more safety appliances in the workshop and on the railroad, and these and measures of kindred nature will have my hearty support, because I believe that we—as the leader among civilized peoples—owe much to humanity and that even from a selfish, materialistic standpoint we owe it to ourselves and future generations that children be given full opportunity to have clean homes, healthy bodies and decent surroundings that they may grow up good citizens instead of criminals or social dependents, and that the wage worker shall be given full opportunity to live comfortably and work in safety, making more social peace and prosperity.

Look over my record—either as boy on the farm, wage earner, in the United States custom service, United States postal service, sheriff's office, in the legislature, or as a merchant—and see if I have shirked a duty, been disloyal to a principle, disregarded an obligation, either public or private, or trimmed in politics. I have always believed in the primary, direct election of United States senators and all other methods of direct control, both in governmental and political affairs. As an instance of that I refer to the so-called Bayliss bill, introduced by me in the last session of the legislature, providing for the direct election of state central committee men of all political parties.

I shall ask and expect that if nominated and elected to congress you will advise me at all times of your wishes in regard to pending legislation or measures which you desire to see brought to the attention of our national legislature and I shall never hesitate to call on you for your opinion on such matters. I believe that the representative who has the composite wisdom of his constituents to assist him in shaping his legislative actions is immeasurably better able to truly represent his district and wisely participate in shaping the policies of our government than if he undertakes to "go it alone."

I have endeavored to outline to you—so far as possible—my position on public matters. It is impossible to go into great detail. I respectfully ask that you conscientiously and studiously investigate my past record and in its light examine my present pretensions, and then if you feel justified in giving me your vote I shall have ample reason to feel proud, no matter what the result may be.

BRINGS FORTH PROMPT DENIAL

False Statements Made by Sentinel in Last Issue Nailed.

Bayliss Has Not Promised Postoffice Job in Return for Support—Other Facts Brought to Light.

The Courier has received the following communication with a request to publish the same, and we are sure our readers will find it interesting for several reasons:

Editor Courier:—In the last issue of the Charlevoix Sentinel it was asserted that Joseph E. Bayliss had promised the post office in Charlevoix to some unnamed person in order to secure his support in this congressional campaign. While Mr. Smith did not directly charge that this person was myself it seemed likely from the inferences given that I was the party he had in mind. As his charges were absolutely unfounded, I wrote the letter below, asking him to publish the same in order that his false statements might not go unchallenged. The fact that he returned my communication with no comment of any kind confirms my impression that I was the person he had in mind when he made his charges. And the fact that he refused to print my letter proves that—as usual—Mr. Smith is not willing his readers shall hear both sides and thus learn the truth. Under the circumstances I ask the people of Charlevoix to read my letter to the Sentinel below and then decide if a paper that refuses to give a "square deal" is to be trusted in a controversy of this kind.

Will E. Hampton.

W. A. Smith, Charlevoix, Michigan:

Dear Sir,—I hand you herewith a communication which I desire you to publish in justice to Mr. Bayliss. It would be unfair to permit a wrong impression regarding Mr. Bayliss to go uncorrected in your columns. I am sure you will want to do the right thing and print this reply, regardless of any personal feeling regarding myself. I, however, enclose stamped envelope and ask you to kindly return it to me at once if you refuse to give it space in your next issue.

Will E. Hampton.

This is the communication the Sentinel declined to print:

Editor Sentinel,—My attention has been called to articles in your last issue regarding the contest in the primaries between Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo and Frank D. Scott of Alpena for the congressional nomination. I would hesitate to assume that certain references in your article were meant for myself were it not for the fact that I know of no other resident of Charlevoix who has been quoted in the papers as favoring Mr. Bayliss. I am therefore put in the position of taking it for granted that you were referring to me in your articles, and, this being the case, I am asking you to print this communication to set both yourself and your readers right on certain statements you have made.

It is true that I am deeply interested in the candidacy of Mr. Bayliss. I am not a politician, make no claims of any political sagacity, have held no political office at the hands of the people except mayor (which was "wished on me" against my desires) and have absolutely no aspirations in a political way.

It is NOT true that my support of Mr. Bayliss is because of any promise asked, given or implied. Mr. Bayliss has made absolutely no promise to me—nor to anyone in Charlevoix—of the post office or any other position. There is no office or position of any kind he could give me that I want or would accept if he wanted to give it to me. Joe Bayliss is not the kind of a man to seek office through political promises or trades of any kind. If he was I would not be his ardent supporter. I am for him for congress because I have known him for over twelve years; I know how well he stands in his home city; I know his family; I know him to be absolutely square, fearless, honorable, and as "clean as a hound's tooth" in every way. That is why I am for him and why I am doing all I can in my humble way to help send him to congress.

It may interest you to learn that the candidate YOU are supporting HAS promised the post office in this city to at least one man; possibly he has promised others. This may be disagreeable information for you and you may not believe it. But it is true or else the man who would profit by this promise—if kept—has lied.

Will E. Hampton.

Mr. Editor, Your article on the King Road Drag was read with great interest and during the week in which we had so much rain if the same amount of time and work had been put in with the road drag that was spent on the Super-naw hill on the Norwood road the many spots of excessively bad road and a lot of ordinary bad road could have all been made into good road and the Supernaw hill could have been used as it was and a very great deal of good comment could have been gained by the different committees coming up from Traverse City on the 16th, as well as a favorable report to the state highway commissioners.

Let us hope that all will go well with the delegation sent out on this trip and that neither bones or springs may be broken. Had the advice given by your paper been acted on a great saving could have been made, as the state would have had to pay its share of the expense of cutting down the aforesaid hill and with the facilities and experience of a regularly organized road-building outfit the same work could have been done for half the cost and a great deal better, while the road drag would have made all the road from the Antrim county line really a good road to the Charlevoix township line.

Yours truly,
George H. VanPelt.

Here is Good News for Stomach Victims

Some very remarkable results are being obtained by treating stomach, liver and intestinal troubles with pure vegetable oils, which exert a cleansing, sootheing and purifying action upon the lower bowels, removing the obstructions of poisonous fecal matter and gases and preventing their absorption by the blood. This done, the food is allowed free passage from the stomach, fermentation ceases and stomach troubles quickly disappear.

George H. Mayr, for twenty years a leading Chicago druggist, cured himself and many of his friends of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles of years' standing by this treatment and so successful was the remedy he devised that it has since been placed in the hands of druggists all over the country, who have sold thousands of bottles.

Though absolutely harmless, the effect of the medicine is sufficient to convince anyone of its remarkable effectiveness and within 24 hours the sufferer feels like a new person. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by all druggists.

TYPICAL NEWSPAPER COMMENT ON THE REDPATH CHAUTAUQUA OF 1913

The Tri-City Daily, Florence, Ala., says:

"Florence has been captured entirely by the Redpath Chautauqua and it is a safe bet that the chautauqua will not be allowed to pass this city by in the future."

In an editorial in the Albany, Ga., Herald this statement is made: "Thru this big organization with a string of 110 chautauquas scheduled we were enabled to have attractions that we could not have secured for a single assembly."

The Dyersburg, Tenn., State Gazette said editorially: "We will all be sorry when it becomes necessary for them to fold their tents, but unlike the Arabs it will not be necessary for them to steal away."

The Clarksville, Tenn., Leaf-Chronicle

"Now that our good people know from actual experience just what are the possibilities of the Chautauqua movement they are unanimously agreed as to its great helpfulness to a community."

The Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald says:

"The tent which holds over 2000 persons was well filled when the performance began last night and altho the weather was hot every part of the program was received with much enthusiasm. Indications are that from now on large crowds will patronize the chautauqua performances. The Redpath agency which is giving the program is well known as one of the foremost booking agencies of the world."

The Alpena, Mich., Echo: "When Mr. Rheinfrank asked those of the audience who would like a chautauqua in Alpena next year to stand, the entire audience arose. It was necessary to call an imposing vote."

The Battle Creek, Mich., Enquirer: "The Best Ever Chautauqua grows more popular with each succeeding entertainment."

The Gary, Ind., Post: "It is doubtful if any chautauqua in any city has ever had such overwhelming success during its first year as the Redpath Chautauqua had here during its present engagement."

SYNOPSIS

Waittill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waittill. He takes care of his daughter.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochran, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waittill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waittill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waittill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waittill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Playing time arrives.

Waittill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waittill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waittill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is fickle.

CHAPTER XV.

A Brace of Lovers.

AYING was over and the close, sticky dog days, too, and August was slipping into September. There had been plenty of rain all the season, and the countryside was looking so fresh and green as an emerald. The hillsides were all ready clothed with a verdant growth of new grass and—

The red pentons of the cardinal flowers hung motionless upon their upright stems. How they gleamed in the meadow grasses and along the brookside, like brilliant flecks of flame, giving a new beauty to the nosegays that Waittill carried or sent to Mrs. Boynton every week.

To the eye of the casual observer life in the two little villages by the river's brink went on as peacefully as ever, but there were subtle changes taking place nevertheless. Cephas Cole had "asked" the second time and again had been refused by Patty, so that even a very idiot for hopefulness could not agree his father to put another story on the shelf.

"It turns out to be Phoebe Day," thought Cephas dolefully, "two rooms is plenty good enough, and I shan't block up the door that leads from the main part, neither, as I thought likely I should. If so be it's got to be Phoebe, not Patty, I shan't care whether mother or trouper 'n' in or not." And Cephas dealt out rice and tea and coffee with so languid an air and made such frequent mistakes in weighing the sugar that he drew upon himself many a sharp rebuke from the deacon.

"Of course I'd club him over 'the head with a salt fish twice a day under ordinary circumstances," Cephas confided to his father, with a vaunt that he never was in Deacon Baxter's presence. "But I've got a reason, known to nobody but myself, for wanting to stan' well with the old man for a spell longer. If ever I quit waitin' to stan' well with him he'll get his consequence short and sudden!"

"Speakin' o' standin' well with folks, Phil Perry's kind o' makin' up to Patience Baxter, ain't he, Cephas?" asked Uncle Bart guardedly. "Mebbe you wouldn't notice it, bein' no particular interest, but your mother's kind o' got the idee into her head lately, an' she's terrible farsighted."

"I guess it's so," Cephas responded gloomily. "It's nip an' tuck 'tween him an' Mark Wilson. That girl draws 'em as molasses does flies. She does it 'bout fifty a dozen, too, no more a the molasses does. She just sets still an' let 'em. An' all the time she's nothin' but a daisy little redheaded spitfire that don't know a good husband when she sees one. The feller that gets her will live to regret it, that's my opinion." And Cephas thought to himself, "Good Lord, don't I wish I was regrettin' it this very minute!"

"I s'pose a girl like Phoebe Day'd be considerable less trouble to live with?" ventured Uncle Bart.

"I never could take any fancy to that old hair o' hers. I like the color well enough when I'm peelin' it off a corn cob, but I don't like it on a girl's head," objected Cephas hypercritically. "An' her eyes ain't got enough blue in 'em to be true. They're just like skunkmilk. An' she keeps her mouth open a little nite all the time, just as if there wa'n't no good draft through, an' she was a-tryin' to get air. An' 'twas me that begun callin' her 'Feeble Phoebe' in school, an' the scholars'll never forget it. They'd throw it up to me the whole 'durin' time if I should go to work an' keep company with her!"

"Mebbe they've forgot by this time," Uncle Bart responded hopefully. "Though it's an awful risk when you think o' Companion Pike. Samuel, he was baptized and Samuel he continued to be, till he married the Widder Bixby from Waterboro. Bein' as how there wa'n't nothin' partic'lar attractive 'bout him—though he was as nice a feller as ever lived—somebody asked her why she married him, an' she said her cat had jest died an' she wanted a companion. The boys never let go o' that story! Samuel Pike be ceased to be thirty year ago, an' Companion Pike he's remanded up to this instant minute!"

"He ain't lived up to his name much," remarked Cephas. "He's to home for his meals, but I guess his wife never sees him between times."

"If the cat had lived mebbe she'd a been better company, on the whole," chuckled Uncle Bart. "Companion was allers kind o' dreamy an' absent minded from a boy. I remember askin' him what his wife's Christian name was (she bein' a stranger to Waterboro), an' he said he didn't know! Said he called her Mrs. Bixby afore he married her an' Mrs. Pike afterwards!"

"Well, there's something terrible queer 'bout this marryin' business," and Cephas drew a sigh from the heels of his boots. "It seems 's if a man bein' no nateral drawin' towards a girl with a good farm 'n' stock that was willin' to have him! Seems jest as if it set him ag'in' her somehow! And yet, if you've got to sing out o' the same book with a girl your whole lifetime, it does seem 's if you'd ought to have a kind o' a fancy for her at the start, anyhow?"

"You may feel different as time goes on, Cephas, an' come to see Feeble—I would say Phoebe—as your mother does. "The best fire don't flare up the soonest," you know." But old Uncle Bart saw that his son's heart was heavy and forebore to press the still jest.

"He ain't livin' up to his name much," remarked Cephas.

Amabel Franklyn had returned to Boston after a month's visit and to her surprise had returned as disengaged as she came. Mark Wilson, thoroughly bored by her vacillations of mind, turned now for more intercourse with Patty Baxter, Patty, so gay and unexpected, so lively to talk with, so pliant to the fancy, so scintillating and difficult to imitate, so temptingly pretty, with a beauty all her own, and never two days alike.

There were many lions in the way, and these only added to the zest of pursuit. With all the other girls of the village opportunities multiplied, but he could scarcely get ten minutes alone with Patty. The deacon's orders were absolute in regard to young men. His daughters were never to drive or walk alone with them, never to go to dances or "ronts" of any sort and never receive them at the house, this last mandating being quite unnecessary, as no youth in his right mind would have gone a-courtin' under the deacon's forbidding gaze. And still there were sudden, delicious chances to be seized now and then if one had his eyes open and his wits about him. There was the walk to or from the singing school, when a sentimental couple could drop a few feet at least behind the rest and exchange a word or two in comparative privacy; there were the church "circles" and prayer meetings and the intervals between Sunday services, when Mark could detach Patty a moment from the group on the meeting house steps. More valuable than all these, a complete schedule of Patty's various movements here and there, together with a profound study of Deacon Baxter's habits, which were ordinarily as punctual as they were disagreeable, permitted Mark many stolen interviews, as sweet as they were brief. There was never a second kiss, however, in these casual meetings and partings. The first, in springtime, had found Patty a child, surprised, unprepared. She was a woman now, for it does not take years to achieve that miracle; months will do it or days or even hours. Her summer's experience with Cephas Cole had wonderfully broadened her powers, giving her an assurance sadly lacking before, as well as a knowledge of detail, a certain finished skill in the management of a lover, which she could only use on any one who happened to come along. And at the moment any one who happened to come along served the purpose admirably, Phil Perry as well as Mark's Wilson.

Young Perry's interest in Patty, as we have seen, began with his alienation from Ellen Wilson, the first object of his affections, and it was not at the outset at all of a sentimental nature. Phil was a pillar of the church, and Ellen had proved so entirely lacking in the religious sense, so self-satisfied as to her standing with the heavenly powers, that Phil dared not expose himself longer to her society lest he find himself "unequally yoked together with an unbeliever," thus defying the scriptural admonition as to marriage.

Patty, though somewhat lacking in the qualities that go to the making of trustworthy saints, was not, like Ellen, wholly given over to the fleshpots and would prove a valuable convert, Phil thought, one who would reflect great credit upon him if he succeeded in inducing her to subscribe to the stern creed of the day.

Phil was a very strenuous and slightly gloomy believer, dwelling considerably on the wrath of God and the doctrine of eternal punishment. There was an old "penitential" hymn much in use which describes the general tenor of his meditation—

My thoughts on awful subjects roll—
Damnation and the dead,
What horrors seize the guilty soul
Upon a dying bed!

(No wonder that Jacob Cochran's lively songs, cheerful, hopeful, militant and bracing, fell with a pleasing sound upon the ear of the believer of that epoch.) The love of God had, indeed, entered Phil's soul, but in some mysterious way had been ossified after it got there. He had intensely black hair, dark skin and a liver that disposed him constitutionally to an ardent belief in the necessity of hell for most of his neighbors and the hope of spending his own glorious immortality in a small, properly restricted and prudently managed heaven. He was eloquent at prayer meeting, and Patty's only objection to him there was in his disposition to allude to himself as a "rebel worm," with frequent references to his "vile body." Otherwise and when not engaged in theological discussion Patty liked Phil very much. His own father, although an orthodox member of the fold in good and regular standing, had "doctored" Phil on relentlessly for his liver from his youth up, hoping in time to inculcate in him a sunnier view of life, for the doctor was somewhat skilled in adapting his remedies to spiritual maladies. Jed Morrill had always said that when old Mrs. Baxter, the champion convert of Jacob Cochran, was at her worst-keeping her whole family awake nights by her hysterical fears for their future—Dr. Perry had given her a twelfth of a grain of tartar emetic five times a day until she had entire mental relief, and her anxiety concerning the salvation of her husband and children was set completely at rest.

The good doctor noted with secret pleasure his son's growing fondness for the society of his prime favorite, Miss Patience Baxter. "He'll begin by tryin' to save her soul," he thought. "Phil always begins that way, but when Patty gets him in hand he'll remember the existence of his heart, an organ he has never taken into consideration. A love affair with a pretty girl, good but not too pliant, will help Phil considerably, however it turns out."

There is no doubt but that Phil was taking his chances and that under Patty's tutelage he was growing milder. As for Patty, she was only amusing herself and trifling like a young lamb in pastures where she had never strayed before. Her fancy flew from Mark to Phil and from Phil back to Mark again, for at the moment she was just a vessel of emotion, ready to empty herself on she knew not what. Temperamentally, she would take no advantage of currents rather than steer any time, and it would be the strongest, not current that would finally bear her away. Her idea had always been that she could play with fire without burning her own fingers and that the flames she kindled were so innocent and mild that no one could be harmed by them. She had fancied up to now that she could control, urge on or cool down a man's feeling forever and a day if she chose and remain mistress of the situation. Now, after some weeks appears the platform upon which Congressional Candidate Joseph H. Bayliss bases his campaign. You should read it carefully, and while you are reading please remember that the record of Mr. Bayliss' life squares with the platform and is his pledge of performance in the event of his nomination and election. There is no effort to dodge or straddle in the platform. It is a plain, frank, honest statement that surely will appeal to every person who desires the best things for the country.

HOWEVER, as a matter of pride it may be stated that the Pere Marquette is one receivership and three defalcations ahead of the Chicago, Hamilton &
Dayton road.

AFTER Henry Ford has that conference with President Wilson we confidently expect that all fourth-class postmasters will be pulling down $5 a day.

Now that the June wedding present season is over, it may be well to remember that there are only a few more shopping days before Christmas.

How would Abraham Lincoln have received these women suffrage delegates? Certainly with humane words and a touch of sympathy.

Debs at Petoskey.

Eugene V. Debs will speak at the Baptist church in Petoskey next Tuesday evening, July 14th, beginning at 8 o'clock. The doors will be opened at 7 o'clock. Be sure to get a ticket early if you wish to hear one of the best speakers in the United States.

It is expected that tickets will be sold prior to the date of meeting for every seat in the church. No tickets will be sold at the door before 7:30. All having tickets should be in the church at that time. There are a few reserved seats for sale at 25 cents extra. Get tickets

LIGHT AND FLOWERS.

Why a Garden is More Fragrant by Night Than by Day.

The light we receive from stars of the first magnitude, like Vega, is equal approximately to a forty thousand-thirteenth part of that of the sun. It is calculated that the total light received from the lesser stars is equal to that of 3,000 stars of the first magnitude, or a sixth part of that which is sent to us from the moon.

Light exercises a mechanical pressure which can be measured in the laboratory. It has been shown by experiments with artificial light that in its production enormous quantities of energy are dissipated.

In an ordinary wax candle the total energy which is transformed into light is really but 2 per cent. Gas and kerosene lamps are not more economical.
On the other hand, the glow worm transforms into light, by means yet unknown, 90 per cent of the total energy expended.

It is known that light influences very largely the aroma of flowers. A garden is more fragrant when it is shaded than when the sun is allowed to shine in full blaze upon it. This, at any rate, is the conclusion of a Frenchman who has recently made a vast number of experiments. That which affects the fragrance of flowers is not the oxygen of the atmosphere, as has been commonly supposed, but the light.

According to the same authority, the latency of the perfume exhaled by a flower depends upon the pressure of water in the cells of the plant, which tends to throw out the essential oils that produce the odor, and the action of the solar light diminishes the pressure of the water.—New York Press.

HER OLD CAKE RECIPE.

It Has Never Failed, It Is Claimed, to Give Satisfaction.

Sarah Knowlton is a woman who has made cakes for her life and always has used the same recipe, wedding cakes, special cakes, holiday cakes, party cakes and everyday cakes, simply because the cake which she made for her own wedding in 1862 was so delicious that all the guests wanted one like it, and this desire has been passed on to their children and friends.—She keeps many cakes on hand, so that her customers may have their cake a day, a week or a month old, as they like.
Each cake weighs about one and a half pounds and is labeled with the date of its baking. They are kept in stone jars wrapped in waxed paper.
Here is the recipe:

One cupful each of sugar, butter and molasses; one cupful homemade jelly or strawberry preserves, one cupful buttermilk, half a cupful strong coffee, two eggs, one grated nutmeg, two teaspoonfuls cinnamon, one teaspoonful cloves, two teaspoonfuls saleratus (dissolved in half a cupful boiling water), two pounds raisins, one pound cleaned currants, one pound chopped candied fruit (lemon, orange, citron, six cupfuls flour measured before sifting.

Mix the fruit thoroughly in the flour.
Cream butter and sugar, add the eggs, milk and coffee, then the flour containing the fruit. Beat thoroughly and add the spices.

Turn into well buttered pans and bake at least one hour in a slow oven.

Japan's Troublesome Volcano.

Sakurajima is one of the volcanoes created, according to the old Japanese calendar, in a single night. A speculate-T.H.S. A. D.—has even been assigned for the event, but it is quite evident from its appearance that the cone is really a very ancient one. Sakurajima's form is rugged and weather-beaten. Time has narrowed its sides, and the forces of denudation have perceptibly increased the steepness of the upper part of the cone by the removal of all the lighter ejected materials.
This circumstance has given rise to the legend that the northern peak of the island separated from the rest of the summit ridge by a slight depression—is inaccessible. As a matter of fact, it presents no serious difficulty.—London

Darby and Joan.

The meaning of Darby and Joan is one of conjugal faithfulness and love, as exemplified by Darby and Joan—husband and wife—in an eighteenth century ballad, appearing in the Gentleman's Magazine, March, 1735, entitled "The Joys of Love Never Forgot; a Song." Author Henry Woodfall had been appointed to John Darby of Bartholomew Close, England, and his employer and wife formed the hero and heroine of the song.

SECOND PIKE TOUR JULY 13-17

Start Will Be Made from St. Joseph
Morning of 13th of July

Will Arrive in Charlevoix at 10:30, Thursday, July 16—Local Committees Busy

The second annual West Michigan
Pike tour will be run July 13th to 17th.
The start will be made at St. Joseph at 8 o'clock on the morning of July 13.
Muskegon will be the first night stop, and an evening meeting will be held there.

The half-day run on July 14 will be made to Ludington with luncheon at the Stearns. That evening a meeting will be held at Frankfort. The next morning the start will be made at 7 o'clock and 9:15 o'clock will find the party at Glen Haven, where President
D. H. Day of the Western Michigan Development Bureau will give a luncheon. At noon, Omena will be reached and dinner eaten. The night meeting will be held at Traverse City.

The next morning they leave Traverse City at 7:00 a. m. and arrive at Charlevoix at 10:30. The bunch will be met on the road by the local committees and escorted to the city. The local committees are busy arranging a program and the speeches will probably be held on the vacant lots opposite the State Savings Bank. They will leave here at 11 o'clock for Petoskey and Harbor Springs, and on a circuitous route will be back in Petoskey at night.
Starting back south the next morning dinner will be taken at Interlochen, and in the evening supper will be had at the Briny Inn, Manistee, where the party will disband.

Throughout each day speakers will stop at various places, each one leaving as soon as his talk is over, that relay plan being maintained throughout the day. Lieut. Gov. Ross, State Highway Commissioner F. F. Rogers, Hon. William A. Taylor, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. A. J. Eldridge, Asst.
Chief of the Bureau of Roads, Congressman McLaughlin of Muskegon, and William DeKleine, President of the Pike Association, will be among the speakers.

John I. Gibson of Traverse City will be the tour marshal. Charles W. Carman of the West Michigan Bureau;
Paul Lake, representing the Greater Michigan Fair; Lee Bierce, representing the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce; Ald. George Walsh, representing the Fruit Belt, and others will be in the long string of automobiles.

POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE MARRY

Petoskey and Charlevoix Young People Married Saturday Night.

C. Glenn Ellis of Petoskey and Miss Ethyl M. Jacobs of This City Surprise Friends.

Charlevoix residents were most agreeably surprised to learn of the wedding of C. Glenn Ellis, the well-known son of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Ellis of 917 Grove street, Petoskey, and Miss Ethyl M. Jacobs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jacobs of this city, the ceremony taking place at eight o'clock Saturday evening at the home of the bride's parents.

The engagement of these popular young people has been known for some time by the younger set of both places, but the date of their wedding was kept a secret except to the immediate families and close friends.

The home of the bride was prettily decorated with syringa and ferns and beautiful flowers. The ceremony was performed before a bower of ferns and syringa by Rev. Quinton Walker, pastor of the M. E. church. The bride was gown in white silk crepe and carried a bouquet of red roses. She was attended by Miss Marguerite Price, who wore a gown of pink charmeuse with a lace over-dress and carried pink roses. The groom was attended by Leland Cram.

The ceremony was witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Ellis, Miss Ethel Ellis and Mr. and Mrs. Will Ellis of Petoskey, the bride's parents and family and a few intimate friends. After the ceremony a wedding luncheon was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis will make their home in Petoskey, Mr. Ellis being a carrier at the Petoskey post office. Both are well known and popular and will be warmly welcomed to the circle of young married people in Petoskey.

Miss Fredda Appleton, who is to open a tea-room with Mrs. Henry Wood on Clinton Street this week, is a graduate of the Rochester Normal Domestic Science. She has held responsible positions in Boston, for the past three years being assistant manager of the large tea-room at Filene's Department Store. She is considered an expert in food combinations. Charlevoix ladies as well as the summer people will be glad to know that there is a place where they can drop in at any time and be assured of dainty luncheons. Adv. 2711.

HYPOCRISY IN LARGE PACKAGES

Stole Livery of Heaven to Serve Devil In.

HYPOCRITE IS EVERYWHERE.

Man Loves Gold and Hates to Be Imposed Upon by Counterfeits—Goods Shipped in Plain Packages—Many Local Merchants Deficient in Knowledge of Advertising.

(Copyrighted, 1914, by Thomas J. Sullivan.)
The first hypocrite was the man who stole the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in.

Some people speak as if hypocrites were confined only to religion, but they are everywhere, people pretending to wealth when they have not a sixpence, assuming knowledge of which they are ignorant, shamming a culture they are far removed from, adopting opinions they do not hold and pretending honest business roles which are far from the legitimate.

As a man loves gold, in that proportion he hates to be imposed upon by counterfeiters, and in proportion as a man has regard for that which is above price and better than gold he abhors that hypocrisy which is but its counterfeit.

Lying before the writer is the acme of hypocrisy. It is a catalogue of one of those mill order houses, and on one page three sewing machines are advertised. The first is declared to be the "most perfect sewing machine on the market," the second is said to have "more good sensible ideas than any other," while the third is praised as being "the most superior sewing machine on the market."

Now, which of these machines really is the best? Which of them is as good as the one your retailer sells and guarantees? Can any reader of the above trimmings of ads. tell? Most assuredly not.

The lesson should be plain to all who receive these catalogues. They contain glowing descriptions of goods, but the senders of money do not know what they are going to get for their money when they send it to a mail order house.

Goods in Plain Packages.

Were it not so serious it would be amusing to read some of the smooth arguments the catalogue houses advance to their readers in an effort to induce them to send in orders. They say that goods are sent in plain packages because many merchants who buy of them to sell again object to having their name appear on the boxes. We know we are safe in saying there is not one single merchant in the whole United States who ever ordered any goods from these concerns. The statement is made in an effort to make the consumer believe that he can buy as cheaply as his local merchant can.

But printed matter that will sell goods is within the power of almost any local retailer. Most all the expert advice is little more than empty generalizing about nonessentials. It is not literature, remember, but advertising, that you want to write. Knowledge of words and type and the ability to write the introductory paragraphs and striking headings are not to be despised, of course, but the facts, not fancy ways of saying them, are what induce the people to spend their money in the local stores.

The merchant's knowledge of his store, his goods and the people is more than an offset for any lack of ability to coin catchy phrases or to use technical language in telling the printer how he would like to have his advertising look.

When the merchant sits down to write his ad. he should imagine that his hardest customer to sell to is seated on the other side of his desk. He should write what his talk would be if he were determined to make a sale to that customer when in the most obstinate of moods. He should write it all down, then lock it in his desk for a few hours, later cut out all the superfluous words and print the facts without any trimmings.

Personality Brings Trade.

The nearer the local merchant can come to making his advertising sound like his talk the more effective it will be. Personality is what brings and holds trade; personality secures to your competitor trade likewise difficult to win away from him.

The modern retail merchant must make sure that his displays in his windows and in the store itself are such as will interest women. A general variety ought to be shown, with prices clearly indicated in plain figures. Make inspection easy and then let shoppers inspect undisturbed, for in this manner many new wants will be developed in the minds of the shoppers. The merchant or salesman who stands over a shopper and attempts to press a sale invariably annoys the customer and hastens his or her departure.

The merchant who has not advanced with the times must come to a full realization at once that many changes are necessary before he can hope to compete successfully with retail mail order houses, and the first and principal change is the manner in which his stock is displayed, and in the process of this arrangement he must take into consideration the fact that men have almost completely ceased to figure in the day to day purchases of household necessities.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

carry any of her indecisions and fears to her sister for settlement. Who could look in Waitstill's clear, steadfast eyes and say, "I can't make up my mind which to marry?" Not Patty. She felt, instinctively, that Waitstill's heart, if it moved at all, would rush out like a great river to lose itself in the ocean and, losing itself, forget the narrow banks through which it had flowed before. Patty knew that her own love was at the moment nothing more than the note of a child's penny dute and that Waitstill was perhaps vibrating secretly with a deeper, richer music than could ever come to her. Still, music of some sort she meant to feel. "Even if they make me decide one way or another before I am ready," she said to herself, "I'll never say 'yes' till I'm more in love than I am now!"

There were other reasons why she did not want to ask Waitstill's advice. Not only did she shrink from the loving scrutiny of her sister's eyes and the gentle probing of her questions, which would fix her own motives on a pin point and hold them up unbecomingly to the light, but she had a foolish, generous loyalty that urged her to keep Waitstill quite aloof from her own little private perplexities. "She will only worry herself sick," thought Patty. "She won't let me marry without asking father's permission, and she'd think she ought not to add me in deceiving him, and the tempest would be twice as dreadful if it fell upon us both! Now, if anything happens, I can tell father that I did it all myself and that Waitstill knew nothing about it whatever. Then—oh, joy!—if father is too terrible I shall be a married woman and I can always say: 'I will not permit such cruelty! Waitstill is dependent upon you no longer; she shall come at once to my husband and me!'"

This latter phrase almost intoxicated Patty, so that there were moments when she could have run up to Milliken's mill and purchased herself a husband at any cost, had her slender savings permitted the best in the market, and the more impersonal the husband the more delightedly Patty rolled the phrase under her tongue.

"I can never be 'published' in church," she thought, "and perhaps nobody will ever care enough about me to brave father's displeasure and insist on running away with me. I do wish somebody would care 'rightfully' about me enough for that, enough to help me make up my mind, so that I could just drive up to father's store some day and say, 'Good afternoon, father! I know you'd never let me marry'—there was always a dash here in Patty's languorous discourses, a dash that could be filled in with any Christian name according to her mood of the moment—"so I just married him anyway and you needn't be angry with my sister, for she knew nothing about it. My husband and I are sorry if you are displeased, but there's no help for it, and my husband's home will always be open to Waitstill whatever happens!"

Patty, with all her latent love of flattery and ease, did not weigh the worldly circumstances of the two men, though the reflection that she would have more amusement with Mark than with Philip may have crossed her mind. She trusted Philip and respected his steady going, serious view of life. It pleased her vanity, too, to feel how her nonsense and fun lightened his temperamental gravity, playing in and out and over it like a butterfly in a smoke bush. She would be safe with Philip always, but safety had no special charm for one of her age, who had never been in peril. Mark's superior knowledge of the world, moreover, his careless, buoyant manner of carrying himself, his gay, boyish audacity, all had a very distinct charm for her—and yet—

But there would be no "and yet" a little later. Patty's heart would blaze quickly enough when sufficient heat was applied to it and Mark was falling more and more deeply in love every day. As Patty cultivated his purpose strengthened, the more she weighed the more he seemed to weigh the difficulties of the situation, the more she unfolded herself to him the more he loved and the more he respected her. She began by delighting his senses, she ended by winning all that there was in him and creating continually the qualities he lacked, after the manner of true women even when they are very young and foolish.

CHAPTER XVI.

A State of Maine Prophet. SUMMER was dying hard, for although it had passed, by the calendar, Mother Nature was still keeping up her customary attitude.

There had been a soft rain in the night, and every spear of grass was brilliant with dew and tipped with crystal. The smoke bushes in the garden plot and the asparagus bed beyond them looked lusty in the sun rose higher driving the soaked earth and dipping in low. Smokers' wells, marrets of rice, dotted the short grass under the apple tree. Every flower that had a fragrance was wearing it gratefully into the air; every bird with a joyous note in its voice gave it more joyously from a lustrous throat, and the river laughed and rippled in the distance at the foot of Tower House hill. The dawn grew into full morning, and streams of blue smoke rose here and there from the Edgewood chimneys. The world was alive and so beautiful that Waitstill felt like going down on her knees in gratitude for having been born into it and given a chance of serving it in any humble way whatsoever.

Wherever there was a barn, in Riverboro or Edgewood, one could have heard the three-legged stools being lifted from the posts, and then would begin the music of the milk pail and the resonant sound of the stream in the bottom of the tin pail, then the soft, delicious purring of the cascade into the full bucket, while the cows serenely chewed their ends and whisked away the flies with swishing tails.

Deacon Baxter was taking his cows to a pasture far over the hill, the feed having grown too short in his own fields. Patty was washing dishes in the kitchen and Waitstill was in the dairy house at the butter making, one of her chief delights. She worked with speed and with beautiful sureness, patting, squeezing, rolling the golden mass like the true artist she was, then turning the sweet scented waxen balls out of the mould onto the big stone slab, plying that stood waiting. She had been up early, and for the last hour she had toiled with devouring eagerness that she might have a little time to herself. It was hers now, for Patty would be busy with the beds after she finished the dishes, so she drew a folded paper from her pocket, the first communication she had ever received in Ivory's handwriting, and sat down to read it.

My Dear Waitstill—Baxter will take this packet and leave it with you when he finds opportunity. It is not in any real sense a letter, so I am in no danger of incurring your father's displeasure. You will probably have heard new rumors concerning my father during the past few days, for Peter Morell has been in Edgewood, N. H., where he says letters have been received stating that my father died in Vermont, or, more that five years ago. I shall do what I can to substantiate this report, as I have always done with the previous ones, but I have little hope of securing reliable information at this distance and after this length of time. I do not know when I can ever start on a personal quest myself, for even had I the money I could not leave home until father was much older and fitted for greater responsibility. Oh, Waitstill, how you have helped my poor, dear mother! Would that I were free to tell you how I value your friendship! It is something more than mere friendship. When you are doing is like throwing a life line to a sinking human being. There are three of late together has forgotten to set out the supper things for my father. Her ten years' incessant waiting for him seems to have subsided in a little and in his place she watches for you. Ivory had written "watch for her daughter," but carefully erased the last two words. You come and see, but I can't leave on the day of you. What she needed, it seems, was the much-loved of youth and health and strength and sympathy. The "madness" you possess in such good measure is what she needs. If I had proof of my father's death I think now perhaps that I ought to try to break it gently to my mother, as if it were a mere accident, and see if possibly it might thus remove her principal burden. You see now, do you not, how long she is in many—indeed in most ways—how sweet and lovable even how sensible.

To help you better to understand the influence that has robbed me of both father and mother and made me and mine the sort of town and tavern gossip for years past I have written for you just a sketch of the "Cochrane crisis," the romantic story of a man who swayed the wills of his fellow creatures in a truly marvelous manner. Some local historians of his time will doubtless give him more space. My wish is to have you know something more of the circumstances that have made me a prisoner in life instead of a free man. I am sustained just now by a new courage. I read in my copy of Ovid last night, "The best of weapons is the undomated heart." This will help you, too, in your hard life, for years in the most undomated heart in all the world.

IVORY ROYSTON.

The chronicle of Jacob Cochrane's career in the little villages near the Suvo river has no such interest for the general reader as it had for Waitstill Baxter. She hung upon every word that Ivory had written and realized more clearly than ever before, the shadow that had followed him since early childhood—the same shadow that had fallen across his mother's mind and left continual twilight there.

No one really knew it himself, why or from whence Jacob Cochrane had come to Edgewood. The simply appeared at the old tavern a stranger, with satchel in hand, to seek entertainment. Uncle Bart had often described this scene to Waitstill, for he was one of those sitting about the great open fire at the time. The man easily slipped into the group and soon took the lead in conversation, delighting all with his personable personality, his simple, forceful and graceful speech. At supper time the hostess and the rest of the family took their places at the long table, as was the custom, and he astonished them by his knowledge not only of town history, but of village matters, they had supposed unknown to any one.

When the stranger had finished his supper and returned to the barroom he had to pass through a long entry, at the head of which, whispering to her daughter, said:

"Betsy, you go up to the chamber closet and get the silver and bring it down. This man is going to sleep there, and I am afraid of him. He must be a fortune teller, and the Lord only knows what else!"

In going to the chamber the daughter had to pass through the barroom. As she was moving quietly through, hoping to escape the notice of the owner, he turned in his chair and, looking her full in the face, suddenly said:

"Madam, you needn't touch your silver. I don't want it. I am a gentleman."

Whereupon the bewildered Betsy scuttled back to her mother and told her the strange guest was indeed a fortune teller.

Of Cochrane's initial appearance as a preacher Ivory had told Waitstill in their talk in the churchyard early in the summer. It was at a child's funeral that the new prophet created his first sensation, and there, too, that Aaron and Lois Royston first came under his spell. The whole countryside had been just then wrought up to a state of religious excitement by revival meetings, and Cochrane gained the benefit of his definite preparation for his work. He claimed that all his sayings were from divine inspiration and that those who embraced his doctrine received direct communication from the Almighty. He disdained formal creeds and all manner of church organizations, declaring that sectarian names were marks of the beast and all church members to be in Babylon. He introduced baptism as a symbolic cleansing from sectarian status, and after some months advanced a proposition that his flock hold all things in common. He put a sudden end to the solemn "denouncing out" and drowning of schismatics and grafted on to his form of worship lively singing and marching, accompanied by clapping of hands and whirling in circles, during the progress of which the most hysterical convulsions or the most fully "cochraneized" would swoon upon the floor, or, in obeying their leader's instructions to "become as little children," would sometimes go through the most extraordinary and unmeaning antics.

It was not until he had converted hundreds to the new faith that he added more startling revelations to his gospel. He was in turn bold, mystical, eloquent, unshaken, persuasive, attractive, and even when his self-styled "communications from the Almighty" contravened all that his hearers had formerly held to be right, he still managed to hypnotize them into an unwilling assent to his beliefs. There was finally a proclamation to the effect that marriage vows were to be annulled when advisable and that complete spiritual liberty was to follow a liberty in which a new almighty might be sought and a spiritual union begun upon earth, a union as nearly approximate to God's standards as fully human beings could manage to attain.

Some of the faithful fell away at this time, being unable to accept the full doctrine, but retained their faith in Cochrane's original power to convert sinners and save them from the wrath of God. "Storm clouds began to gather in the sky, however, as the delusion spread, month by month, and local ministers everywhere sought to annihilate the influence of the dangerous order, who rose superior to every attack and carried himself like some magnificent martyr it will among the crowds that now crisscrossed him here and there in private and in public.

"What a picture of splendid audacity he must have been!" wrote Ivory. "When he entered the orthodox meeting house at a huge gathering where he knew that the speakers were to denounce his teachings, and that Benson Buzzell gave out his text from the high pulpit, Mark xiii, 27. And what I say unto you I say unto all, watch! Just here Cochrane stepped in at the open door of the church and heard the warning, meant, he knew, for himself, and seizing the moment of silence following the reading of the text, he cried so much as stirring from his place within the door frame: 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice I will come in to him and will sup with him. I come to preach the everlasting gospel to every one that heareth, and all that I want here is my business on the door.'"

"I cannot find," continued Ivory on another page, "that my father or mother ever engaged in any of the foolish and childish peacocks which disgraced the meetings of some of Cochrane's most fanatical followers and converts. By my mother's conversations (some of which I have repeated to you, but which may be full of errors, because of her confusion of mind) I believe she must have had a difference of opinion with my father on some of those views, but I have no means of knowing this to a certainty, nor do I know that the question of following spiritual consort ever came between or divided them. This part of the delusion always this with such unhesitating disgust that I have never liked to seek additional light from any of the older men and women who might reveal to me the truth. That my mother did not sympathize with my father's going out to preach Cochrane's gospel through the country, this I know, and she was so truly religious, so burning with zeal, that had she fully believed in my father's mission she would have spurred him on instead of endeavoring to detain him.

"You know the retribution that overtook Cochrane at last," wrote Ivory again, when he had shown the man's early victories and his enormous influence. "There began to be malignant protests against his doctrines by lawyers and doctors, as well as by ministers; not from all sides, however, for remember, in exaltation of my father's and my mother's espousal of this strange belief, that many of the strongest and wisest men, as well as the purest and finest women in York county, came under this man's spell for a time and believed in him implicitly, some of them even unto the end."

"Finally there was Cochrane's arrest and examination, the order for him to appear at the supreme court, his failure to do so, his recapture and trial and his sentence of four years' imprisonment on several counts, in all of which he was proved guilty. Cochrane had all along said that the Almighty of the Lord would never be allowed to remain in jail, but he was mistaken, for he stayed in the state prison at Charlestown, Mass., for the full duration of his sentence. Here I am again trying to plead the cause of my father and mother, here he received much sympathy and some few visitors, one of whom walked all the way from Edgewood to Boston, 115 miles, with a petition for pardon, a petition which was delivered and refused at the Boston authorities. Cochrane, released from prison a broken and humiliated man, but, if report says true, is still living, far out of sight and knowledge, somewhere in New Hampshire. He once sent my father an epitaph of his own selection, asking him to have it carved upon his gravestone should he die suddenly when away from his friends. My mother often repeats it, not realizing how far from the point it sounds to us, who never knew him in his glory, but only in his downfall:

"He spread his arms full wide abroad his works are ever before his God. His name on earth shall long remain, Though evil ones slanders fret in vain."

"We are certain," concluded Ivory, "that my father preached with Cochrane in Litchington, Manchester and Portsmouth. He also wrote from Edgewood and Edgewood in New Hampshire. After that all is silence. Various reports place him in Boston, in New York, even as far west as Ohio, whether as Cochrane's evangelist or what not, what we can never know. I despair of ever tracing his steps. I only hope that he died before he wandered too widely, either from his belief in God or his fidelity to my mother's long suffering love."

Waitstill read the letter twice through and replaced it in her dress to read again at night. It seemed the only tangible evidence of Ivory's love that she had ever received and she turned her heart with what she felt that he had not forgotten the lines:

"Would that I were free to tell you how I value your friendship! My mother's heart feeds on the sight of you!" "I want you to know something of the circumstances that have made me a prisoner in life instead of a free man." "Yours is the most undomated heart in all the world." These sentences Waitstill re-read again and again, and they rang in her ears like music, converting all the tasks of her long day into a deep and silent joy.

(To be continued next week.)

Ford Safety First

"Safety First!" What should it mean to the Motorist?

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as strong as the best materials can make it.

French Government laboratory tests, comparing the vital parts of the Ford with the vital parts of a high-priced French car, proved the Ford to be thirty per cent stronger than the best built French car. We hold the French Government's certificate attesting this fact.

More than a half-million Fords in world-wide service have proved the French tests to be correct.

The Ford is strongest—and therefore safest.

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as light as is compatible with utmost strength.

Ford Vanadium steel—by laboratory test and by actual service test—is not only strongest but is also lightest.

The lighter the car the easier it is to control. And ease of control means "Safety First."

A light car can go with perfect safety where a heavy car might be in serious danger.

The Ford is the lightest—and therefore safest. "Safety First" should mean that his car is simplest to drive.

The Ford Planetary transmission keeps the motor always "hitched" to the car. There is no shifting of gears to "hook up" the car with the motor—no bother-some levers to manipulate in a crisis. Simply a touch of the foot to the pedal and the Ford is off.

The powerful Ford foot brake—nothing of the emergency brake—will stop the car almost instantly from any speed.

The Ford "picks up" backs up and "gets away" faster than any other car—a big advantage in an emergency.

The Ford ease of control makes it the safest car for congested streets of the city as well as uncertain country roads.

The Ford is easiest to control—and therefore safest.

These are some of the "Safety First" reasons why 145,707 Fords were bought between last October and the first of May this year.

The Ford is the "Safety First" car.

Percival Vivian, Who Comes Here Chautauqua Week, Has Played Before Crowned Heads

There are few artists on the Chautauqua platform today who have been accorded the honor of playing before as many notable people as has Percival Vivian of the Ben-Greet Players, who is to appear here Chautauqua week. Among those before whom Mr. Vivian has played have been the late King Edward, the present King George of England and many other members of the royal family, the King and Queen of Spain and with Mr. Greet on the White House lawn before President Roosevelt and family.

In 1902 Mr. Vivian had the honor of entertaining his majesty's guests, the poor of London, at a dinner given to this class of subjects by his majesty. In acknowledgment of his services on this occasion the king's thanks and appreciation were tendered Mr. Vivian in the form of a memorial presented in person by his majesty. The lord mayor of London expressed his gratitude in like manner.

Mr. Vivian made his first appearance upon the stage at the age of eight and has been playing steadily ever since. He has played with Mr. Greet for over fifteen years and has played some hundred and twenty parts under his direction alone.

Kellogg-Haines Singing Party as They Appear in Light Opera

LIGHT OPERA by the well known Kellogg-Haines Singing Party will be another most enjoyable event of Chauniqua week. One of the operas which this company presents is "Lovely Galatea," the entire rendition being given in addition to brief selections from other operas. Where, however, the date of this company comes on Sunday at a Chauniqua they will present selections from the aratories instead of grand opera or will give a sacred concert.

SUN BROTHERS' SHOW

Has for Twenty-two Years Been Before the Public—Here July 24th

Twenty-two years before the public as amusement caterers is the proud record of the famous Sun Brothers' Shows that are coming to Charlevoix on Friday, July 24, for two performances, afternoon and night. This will also signalize the appearance of the greatest array of high class European and American artists that ever before appeared with an aggregation of this size and kind. It is an established fact that the Sun Show in the past has always offered its patrons the highest form of the arena art and also the neatest display of wild animals procurable. Among the special features in this department will be found a genuine Bearded Wanderboos from Africa; a duo of real Bengal Tigers; a quartette of the finest performing African forest-bred lions; the Sun troupe of acting and pantomimic elephants, said to be the very greatest "big animal" act in existence; then there is a plethora of Asiatic and Siberian Camels, dromedaries, sacred cattle from India; huge African chimpanzees, baboons, monkeys, tropical birds, etc. Also an exhibit of real laughing spotted Hyenas; altogether one of the most comprehensive displays of wild beasts and odd animals ever before exhibited anywhere. The show uses ten acres of tents and pavilions and for the big top performance a big six pole canvas is used and and seats provided for the largest possible audiences. Magnificent lights and spectacular illuminations are used at night time, in fact, making the show grounds and the interior of the tents as light as day time.

TWO BOYS DROWN

Canoe Ride in Pine Lake Costs Lives of Two Boyne City Young Men.

Raymond Hulley and Bryan Nulph of Boyne City were drowned in Pine Lake Sunday within twenty feet of the tannery dock. The boys were unable to handle the canoe in the high waves and soon found themselves in the trough of the waves and in a moment the little craft was capsized.

They came to the surface twice and screamed for help and disappeared never to be seen again alive. Both bodies were recovered in a half hour, but every effort to bring them back to life failed.

How to Clean Lace With Magnesia.
Very fine lace, when slightly soiled, can be beautifully cleaned in a preparation of black magnesia in which a small quantity of dry blueing has been sifted. Scrub the magnesia from the back, use dry blueing if obtainable, then coat the lace on both sides with the substance. Wrap it in several thicknesses of a folded towel and beat the towel lightly from end to end, side to side, and repeat until the lace is free from all dirt.

This is an exceptionally successful method of cleaning Irish crochet and silk laces. When too badly soiled make a preparation of equal parts of gasoline and elcodorone, containing a few drops of ammonia, and mix in this sufficient cornstarch to make a soft paste. Apply this to the lace, allow the cornstarch to dry thoroughly, then shake the lace free from dust. Very delicate lace yokes containing silver and gold threads, tinsel or jewels can be cleaned without injury in this manner.

Different Now.

"It's funny how marriage will change a man," said Flogg the other day. "There's Mousier, for example. Before he was married a glance of May Talbot would intoxicate him, so he used to say. BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY OR GREATNESS THE REWARD OF SERVICE.

Mark 10:32-45—July 12.
"The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many."—7. 12.

IT was at the close of Jesus' ministry. For more than three years the Master had been calling His disciples and instructing them. They had come to recognize Him as Messiah, through whom the Messianic Kingdom would be set up, to bless all mankind—dead as well as living. The Master had particularly assured them that if faithful they should sit with Him in His Throne. However, He had not told them that His Kingdom would be a spiritual one, that before they could share it they would need the change of the First Resurrection, and that a whole age would intervene before that Kingdom would be established amongst men. But He had hinted all this.

In today's lesson Jesus again brought up the matter of the shame, ill-treatment and death which was to come upon Him. This time He included the thought of His resurrection from the dead on the third day. However, the matter was incomprehensible to the disciples; and they merely said to themselves, This is another of the Master's dark sayings, which seem so mysterious.

Not until after Pentecost did the disciples get the full grasp of what Jesus had told them. There the Holy Spirit began to make plain the Divine arrangement—that the sufferings of all the Church must first come before the glories of the Kingdom would be revealed and the world's blessing begin.

Another account tells us that the mother of James and John came with them and voiced their plea for them. They believed that the time for distributing the Kingdom honors was very near. We need not assume that these two dear disciples sought the positions closest to the Master merely for ambition's sake. Rather, let us suppose that they loved the Lord very dearly, and therefore thought that they could appreciate a nearness to Him more than could some of the others. In deed, they evidently appreciated being near the Master in His hours of deepest suffering, and were permitted to come nearer than the majority of the Twelve. They were glorious characters, whom the Lord greatly loved.

Let us mark carefully the words of Jesus. He did not say, My dear disciples, there will be no Throne. On the contrary, He declared that while there would be a Throne, and places of preference in that Throne, these would not be distributed by Himself, but by the Father. Places in the Kingdom will be given absolutely in the score of quality.

"Are Ye Able?"—"My Cup, My Baptism?"

Jesus then made known the fact that any position whatever in the Kingdom would require the fulfillment of certain conditions. It was not enough that they had been called to discipleship, that they had left all to follow Him, that they had assented to His teachings. There must be something more; else they might not enter the Kingdom at all. These conditions the Master declared, saying, "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with My baptism?"

In the Divine Plan, God had arranged that whoever will be entrusted with the Messianic Kingdom glory, honor and power for the blessing of the world, must demonstrate cup-worthiness. In Jesus' case the cup meant all those experiences of ignominy and shame, including crucifixion, which He underwent during the three and one-half years of His earthly ministry and which He fully accomplished at Calvary.

The Master's baptism at Jordan was surely a picture of the real baptism.

His going down into the water symbolically represented His going down into death and His resurrection therefrom. His real baptism progressed from Jordan to Calvary. When on the cross He cried, "It is finished," He meant that His baptism into death was completed. He was raised out of that death-baptism on the third day by the Father's power.

That baptism meant the full renunciation of all earthly rights; and the Master asked those dear disciples whether they were able to share His cup of ignominy and His baptism into death. The same principle applies to all followers of Jesus. It is for each to decide whether he will drink of the Master's cup and share His baptism into death. Only the lowly, the self-sacrificing, will be able or willing to endure such experiences.

The other Apostles were indignant that James and John should have made such a request. However, the brethren afforded Jesus opportunity for laying down the rules which must govern in respect to greatness in the Messianic Kingdom. Those who ever serves most will have the highest honor.

SUCCESSFUL SEASON

Prospects Bright for Unusually Big Season at Bay View This Year

The prospects for a successful season at Bay View are unusually bright. Already almost all cottages upon the Bay View grounds are occupied and Evelyn Hall, the chief residence hall, has six times as many occupants as lived there one year ago.

Nothing will cause more universal rejoicing among the friends of Bay View than the news of its new auditorium, which is now being erected. The new structure will cost approximately $40,000 and will be the finest summer auditorium in the United States. It will have a gallery on three sides, be seated with opera chairs, and have a normal seating capacity of three thousand. For this modern meeting house there will be installed a celebrated Picher Organ at an expense of $5,500. This new structure will be dedicated next week.

The assembly which opens on the night of July 15th will be one of the best in Bay View's history. Such attractions as Maude Ballington Booth, Vice-President Marshall, Ida M. Tarbell and the Coburn Players are expected to draw enormous crowds to this 65th annual Chautauqua.

THURSDAY HALF HOLIDAY

Effort Being Made to Have Business Houses Close During Afternoon

An effort is being made by several people to have the merchants of Charlevoix close their places of business on Thursday afternoons, and allow their clerks and themselves to enjoy a half holiday.

The suggestion is a good one, and from what we can learn, many have signified their willingness to close.

Maintained Their Honor.

A deputy in the Italian parliament lost his shirt in a sleeping compartment while on a railway journey. He wrote an indignant letter to the directors of the line, in which he said, "It is shameful that the railway servants, for whom so much has been done by members of parliament, should dare to appropriate the belongings of passengers." A few days after this protest he received a letter signed by 200 railway employees, in which was included a postal order for $1, which, the letter said, was the result of a small collection and which the railway men hoped would enable him to buy another shirt. —Boston Transcript

A Musical Feature of Chautauqua Week

THE WELCH-CHRISTENSEN-BAKER COMPANY.

MISS MARY WELCH, who has a rare contralto voice, rich in its beauty and marked by impressive volume, was for some time soloist in one of Chicago's leading churches, and she has had no trouble in proving her right to a place in the ranks of musical artists. She is tall and stately and has a pleasing personality.

In reference to her work the Chicago Record-Herald says: "Miss Welch has a contralto voice of great richness, wide range and power and charms the audience by the earnestness and simplicity of her manner."

With a rich and pleasing voice which has been cultivated to a notable degree of perfection, Miss Clara L. Christensen is making an enviable record as a dramatic soprano.

In commenting on Miss Christensen's singing the Minneapolis Tribune critic says: "Miss Clara Christensen sang the soprano role. Much praise is due the young soloist for the way in which she sang the different passages of her part. She has a clear, vibrant soprano of lyric quality and a distinct enunciation. These qualities, together with her pleasing manner, won instant recognition."

Miss Alice Wright Baker has all the qualifications of a successful pianist. With natural musical talent she took up the study of music at an early age and graduated with high honors from the Toledo (O.) Conservatory of Music. Later she studied with Mme. Julie Rye-Welch in Chicago. Her training with leading artists has fitted her admirably for her chosen work.

ANOTHER SHOW COMING

Al G. Barnes Wild Animal Circus Billed to Appear Here August 6.

General Contracting Agent N. K. Peck of the Al G. Barnes Wild Animal Circus was here yesterday arranging for the appearance of the Barnes Show in Charlevoix on Thursday, August 6.

"Wherein does the wild animal circus differ from the old-time regulation circus?" was asked.

"The Barnes circus is different because the entire entertainment offered is given by trained animals—largely wild animals," replied Mr. Peck.

"Al G. Barnes, the wild animal training wizard and proprietor of the Barnes show, was the originator of the wild animal circus, launching the innovation nine years ago. That the new amusement idea met with approval from the public is attested by the fact his circus now ranks as the largest animal show in the world."

"For thirty-five years, Mr. Barnes has been a trainer of wild animals, and early in his career decided that the public would welcome an exclusive, clean, wholesome entertainment given by educated animals, and to that purpose he bent his efforts." Every one of the 600 acting animals now with this great show, has been trained under his personal supervision—the greatest number ever assembled in one collection.

WANTS TO BE SENATOR

Hon. William Mears of Boyne Falls Announces That He Will Be a Candidate.

With two already in the race for senator in the 29th senatorial district, a third name will appear on the ballot this fall in the person of Hon. William Mears of Boyne Falls.

The political game is not a new one to "Bill" Mears. He has been a candidate for various offices at different times and served as state senator during the years of 1892-3. He made the run for second term, but was defeated, because, as he says, he could not be influenced to vote on certain measures the way the party leaders wanted him to. He has been an active member of the Charlevoix Grange for a number of years and served as master of Pomona Grange for four years.

Mr. Mears has also been a hard worker for the county agricultural society and has taken active part in the county institutes.

One thing we have always heard said about Mr. Mears was that he was honest, and at all times had the best interests of his constituents uppermost in his mind. He intends to make a hard fight for the office he seeks, and asks the support of the Republican voters of the 29th senatorial district.

HAS A CLEAN RECORD

Richard Lewis Announces Himself as a Candidate for the Office of County Clerk.

Richard Lewis has again announced himself as a candidate for nomination for the office of county clerk of Charlevoix, subject to the will of the Republican voters at the August primaries.

In looking up Mr. Lewis' record in office one will find that the affairs of the office have been given his personal attention and every department shows a careful system of accounting, nothing lacking, which proves him a tireless worker for those who have placed him in power.

The fact that he has held office in the county for several terms is no argument against his re-election, but on the other hand only proves his ability for future service; as by actual work he has become familiar with the many intricate matters arising from time to time.

Mr. Lewis has proven himself honest in office, is painstakingly careful and obliging to the limit and will in the future as in the past work for the best interests of the county. Such a man is "Dick" Lewis, and he asks that, by your votes, he be returned to the office he now holds for another term.

Hinkley for Senator.

Harry Hinkley of Petoskey, until recently a candidate for congress, has announced that he will be a candidate for representative from Emmet County. Emmet county will have to look a long time before they will find a cleaner man than Harry Hinkley to represent them.

Political Announcement.

I wish to announce to the voters of the 29th senatorial district that I will be a candidate on the Republican ticket for the nomination for state senator. I also want to state that if elected I will represent all sections of the district with the utmost impartiality, and will appreciate your support at the August primaries.

VOL. 32. NUMBER 28

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, JULY 15, 1914

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING MONDAY

Will E. Hampton Choice of Voters for Member of Board.

Oluf Nordrum Re-Elected to Succeed Himself—Schools in a Very Prosperous Condition.

The annual meeting of the voters in the Charlevoix school district was held on Monday evening in the high school building and was largely attended.

Many interesting items of business were taken care of at the meeting, the most interesting of which were the election of William E. Hampton as the new member of the board of education and the re-election of Oluf Nordrum to succeed himself on the board. These two men will prove as capable as any that could have been chosen and with the present members will constitute a very competent board.

The report of the secretary was a very interesting one and showed that the district is in a very prosperous condition. Among the things mentioned in this report were the following: A new system of accounts and of transacting the business of the schools has been installed, which to date has proved very satisfactory. Under this method the treasurer is able to give the condition of any of the various funds at any time, also all items of receipts and disbursements. Instead of paying the secretary a salary the board employs a stenographer and bookkeeper to assist the secretary and a superintendent in the clerical work. Proper filing cases have also been installed, in which all correspondence and papers are kept, also a safe in which to keep the most important records.

About one-half of the land owned by the district on the south side has been planted to alfalfa and will hereafter produce an income. The schoolyards have also been improved and other work along this line done.

During the last year the schools have shown a very prosperous condition, both in point of attendance and in the results as shown by the examinations. The report of the superintendent showed the largest percentage of students passing the regular eighth grade examinations in any year in the history of the schools. The graduating class was also the largest in the history of the high school.

Under the present statutes, limiting the price at which school books can be sold by dealers, local merchants have declined to handle the books and the school board has been compelled to furnish them, which has been done at a less cost than heretofore.

The reports showed that during the past year the expenditures of the schools from July 14th, 1913, to July 13th, 1914, amounted to $21,193.84; teachers' salaries, $13,966.36; library expenses, $171.13.

L. M. DeVoe, who for the past four years has acted as superintendent, declined re-election in order to finish work at the university, and his place has been filled by H. A. Craig, the former principal of the high school.

Following is the list of teachers as selected by the board for the coming year:

HIGH SCHOOL

H. A. Craig—Superintendent.
W. A. Ewing—Principal.
Helen Cone—English.
Lena Horst—Latin and German.
W. A. Vogt—Science.
A. B. Maybee—Mathematics.
Anna Lombard—Commercial.

CENTRAL SCHOOL

E. D. Pierce—Principal.
Blanche Lamoreaux—7th.

SOUTH SIDE

Mary Finucan.
Bessie Hargrave.

NORTH SIDE

Hallie Bon.
Sophia Manson.
Mrs. A. L. Coulter—Music and Drawing.
Jessie M. Himes—Principal of County Normal.

An improvement that will probably be made this year is the installation of a new boiler in the heating plant and otherwise overhauling the system.

The present nine months school term will be continued.

WEST MICHIGAN PIKE

One of the Most Enthusiastic Bunch of Road Boosters Ever in the City.

The members of the West Michigan Pike Association are scheduled to arrive in Charlevoix Thursday at 10:30 a. m. Preparations have been made by the local committee to receive them and speeches will be made on the vacant lot known as the Green estate.

A large number of residents of the city and summer visitors met the tourists and escorted them to the city, where they were served with lemonade and otherwise entertained.

The route from the Antrim county line to Emmet county has been marked with signs and in many instances the roads put into shape for better travel. The bunch of autos left Charlevoix at 11 for Petokey, Harbor Springs and Mackinaw and on the return trip are scheduled to pass through Charlevoix at about 8 o'clock Friday morning.

Governor W. N. Ferris, who joined the tourists at Traverse City, made the trip through to this city and north to Petokey. Other speakers mentioned last week were with the bunch.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION

The Child's Physical Development Is to Receive More Attention in Our Schools.

During the summer Superintendent Keeler will publish a bulletin on physical education for the use of the city schools of the state. The bulletin, which is very comprehensive, has been prepared by the Physical Training Department of the Michigan State Normal College at Ypsilanti. It will be of especial value to teachers in cities where no supervisor of this work is employed and will also be found helpful in cities of over 10,000 employing a supervisor of physical education. Act number 40 of the Public Acts of 1911 provides as follows: "Physical training shall be included in the branches to be regularly taught in public schools in city school districts having a population of more than 10,000 and in the state normal schools, subject to such rules and regulations as the superintendent of public instruction may prescribe, and it shall be the duty of the boards of education in such city school districts and of the state board of education to make provisions in the schools and institutions under their jurisdiction for the introduction of a systematic and educational course of physical training; to engage competent instructors; to provide the necessary equipment; to establish and conduct same; and to adopt such methods as shall adapt the same to the capacity of the pupils in the various grades therein; and other boards may make such provisions. The curriculum in all normal schools of this state shall contain a regular teacher's course on physical education under competent jurisdiction." While city school boards have been urged to introduce a systematic course under competent instructors, allowance has been made where lack of room and other conditions have prevented the immediate introduction of the work. It is believed, however, that sufficient time has been allowed to remove such conditions. The work in the bulletin is arranged by grades and is the result of thoughtful preparation on the part of those who have had extensive training and experience along this line. It will be ready for distribution at the opening of school in September.

FATHER CHARLEVOIX-1682-1761

Interesting Paper From Pen of Mr. Brayton Saltonstall to Begin in Next Issue of Courier.

In next week's issue of the Courier will appear the first installment of the lengthy paper from the pen of Mr. Brayton Saltonstall, entitled "Father Charlevoix, 1682-1761." The paper was read at a regular meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society early last spring, and has been pronounced by those who heard it and have since had the privilege of reading it, as being one of the best ever written on the subject.

In presenting the paper Mr. Saltonstall said: "I wish to make acknowledgment as to the source of my information. From the various encyclopedias I received but little help. I am much indebted to Professor J. Edmond Roy, professor of Belles-lettres at Ottawa, Canada, who read an essay on Charlevoix in 1907 before the Royal Society of Canada, a copy of the first part of which he sent me, with a promise of the second part when published. I owe most of all to the 'Journal' of Father Charlevoix, a copy of which in the original French I found in the Chicago Public Library, copious extracts from which are incorporated into this paper. The subject is too large to be covered in the limited time allowed, but I have tried to present interesting facts as briefly as possible."

Remember the first installment begins in the next issue of the Courier, and those who desire extra copies should notify us at once.

FALL ELECTION AMENDMENTS

Now Thought That at Least Four Will Be Voted Upon.

One is Proposed Under Initiative Clause of the Michigan Constitution.

It is now assured that at least four amendments to the constitution will be voted on at the coming fall election. Three of these are concurrent resolutions of the last legislature, while the fourth is one proposed by the New Era Association of Grand Rapids under the initiative amendments to the constitution passed April 7th, 1913.

The amendment proposed by the association has received the required number of signatures to the petitions and must reach the voters. It will go as section 10 of article 12 and is proposed for the benefit of fraternal associations. If passed it will permit associations of that sort to issue death benefits, something they are not allowed to do now.

Under the initiative amendment passed last April there is necessary for all petitions to amend the signatures of 10 per cent. of the legal voters of the state. Under present condition this number amounts to a little more than 54,000.

Of the other three amendments the first refers to the issuance of bonds by the state to pay for improvements for wagon roads. There is now no constitutional provision which can include road money issued by bonds in the $250,000 bond limit allowed by the state.

The second resolution referring to the part of the constitution referring to local government. It permits a county in the state to issue bonds to raise money for the construction of drains and the development and improvement of agricultural lands.

The third legislatively proposed amendment is the one giving traveling men the right to vote no matter whether they are in the state at the time of the election or not.

There have been several petitions for an amendment providing state-wide prohibition, but the necessary number of names has not been reached.

BROKE COLLARBONE

William Withers of Marion Township Falls Off Rack While Loading Hay.

Wm. Withers, the well-known farmer and dairyman of Marion township, fell off his wagon Thursday afternoon while loading hay and broke his collarbone.

The forward part of the rack had been partly loaded and as Mr. Withers was backing up towards the rear of the rack his heel struck a crosspiece and he fell backward off the load, striking on his head, breaking his collarbone and otherwise badly shaking him up.

The accident to Mr. Withers comes at the busiest time of the year on the farm and, while he will be able to be around, he will have to depend on his help to get the work done for some time.

SAYS SHAME HASTENED DEATH

H. L. Swift Could Not Stand Punishment for Crimes He was Convicted Of.

Former Manager of Beulah Home at Boyne City Passes Away at Home in Detroit.

Herman L. Swift, former manager and founder of the Beulah Home for Boys at Boyne City, died at his home in Detroit on Monday of last week. His death is said to have been hastened as the result of shame and grief over the verdict against him and the humiliation of what his friends have referred to as an unjust punishment.

H. L. Swift was born at Eaton Rapids, where he lived until about 24 years ago, when he took up the boys' home work. He established one home at Leoni, Jackson county, and later went to Boyne City, where he established the Beulah Land Farm. He conducted the latter for a number of years, being highly respected throughout the state until an ugly rumor was started concerning his relations with the small boys at the home. An investigation was conducted, which greatly incensed the citizens there and throughout Charlevoix county against the man. Feeling ran high, for the opinion of nearly all was that Swift was guilty of the offense. He, however, maintained he was innocent and had influential friends at work trying to secure his pardon. He was sentenced to Lonia for one year from the circuit court of Charlevoix county. After repeated and determined efforts by his friends he was released by the pardon board several months ago.

The remains were taken to Eaton Rapids for burial. His widow and son survive him.

GOT THEIR MAN

Sheriff of Grand Traverse County Enlists Help of Local Officers.

Sheriff Smith of Grand Traverse county came to this city Friday of last week after one Donald McKenzie of Booneville, who had stolen a boat from a party at Traverse City.

He enlisted the help of Under Sheriff Novak and Chief of Police Alcock and they left the same evening to get their man, who was reported camping on the shore of Lake Michigan near Fisherman's Island. He was found by the party of officers and was placed under arrest and taken to Traverse City the following day. At the time of his arrest he was armed with a gun and cartridge belt. He has the reputation of being a bad citizen.

TICKETS ARE HERE

Preparations to be Completed Friday-Afternoon for Seven Day Chautauqua.

George C. Rheinfrank, advance agent for the Redpath chautauquas, was in the city Monday evening to make arrangements with the local committee in regard to the seven-day chautauqua booked for Charlevoix from August 12 to 18.

Practically all the supplies—banners, tickets, etc.—are here and in a short time the city will be properly decorated, banners stretched across the principal streets and the sale of season tickets begun.

Mr. Rheinfrank states that this year's chautauqua is better than ever before and predicts that the people of this city do not realize what is in store for them. He promises the very best of programs and attractions every day during the seven days.

The members of the Committee of Twenty-one are requested to meet at the council room on Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock sharp. The meeting is called for the purpose of thoroughly organizing in preparation for the coming chautauqua and the appointing of the various committees. Every member is requested to be present and those not members who are willing to help out in the work will be welcomed.

NO MORE FLIES

Eugene Fairchild's Blacksmith Shop Now Equipped With Screens Throughout.

"Horseshoeing Made Easy" is well illustrated at the blacksmith shop of Eugene Fairchild in this city. "Gene" is a resourceful fellow and if there is anything he hates to do it is to shoe horses during fly time.

Usually it takes one man to shoe the horse and one or two to keep the flies off during the shoeing. To do away with this Gene has screened every door and window in his shop and "shooed" out the flies, so that it is an unusual thing to see a horse switch his tail more than a couple of times while in the shop.

Both the public and the horses seem to appreciate it, too.

SUFFERS GREAT LOSS BY FIRE

Musical Instruments Company's Plant at Boyne City Burned to Ground.

Fire Loss Estimated to be Over Fifty Thousand Dollars—Organized Last Winter.

Last Friday morning between four and five o'clock fire completely destroyed the Musical Instruments Company's plant at Boyne City. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is thought the conflagration started from the electric heating plant. When discovered it was but a small blaze and within five minutes the whole building was a mass of flames. The structure was frame and of such material that once the fire got under way it was impossible to stop it.

Besides the loss of the building and equipment several thousand dollars' worth of nearly-completed instruments were destroyed. Nothing was saved. An eighteen hundred dollar player orchestra which was to have been installed in the Princess Theatre in a few days was destroyed, while another expensive instrument about to be shipped to Bay City was also burned, besides thousands of dollars' worth of other partly-completed instruments.

The company was organized last winter and backed by considerable local capital. The building it occupied was formerly occupied by the Badger Wood-entwre Co. Twenty experienced men were employed and twelve more were about to be put on. It is not known at present whether the company will rebuild or not.

One of the Best Programs in Years This Season at Bay View Assembly.

The twenty-fifth annual Bay View Assembly, which will begin Thursday evening, July 16th, has a large number of unique features. At the opening concert by the Williams Jubilee Singers the new $1000 auditorium will be officially dedicated. On Friday and Saturday a M. Tarbell, who won a national reputation through her exposure of the Standard Oil Company, will lecture on the "New Industrial Idealism."

The sixth annual Bay View Bible conference will begin this week with Dean Shailer Matthews of Chicago University as the preacher Sunday morning. On July 20 and 21 the Killarney Girls will be heard in three grand concerts of old Irish songs.

The summer university, which opened Monday, has a new department of millinery, conducted by Harry Doherty of South Bend, Indiana. Mr. Doherty, who is the son of a millionaire, graduated from the University of Illinois as a civil engineer, but entered the millinery business and won the gold medal of the National Milliners Association when but 22 years of age.

DANGER IN DELAY

Kidney Diseases are Too Dangerous for Charlevoix People to Neglect.

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they so often get a firm hold before the sufferer recognizes them. Health will be gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, lumbago, urinary troubles, dropsy, gravel and Bright's disease may follow as the kidneys get worse. Don't neglect your kidneys. Help the kidneys with Doan's Kidney Pills, which are so strongly recommended right here in Charlevoix.

Bert Beaudoin of 328 Bridge street, Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I was bothered off and on for several months by my kidneys. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and I suffered from severe backache and pains in my loins. I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, obtained at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought fine results. I am now free from the aches and pains and my kidneys are normal."
Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Beaudoin had. Foster-McMurtre Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

Oil Treatment for Stomach Troubles.

A simple prescription made up of a combination of pure vegetable oils is producing wonderful results for sufferers from stomach, liver and intestinal trouble. The remedy—which is said to have originated in France, where it has been used for years by the peasantry—was introduced into this country by Geo. H. Mayr, a leading Chicago druggist, who cured himself of severe stomach, liver and intestinal troubles by its use. Those who have used it say the first dose is sufficient to convince anyone of its remarkable merit and that within twenty-four hours the sufferer feels like a new person. This medicine—which has become known as Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy—is now sold by first-class druggists everywhere. It is now sold here by all druggists.

BARNES CIRCUS COMING

Program of instructive, laughing, amazing, thrilling Acts all Done by Animals.

The A. G. Barnes Big Three Ring Circus will exhibit in Charlevoix Thursday, August 6th, giving performances at 2 and 8 p. m.

Much can be claimed for the genuine merit and originality of this big circus. There is all the pomp and splendour of the circuses we have known in the past. All the glittering tinsel, sawdust rings, inspiring music and grand entrance of stately horses, ponies, elephants, clowns and performers. Pink lemonade and peanut vendors cry their wares and add to the general good spirit. Yet, when the performance starts, one instantly recognizes a wide departure from the conventional, stereotyped routine which has prevailed since the earliest days of tented entertainment.

Instead of the usual one sea the very unusual in the Barnes programme. The principal acts are done by educated wild and domestic animals in two rings and a big steel-barred arena. These animal actors number 600 and are trained to an amazing degree of proficiency. Such vim and dash do they put into their work that not a dull moment is experienced from the grand cavalcade entry until the final group of man-eating lions are driven to their cages.

There are acrobats, jugglers, aerial performers, high divers, bareback riders and all other forms of circus entertainment, but instead of people appearing in the acts wild and domestic animals take their places. Lions, pumas, bears and leopards ride galloping horses; sea lions juggle balls and other articles; dolls and monkeys jump from the top of the tent into tents; elephants act as clowns and do many comical things; high school horses and beautiful ponies appear in brilliant dances and military drills. In fact, almost every species of animal is shown as an actor.

Twenty-four man-eating African lions are introduced in one act, the most sensational wild animal act ever shown. Sixty leopards, jaguars, tigers, pumas and bears are presented by a coterie of young woman trailers.

A great array of clean, clever comedy permeates the entire programme, provided by a dozen really funny clowns and fifty comedy elephants, dogs, goats, monkeys, ponies, zebras and mules.

A glittering mile long street parade, in which four bands take part, is presented to the public at 10:30.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared. Ivory Boynton, who is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his sister's mother. Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is uneducated. Mark kisses her. Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilsons, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Hayting time arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourages to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is tickle.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossips are busy with the names of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

CHAPTER XVII.

At the Brick Store.

THERE were two grand places for gossip in the community, the oil tavern on the Edgewood side of the bridge and the brick store in Riverboro. The company at the Edgewood tavern would be a trifle different in character, more picturesque, imposing and eclectic because of the transient guests that gave it change and variety. There might be found a judge or a lawyer on his way to court, a sheriff with a handcuffed prisoner, a farmer or two stopping on the road to market with a cartful of produce and an occasional teamster, peddler and stage driver. On winter nights champion story tellers like Jed Morrill and Rish Bixby would drop in there and hang their woolen neck comforters on the pegs along the wall side, where there were already hats, topcoats and fur mufflers, as well as stacks of whips, canes and oxcords standing in the corners. They would then enter the room, rubbing their hands gaily and, nodding to Compadron Pike, Cephas Cole, Phil Perry and others, ensconce themselves snugly in the group by the great open fireplace. The landlord was always glad to see them enter, for their stories, though old to him, were new to many of the assembled company and had a remarkable effect on the consumption of liquid refreshment.

On summer evenings gossip was languid in the village, and if any occurred at all it would be on the benches at one or the other side of the bridge. When cooler weather came the group of local wits gathered in Riverboro, either at Uncle Bart's jammer's shop or at the brick store, according to fancy. The latter place was perhaps the favorite for Riverboro talkers. It was a large, two-story, square brick building, with a big moonlit chimney and an open fire. When every house in the two villages had six feet of snow around it roads would always be frozen to the brick store, and a crowd of ten or fifteen men would be gathered there talking, laughing, betting, smoking, chewing, bragging, playing checkers, shuffling and "sawing sticks."

Some of the men had been through the war of 1812 and could display wounds needed on the field of valor, others were still proud of scars won in encounters with the Indians and there was one old codger, a revolutionary veteran, Bill Dunham by name, who would add bloody tales of his encounters with the "Hussions."

"Tis an awful sin to have on your soul," Bill would say from his place in a dark corner, where he would sit with his hat pulled over his eyes, till the psychological moment came for the "Hussions" to be trotted out. "Tis an awful sin to have on your soul the extermination of a race o' men even if they want nothin' more'n to marry ignorant cockroaches. Them was the great days for fightin'! The Hussions was the biggest men I ever seen on the field, most of 'em standin' six feet eight in their stockin's—but Lord! how we wallowed 'em! Once we had a cannon mounted an' loaded for 'em that was so huge we had to draw the hull into it with a yoke of oxen!"

Bill paused from force of habit, just as he had paused for the last twenty years. There had been times when rurs of furious laughter had greeted this boast, but most of this particular group had heard the yarn more than once and let it pass with a smile and a whiff, remembering the night that Abel Day had asked old Bill how they got the oxen out of the cannon on that memorable occasion.

"Oh," said Bill, "that was easy enough. We jest myoked 'em an' turned 'em out o' the primin' hole!"

It was only early October, but there had been a killing frost, and Ezra Simms, who kept the brick store, hung some shavings and small wood on the hearth and lighted a blaze, just to induce a little trade and start conversation on what threatened to be a dull evening. Peter Morrill, Jed's eldest brother, had lately returned from a long trip through the state and into New Hampshire and his adventures by field and flood were always worth listening to. He went about the country attending clocks and so many an old timepiece still bears his name, with the date of repairing written in pencil on the inside of the door.

There was never any lack of subjects at the brick store, the idiosyncrasies of the neighbors being the most prolific source of anecdote and comment. Whenever all else failed there was always the latest story of Deacon Baxter's parsimony, in which the village traced the influence of heredity.

"He can't hardly help it, inheritin' it on both sides," was Abel Day's opinion. "The Baxters was allers stingy from time 'memorial, and Fox's the stingiest of 'em. When I look at his ugly mug an' hear his snarl'n' voice I thinks to myself, he's got the same way his father did. When old Levi Baxter was left a widder man in that house o' his'n up river he grove vuss an' wuss, if you remember, till he wa'n't hardly human at the last, and I don't believe Fox even went up to his own father's funeral."

"Twould 'a' served old Levi right if nobody else had gone," said Rish Bixby. "When his wife died he refused to come into the house till the last minute. He stayed to work in the barn till all the folks had assembled and even the men were all settin' down on benches in the kitchen. The parson sent me out for him, and I'm dead if the old skunk didn't come in through the crowd with his sleeves rolled up—went to the sink and washed, and then set down in the room where the coffin was, as cool as a cucumber."

"I remember that funeral well," corroborated Abel Day. "An' Mrs. Day loved Levi say to his daughter, as soon as they'd put poor old Mrs. Baxter in the grave, 'Come on, Martty; there's no use cryin' over spilt milk; we'd better go home an' husk out the rest of that corn.' Old Fox could have inherited plenty o' meanness from his father, that's certain, an' he's added to his inheritance right along, like the thirty man he is. I hate to think o' them two fine girls wearin' their pig gers to the bone for his benefit!"

"Oh, well, 'twon't last forever," said Rish Bixby. "They're the handsomest

"I remember that funeral well!"

couple o' girls on the river, an' they'll get husbands afore many years. Patience 'll have one pretty soon, by the looks. She never budes an inch but Mark Wilson or Phil Perry are follerin' behind, with Cephas Cole watchin' his chance right along too. Waitstill don't seem to have no bonux; what with flyin' around to keep up with the deacon an' bein' a mother in Patience, her hands is full, I guess."

"If things was a little mite different all round I could prognosticate who Waitstill could keep house for," was Peter Morrill's opinion.

"You mean Ivory Boynton? Well, if the deacon was asked he'd never give his consent, that's certain, an' Ivory ain't in no position to keep a wife anyways. What was it you heard 'bout Aaron Boynton up to New Hampshire, Peter?" asked Abel Day.

"Consid'able, one way an' another, an' none of it would 'a' been any comfort to Ivory. I guess Aaron, 'n' Jake Cochrane was both of 'em more interested in savin' the sisters' souls than the brothers'. Aaron was a fine apperlin' man, and so was Jake for that matter, 'n' they both had the gift o' gab. There's nothin' like a flumber tongue if you want to please the women folks. If report says true, Aaron died of a fever out in Ohio somewhere. Cortland's the place, I believe. Seems 's if he hid his trail all the way from New Hampshire somehow, for as a usual thing a man o' book learnin' like him would be remembered wherever he went. Wouldn't you call Aaron Boynton a turrible Purified man, Timothy?"

Timothy Grant, the parish clerk, had just entered the store on an errand; but, being directly addressed and judging that the subject under discussion was a discreet one and that it was too early in the evening for drinking to begin, he joined the group by the fireplace. He had preached in Vermont for several years as an itinerant Methodist minister before settling down to farming in Edgewood, only giving up his profession because his quiver was so full of little Grants that a wandering life was difficult and undesirable. When Uncle Bart Cole had remarked that Mrs. Grant had a little of everything in the way of baby stock now—black, red an' yaller haired, dark and light complected, fat an' lean, tall an' short, twins an' singles—Jed Morrill had observed dryly, "Yes, Mrs. Grant kind o' reminds me of charity."

"How's that?" inquired Uncle Bart.

"She loveth all things," chuckled Jed.

"Aaron Boynton was indeed a man of most adhesive brainin'," agreed Timothy, who had the reputation of the largest and most unusual vocabulary in Edgewood. "Next to Jacob Cochrane I should say Aaron had more grandiloquence as an orator than any man we've ever had in these parts. 'It don't seem 's if Ivory was goin' to take after his father that way. The little fellow, now, is smart 's a whip an' could hick the tail off a brass monkey.'"

"Yes, but Rodman ain't no kin to the Boyntons," Abel reminded him. "He inherits from the other side o' the house."

"That's so. Well, Ivory does for certain, an' takes after his mother, right enough, for she high-tspoken 'n' dozen words in as many years, I guess. Ivory's got a sight o' book knowledge, though, an' they do say he could talk Greek an' Latin both, if we had any o' 'em in the community to converse with. I've never paid no intention to the dead languages, bein' so occupied with other studies."

"Why do they call 'em the dead languages, Tim?" asked Rish Bixby.

"Because all them that ever spoke 'em has perished off the face o' the land," Timothy answered gravely.

"Dead an' gone they be, lock, stock and barrel, yet there was a time when Latin an' Greek an' Hebrew an' Sanskrit an' Ptolemaic an' Hebrew an' Sumerian was chatterin' away in their own tongues, an' so pow'ful that they was wallopin' the whole earth, you might say."

"I bet yer they never tried to wallop these here United States," interjected Bill Dunham from the dark corner by the molasses hogshand.

"Is Ivory in here?" The door opened and Rodman Boynton appeared on the threshold.

"No, sonny, Ivory ain't been in this evening," replied Ezra Simms. "I hope there ain't nothin' the matter over to your house?"

"No, nothin' particular," the boy answered, "only Aunt Boynton and I can't find Ivory anywhere."

"Come along with me, I'll help you look for him, an' then I'll go as far as the line with yer if we don't find him." And kindly Rish Bixby took the boy's hand and left the store.

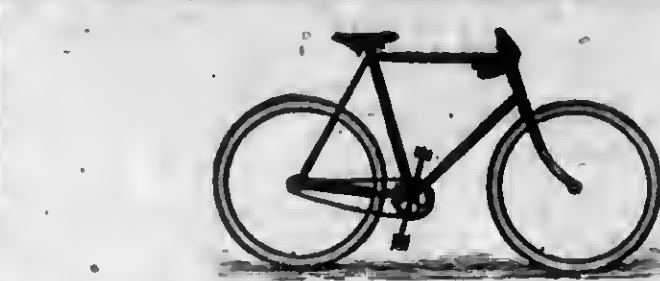

"Mrs. Boynton's had a spell, I guess," suggested the storekeeper, peering through the door into the darkness.

"Tain't like Ivory to be out nights and leave her to Rod."

"She don't have no spells," said Abel Day. "Uncle Bart sees consid'able of Ivory, an' he says she's mother is as quiet as a lamb. Couldn't you get no kind of a certificate of Aaron's death out of that Enfield feller, Peter? Seems 's if that poor woman oughter be stopped watchin' for a dead man; tucker in herself all out an' keepin' Ivory an' the boy all nerved up."

"I've told Ivory everything I could gather up in the way of information and give him the names of the folks in Ohio that had writ back to New Hampshire. I didn't dilate on Aaron's goin' on in Edgewood and Portsmouth, cause I deserv' 'twas nothin' but scandal. Them as hates the Cochraneites 'll never allow there's any good in 'em, whereas I've met some as is savin' the Lord good an' constant an' indicatin' in no kind of foolishness an' deviltry what-so-ever."

"Speakin' o' Hussions," said Bill Dunham from his corner, "I remem-

This is the season when political booms are springing up in all directions in preparation for the coming primary, when public officials will be selected for local and general offices. In some instances the ones seeking political preferment will be fitted for the position which they seek, while in others they will be strangers to the qualifications that are really demanded for the candidates. The old idea still prevails that the best vote-getter is the man who should make the race in order to insure party victory, when in reality it is the real qualifications of the man for the place that should be looked at carefully by both the party leaders and the voters. In choosing a man to fill an important position in private business his qualifications for that particular job are taken into careful consideration and all his individual points weighed before he is accepted. If this plan is advisable in the business world it should be equally applicable in the political world, for politics should be in reality applied business, with its object real good for the greatest number. Out of the multiplicity of candidates it is possible to select well-qualified men for the various offices and this fact should not be forgotten by the voters when they are registering their choice at the polls. A competent public official is a power for good and the people always profit when they make a selection upon the basis of actual qualification instead of personal popularity and vote getting ability. With the loosening of political ties which is so evident all over the country the people are bound to profit. Hard and fast party lines—while good for the party leaders—do not work out to the advantage of the people. The demand for service in business is rapidly spreading to the political field and is one of the healthy symptoms of the times. The politics of the future are destined to be cleaner than those of the past because of the interest people are taking in this direction. As the people become wiser they demand better candidates for public office and this tendency is bound to bring less politics and more accomplishment in political lines.

TWELVE newspapers below the straits in the Eleventh Congressional District have strongly endorsed Jos. E. Bayliss for the Republican nomination for Congress. A number more have recently been saying nice things about Mr. Bayliss, even though some of them had previously been inclined to another candidate. Mr. Bayliss' splendid legislative record, his clean life, his frank, friendly manner and his recognized ability especially fit him for the office he seeks, and the people, recognizing these qualities, are coming to his support and his nomination by a large majority is practically assured.

It is always a healthful indication when there are several candidates for public office. It not only shows a high grade of citizenship, but gives the people a real chance to pick out the best man regardless of their pull or politics. The public good should always be considered higher than party victory.

TO SATISFY our curiosity we asked a well-known citizen whom he considered the best people in town. He said: "Those who believe in the town, work for improvements, speak a good word for the place and spend their money at home." Are you one of our best citizens?

Hot crops, full stomachs and less cussing is the prediction.

Many Crooks in the North.

From Petoskey issues the report that there are 100 per cent. more crooks, hoboes and toughs in that locality than at the same time last year. Petty thieving has become rather common. The home of Mrs. S. S. Bump at Petoskey was recently entered and a quantity of goods taken during the absence of the family. Sixteen dollars in cash and a valuable brooch were among the more important articles taken. The city has been continually frequented by that class who prefer to live by the hand out route rather than work and enjoy simple prosperity.

TWO GULF STREAMS.

The One of Air Is What Creates the Deserts of the East.

The gulf stream, as every one knows, is a broad river of warm water which starts in the gulf of Mexico, wanders across the cold Atlantic ocean and dumps into the British seas, giving them a warm climate and no end of fog and rain. But few people know that in the atmosphere above there is a second gulf stream of warm, moist air.

This slow, damp breeze strikes the British Isles and does not warm off like the gulf stream, but continues over Europe. As it passes over Sweden, Finland and northern Russia these cold lands chill the wind and cause it to drop its moisture in the form of rain. The lakes and rivers of these northern countries are all supplied by the moisture taken up from the gulf stream.

The rotation of the earth makes this wind veer gradually to the southward about the time it has given up the last of its moisture and warmth. As a mighty draft of dry, cold air, the gulf stream wind moves on across the plains of Russia. As it approaches the equator the wind warms again, but becomes ever drier.

At last, as it sweeps over Turkestan, Arabia and Sahara, it evaporates like a great sheet of blotting paper all water it meets, forming the deserts of Turkestan, Sahara and Arabia. Fortunately this devastating wind now leaves the continent, becomes the trade winds and returns to its starting point at the gulf of Mexico.

Several somewhat visionary schemes have been suggested for altering the course of the gulf stream. One of the immediate results of any such change would be the shifting of the present deserts to other parts of the world.—New York American.

MOLECULAR ATTRACTION.

That Is What Permits a Needle to Float Upon Water.

A steel needle laid carefully on a still water surface will float, although the weight of steel or iron is greater than that of an equal volume of water. Molecules of liquids cohere, but with a force far less than in solids or viscous substances. But the thin needle of metal gently placed horizontally on water has not quite weight enough to break the surface tension—that is, molecular attraction—of the water below it.

Attraction of molecules is a force that exerts great influence in nature. Thus this force draws particles of water in fogs into drops of water which are heavy enough to fall as rain. Dew is a formation of minute particles of water into drops at rest on surfaces.

The molecular attraction of the heavy liquid—mercury—is intense, else this heavy liquid could not be drawn by it into spheres or drops. Melted lead forms into minute globes when let fall in high shot towers.

There is a great difference in the intensity of molecular attraction, as may be observed in alcohol, gasoline, sulphuric ether and similar liquid liquids and oil, sirup, glycerin and other viscous liquids.

Soup bubbles could not be blown in alcohol or benzine, but they form readily in water. And the molecules in the thin films really attract with some force, else the bubbles would burst before they become so large. The most elaborate mathematics are required to handle molecular forces, fit only for technical journals.—New York American.

Working the Morse Code.

Fastness of the telegraph code has sometimes facilitated evil practices. Charles Gallraith, formerly chief superintendent of telegraphs at Bombay, described one notable case. Messages used to be brought by mail steamer from Suez to Port de Galle and relayed thence overland to Bombay. Native operators found it profitable, especially during the cotton famine, to communicate the tenor of dispatches to outside confederates. At first the method employed was to write a copy of the telegram, roll it up tightly and drop it out of the window. But this was soon detected and stopped. Then the operator would lean his head on his hand as if musing and drum with his fingers. Knowledge of the Morse code by the man outside did the rest.

An Inch of Rain.

An inch of rainfall is equivalent to 600 barrels of forty-five gallons each to the acre. This amount of water weighs over 113 tons. Think of hauling it to the farms in wagons holding a ton each! That seemingly light air and clouds are capable of handling this enormous amount of water is one of the marvels of meteorology. One inch of rain is not such a heavy rainfall either.—Farm and Fireside.

"He wears a wig. The very idea!"

IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

Representative Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo and Senator Frank D. Scott of Alpena are the principal contenders for the Republican nomination for congress in the eleventh district and the outcome of the primary battle is being watched with considerable interest by those who observed the work of the two candidates during the last session of the legislature.

If the legislative records of the two men are carefully measured by the voters of the eleventh congressional district Rep. Bayliss should have little difficulty in winning the nomination by a handsome plurality. Bayliss fought shoulder to shoulder with the members of the lower house who were working for constructive and progressive legislation, and his colleagues never doubted his honesty or sincerity of purpose. Early in the session Rep. Bayliss allied himself with a faction seeking to place upon the statute books of Michigan certain reform measures and in the face of biting criticism from some of the old guard he stood by his guns and finished his work with credit to himself and his district.

Over on the senate side was Frank D. Scott of Alpena, a young man of pleasing personality and thunderous oratory, who sometimes talked against a proposition and then voted in favor of it.

Senator Scott became the laughing stock of the legislature when the Covert-McGreggor contest was being decided in the upper house. Frank Covert was the Republican candidate in the Oakland-Washtenaw district and claimed that he had won over Jas. E. McGregor, who had been declared elected on the Democratic ticket. Covert had the backing of the Republican party and they seemed determined to seat him whether there was any merit in his claim or not.

When the proposition came up in the senate Scott made a great speech, in which he pleaded with his colleagues to seat Covert, and when the roll was called he voted to seat Senator McGregor.—Lansing State Journal.

This is the political season, when the candidates come to the people for their sanction and support. After the election the tables will be turned and the people will have to go to the elected candidates for what they desire in state and national legislation. Look well to the man. Examine his past record and every-day character. His action as your representative may be accurately gauged by his standing as a man and his acts in the past. One man who is a candidate for one of the more important offices and who will meet the test in every way is Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo, candidate for representative in congress. If our legislative halls were filled with men of his stamp there would be little danger of legislation being controlled by special interests and the people would be truly represented.—Pellston Journal.

Will Lawyer Yelland and Lawyer Scott please make a sworn statement to the public as to what the arrangements and agreements are in consideration of which Lawyer Yelland withdraws from the congressional contest and goes campaigning for and with Lawyer Scott? Has Lawyer Yelland been paid, or is he to be paid, $1000 or any part of that amount for "expenses?" And has a Lawyer Yelland been promised by Lawyer Scott the job of Delta county paper distributor? It is information which the public is entitled to have. We would not suspect that some such consideration as that mentioned might enter into the deal were it not for the fact that such was the proposition made by Lawyer Yelland to Candidate Bayliss several weeks ago. Mr. Bayliss was too much of a man to consider the proposition, but, then, Mr. Bayliss is not a lawyer.—Escanaba Journal.

Had a Good Sale.

Ed. A. Reed made it a point to come to the Courier office after his recent auction sale and say that the Courier method of advertising a sale of this nature is the only one. His sale was held Saturday afternoon and he sold everything he had, realizing an amount far beyond his expectations. The crowd—while not large—was a buying one and everything brought a good price.

An Idle Executioner.

Among the strange customs honored in Persia is one which empowers an executioner, after performing his dread office, to claim the payment from the parents or relatives of the victim of a sum not exceeding 500 to-mans, about $800. Rarely, however, is this sum forthcoming, and as a consequence the murderer is often imprisoned for life on account of the refusal of the executioner to work for nothing. The sentence is therefore mechanically commuted more often than not.

Iron Duke IN SANITARY SACKS

New Method of Delivering Flour

Packages are Odor Proof—Germ Proof—Moisture Proof and Dirt Proof

In a few days the Argo Milling Company will put all its Iron Duke Flour in the Sanitary Sack. This sack is the same quality cotton formerly used but it is treated by special process that puts a thin coating of paper over the inside of the sack making the sack absolutely TIGHT AND SANITARY.

The great advantage is that unlike the ordinary paper sack, this can when empty, be put to the same household uses as the present cotton sack, by first soaking in water so the coating is easily removed.

Everywhere is the cry for CLEAN FOOD PRODUCTS, so be the first to use Iron Duke out of Sanitary sacks.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. John W. Benford of Mt. Pleasant Sunday, July 7th, a daughter. Mrs. Benford will be remembered as Miss Lola Cross, formerly a resident of this city, the daughter of A. E. Cross of East Jordan.

County Clerk Richard Lewis left on Tuesday evening for Mount Clemens, where he will attend the annual convention of the association of county clerks in session there this week. He will also visit his brother at Lapeer while on the trip.

Crops of all kinds continue to promise well. The recent fine rains soaked the ground thoroughly and, it is estimated, added thousands of dollars to the value of the hay crop. Potatoes, corn, oats, wheat and, in fact, crops of all kinds are looking fine. Many farmers are now engaged in cutting their hay.

County Treasurer Payton has a fine picture of Sheriff Ford Robbins' force of deputies and under-sheriffs. Those who are in the office should not fail to take a good look at this picture and at the same time be sure and note carefully the determined look and square jaw on the likeness labeled Sheriff Robbins.

District Engineer Neilson of Lansing was in East Jordan Thursday to inspect the state award road just completed east of that city by Commissioner Hipp. He found it alright and there is now completed three miles of as good macadam road as there is in the state. Commissioner Hipp has started on his next section the stretch toward Charlevoix and there will be some more good roads in the near future.

Ferris Consents

After a careful examination of the petitions for his nomination in the primaries, and after reading the numerous telegrams and letters from all parts of the state, and taking other matters in consideration, etc., etc., Governor Woodbridge N. DUTY YOU OWE YOUR TOWN

Be Faithful and Honest With Yourself.

OBLIGATIONS OF CONSUMER.

Before Sending His Money to Distant Concerns Every Citizen Should Consider the Duty He Owes His Home Town—Local Merchants Ready and Willing to Compete.

(Copyrighted, 1914, by Thomas J. Sullivan.) Duty is a power that rises with us in the morning and goes to rest with us at night. It is coextensive with the action of our intelligence. It is the shadow which cleaves to us, go where we will.

Let us do our duty in our shop or kitchen, in the market, the street, the office, the farm, the school, the home, just as faithfully as if we stood in the front ranks of some great battle and knew that victory for mankind depended upon our bravery, strength and skill.

When we do that the very humblest of us will be serving in that great army which achieves the welfare of the world.

A Dollar Lost.

It should be the slogan of every rural consumer never to send away for goods that he can just as well buy at home. Every time you send a dollar to a mail order house that dollar, as far as you and your community are concerned, is practically out of circulation.

Your own home merchant is the one who helps to keep up your schools, your churches and your town. He is the one who deserves your trade and not some catalogue house in Chicago or elsewhere.

Goods on Unsecured Promises.

When you have nothing to give in exchange, to whom do you go for accommodations until some uncertain time when you can pay?

Do you not always find your home merchant ready and willing to let his goods go on promises, not guaranteed notes, but verbal promises, trusting to your honesty and good luck in meeting the obligation later?

How many farms have been paid for by your merchants advancing both the goods necessary to keep life in the body and cash to meet that dreaded interest on the mortgage?

Under the same conditions would the farmer trust the merchant for months and months with the produce of his farm, or would he ask for cash or its equivalent upon delivery of the goods?

Not a Robber or Cheat.

We know that the average consumer does not feel that his local merchant is a robber or a cheat; but, like all humankind, the catalogues and prices of mail order houses appeal to him, and he forwards his order and cash without considering the injustice he is doing himself, his merchant and his home town.

The catalogues of the mail order house are illumined with pictures to catch the eye of the unwary. They range in complexion from a brunette lamina to a blond emerald bird. They offer to sell you anything from a philosopher's stone to a cypress shingle saved out of a submarine.

Cash Versus Credit.

It seems unbelievable, but it is nevertheless a fact, showing the entire lack of any sense of justice, that many people regard their local stores as merely institutions of accommodation. When these people have cash to spend it goes to the faraway mail order houses, but when times are dull, when they are sick or out of work or during the season when farmers are not turning their produce into cash, what do they do? Do they write to the catalogue house and ask for credit?

If they did do you think they would get it? Not on your life! Those concerns must have cash, must have it in advance, must have it before you can even see the goods you buy. The consumer sends his money and then sits down and waits until the mail order house gets good and ready to fill his order.

But when home people want credit or favors of any kind they hustle off to their home merchant, very obligingly order what they want and tell him to charge it, expecting him to wait at least from one to six months for his pay.

Dealing With Neighbors.

In buying from your home merchants you deal with neighbors. Buy with goods before you. Pay when you get the goods if you so elect. Have goods delivered free. Return goods if not satisfactory. Build up your home store.

Help build up your own home town and make of yourself a man worthy of your day and time. Every man should take pride in being a good American citizen, and we believe most men do and that most men are, or at least desire to be, but what kind of citizen is the man who supports an octopus? Should he not be placed in a class with the man that knocks his own business? That sort of man is invariably neither a good neighbor nor a good citizen.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The meeting of the W. C. T. U. held in the Baptist church Friday afternoon last was one of marked interest. Miss Rodger presided. Mrs. Taggart led the devotional exercises. A letter was read from Senator William Alden Smith in reply to the letter sent him by the president in behalf of the union of over ninety members asking him to use his influence in favor of national constitutional prohibition. The answer was favorable.

The two members of our union who are about to leave us—Mrs. E. A. Reed and Mrs. A. M. Burdick—were asked by the president to come to the front, when a few remarks very appropriate for the occasion were made. Mrs. Burns, the flower mission superintendent, presented each with a beautiful bouquet of aises and roses, as a token of love and respect, after which "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" was sung with much feeling. Mrs. Burdick said it was a sweet surprise to her. Both Mrs. Reed and Mrs. Burdick expressed regret at leaving.

Mrs. Burns then took charge of the program, giving a bit of history concerning flower mission work, which became a department of the national work in 1882 and has been carried on these many years, flowers being carried to the sick and "shut-ins," also to prisons and jails.

Many touching incidents have been noted where flowers and the little message attending them have touched a tender spot in the heart of many a one who needed just such a message.

Clippings were read, interspersed with music and recitations, all being fine. Those present were invited to remain for a social time, light refreshments being served. About forty-five were in attendance at the meeting. "White Ribbon Recruits" will furnish much of the program at the next meeting.

want to die right off, so they take a sword and stab it straight up wherever they happen to be, in the shed or the barn or the henhouse, and they plant the sharp end right to their waist line, where the bowels and other vital organs are located, and then they fall on to it. It makes 'em right through to the back an' kills 'em like a shot, and that's the way I callate the youth in Ashy dies, if my entomology is correct, as it generally is.

"Don't seem an easy death to me," argued Ezra, "but I ain't no scholar. What college did you attend to, Tim?"

"I don't hold no diplomas," responded Timothy, "though I attended the Wareham academy quite a spell, the same time as your sister was gone to Wareham seminary where education is still held disseminated though of an awful poor kind compared to the old times."

"It's live an' larn," said the storekeeper respectfully. "I never thought of a seminary being a place of dissemination before, but you can see the two words is near kin."

"You can't tellers tell by the sound," said Timothy instructively. "Sometimes two words 'll start from the same root an' branch out different, like 'critter' an' 'hypocritter.' A 'hypocritter' must necessarily start by being a 'critter,' but a 'critter' ain't obliged to be a 'hypocritter' 'thout he wants to."

"I should hope not," interjected Abot Day pleasantly. "Entomology must be an awful interestin' study, though I never thought of observin' words myself, 'cept to avoid vulgar language an' profanity."

"Hushon's an' cuthon's word for a man," interjected Bill Dunham with a fast despairing effort. "I remember seen a Hushon once that!"

"Perhaps you ain't one to observe closely, Abot," said Timothy, not taking note of any interruption, simply using the time to direct a stream of tobacco juice to an incredible distance, but landing it mostly in the exact spot he had intended. "It's a trade by itself, you might say, observin' is, an' there's another similar corruption: The Whiles in foreign parts, so they say, build stone towers to observe the evil machinations of the Tories, an' so the word 'observatory' come into general use! All entomology; nothing but entomology."

"I don't see where in thunder you picked up so much latin," Timothy said. It was Abot Day's exclamation, but every one agreed with him.

CHAPTER XVIII. The Rod That Blossomed.

IVORY ROYNTON had taken the horse and gone to the village on an errand, a rare thing for him to do after dark, so Rod was thinking as he sat in the living room, leaning his Sunday school lesson on the same evening that the men were gossiping at the brick stove. His aunt had required him from the time when he was prevalent enough to do so to read at least a part of a chapter in the Bible every night. Beginning with Genesis, he had reached Leviticus and had made up his mind that the Bible was a much more difficult book than "Scottish Chiefs" notwithstanding the fact that Ivory helped him over most of the hard places. At the present juncture he was vastly interested in the subject of "rods" as unfolded in the book of Exodus, which was being studied by his Sunday school class. What added to the excitement was the fact that his uncle's Christian name, Aaron, kept appearing in the chronicle as frequently as that of the great lawgiver Moses himself, and there were many verses about the wonder working rods of Moses and Aaron that had a strange effect upon the boy's ear when he read them aloud, as he loved to do whenever he was left alone for a time. When his aunt was in the room his instinct kept him from doing this, for the mere mention of the name of Aaron, he feared, might sadden his aunt and provoke in her that dangerous vein of reminiscence that made Ivory so anxious.

"It kind of makes me nervous to be named Rod, Aunt Roynton," said the boy, looking up from the Bible. "All the rods in those Exodus chapters do such dreadful things. They become serpents, and one of them swallows up all the others, and Moses smites the waters with a rod, and they become blood, and the people can't drink the water and the fish die. Then they stretch a rod across the streams and ponds and bring a plague of frogs over the land, with swarms of flies and horrible insects."

"That was to show God's power to Pharaoh and melt his hard heart to obedience and reverence," explained Mrs. Boynton, who had known the Bible from cover to cover in her youth and could still give chapter and verse for hundreds of her favorite passages.

"It took an awful lot of melting Pharaoh's heart," exclaimed the boy. "Pharaoh must have been worse than Joan on Baxter—I wonder if they ever tried to make him good by being kind to him?"

"I've read and read, but I can't find they ever did anything on his out plagues and famines and boils and pestilences and thunder and hail fire! Have I got a middle name, A Roynton, for I don't like Rod very much?"

"I never heard that you had a middle name; you must ask Ivory," said his aunt abstractedly.

"Did my father name me Rod, or my mother?"

"I don't really know. Perhaps it was your mother, but don't ask questions, please."

"I forgot, Aunt Roynton! Yes, I think perhaps my mother named me. Mothers 'most always name their babies, don't they? My mother wasn't like you, she looked just like the picture of Pocahontas in my history. She never knew about these Bible rods, I guess."

"When you go, a little farther you will find pleasant things about rods," said his aunt, knitting in teasingly, as was her habit, and talking as if her mind were 1,000 miles away. "You know they were just little branches of trees, and it was only God's power that made them wonder full in any way."

"Oh! I thought they were like the singing teacher's stick he keeps time with."

"No; if you look at your concordance you'll find it gives you a chapter in Numbers where there's something beautiful about rods. I have forgotten the place. It has been many years since I looked at it. Find it and read it aloud to me." The boy searched his concordance and readily found the reference in the 17th chapter of Numbers. "Stand near me and read," said Mrs. Boynton. "I like to hear the Bible read aloud."

Rodman took his Bible and read, slowly and haltingly, but with clearness and understanding:

"1. And the Lord spoke unto Moses, saying:

"2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a rod according to the house of their fathers, of all their princes according to the house of their fathers twelve rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod."

Through the boy's mind there darted the flash of a thought, a sad thought. He himself was a Rod on whom upon man's name seemed to be written, orphan that he was, with no knowledge of his parents!

Suddenly he hesitated, for he had caught sight of the name of Aaron in the verse that he was about to read and did not wish to pronounce it in his aunt's hearing.

"This chapter is most too hard for me to read out loud, Aunt Roynton," he stammered. "Can I study it by myself and read it to Ivory first?"

"Go on, go on, you read very sweetly. I cannot remember what comes and I wish to hear it."

The boy continued, but without raising his eyes from the Bible:

"3. And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi; for one rod shall be for the head of the house of their fathers."

"4. And thou shalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation before the testimony, where I will meet with you."

"5. And it shall come to pass that the man's rod, whom I shall choose, of Aaron was budded and brought forth buds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds."

Rodman Took His Bible and Read.

It was Aaron's rod, then, and was an almond branch! How beautiful, for the blossoms would have been pink; and how the people must have marvelled to see the lovely blooming thing on the dark altar, first budding, then blossoming, then bearing nuts! And what was the rod chosen for? He hurried on to the next verse:

"9. And Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord unto all the children of Israel; and they looked, and took every man his rod."

"10. And the Lord said unto Moses, 'Bring Aaron's rod again before the testimony to be kept for a token against the rebels; and thou shalt quite take away their murmurings from me, that they die not.'"

"Oh, Aunt Roynton," cried the boy, "I love my name after I've heard about the almond rod! Aren't you proud that it's uncle's name that was written on the one that blossomed?"

He turned swiftly to find that his aunt's knitting had slipped on the floor; her nervous hands dropped by her side as if there were no life in them, and her head had fallen against the back of her chair. "The boy was paralyzed with fear at the sight of her closed eyes and the deathly pallor of her face. He had never seen her like this before, and Ivory was away. He flew for a bottle of spirit, always kept in the kitchen cupboard for emergencies, and throwing wood on the fire in passing, he swung the cruet so that the tea kettle was over the flame. He knew only the humble remedies that he had seen used here or there in illness and tried them timidly, prying every moment that he might hear Ivory's step. He warmed a soapstone in the embers and, taking off Mrs. Boynton's shoes, put it under her cold feet. He chafed her hands and gently poured a spoonful of brandy between her pale lips. Then, sprinkling camphor on a handkerchief, he held it to her nostrils, and to his joy she stirred in her chair; before many minutes her lids fluttered, her lips moved, and she put her hand to her heart.

"Are you better, aunt dear?" Rod asked in a very unsteady and fearful voice.

She did not answer; she only opened her eyes and looked at him. At length she whispered faintly, "I want Ivory; I want my son."

"He's out, aunt dear. Shall I help you to bed the way Ivory does? If you'll let me, then I'll run to the bridge 'cross lots like lightning and bring him back."

She assented and, leaning heavily on his slender shoulder, walked feebly into her bedroom off the living room. Rod was as gentle as a mother, and he was familiar with all the little offices that could be of any comfort—the soapstone warmed again for her feet, the bringing of her nightgown from the closet and when she was in bed another spoonful of brandy in hot milk; then the camphor by her side, an extra homespun blanket over her and the door left open so that she could see the open fire that he made into a cheerful huddle, convinced so that it would not snuff and throw out dangerous sparks in his absence.

All the while he was doing this Mrs. Boynton lay quietly in the bed talking to herself fitfully in the faint murmuring tone that was habitual to her. He could distinguish scarcely anything, only enough to guess that her mind was still on the Bible story that he was reading to her when she fainted. "The rod of Aaron was among the other rods," he heard her say, and a moment later, "Bring Aaron's rod again before the testimony."

Was it his uncle's name that had so affected her? wondered the boy, almost sick with remorse, although he had tried his best to evade her command to read the chapter aloud. What would Ivory, his hero, his pattern and example, say? It had always been Rod's pride to carry his little share of every burden that fell to Ivory, to be faithful and helpful in every task given to him. He could walk through fire without flinching, he thought, if Ivory told him to, and he only prayed that he might not be held responsible for this new calamity.

"I want Ivory!" came in a feeble voice from the bedroom.

"Does your side ache worse?" Rod asked, tightening to the door.

"No. I am quite free from pain."

"Could you be afraid to stay alone just for awhile if I lock both doors and run to find Ivory and bring him back?"

"No. I will sleep," she whispered, closing her eyes. "Bring him quickly before I forget what I want to say to him."

Rod sped down the lane and over the fields to the brick store where Ivory usually bought his groceries. His cousin was not there, but one of the men came out and offered to take his horse and drive over the bridge to see if he were at one of the neighbors' on that side of the river. Not a word did Rod breathe of his aunt's illness; he simply said that she was homesick for Ivory, and so he came to find him in five minutes they saw the Boynton horse hitched to a tree by the roadside, and in a trice Rod called him and, thanking Mr. Bixby, got into Ivory's wagon to wait for him. He tried his best to explain the situation as they drove alone, but finally concluded by saying, "Aunt really made me read the chapter to her, Ivory. I tried not to when I saw uncle's name in most every verse, but I couldn't help it."

"Of course you couldn't! Now you jump out and hitch the horse while I run in and see that nothing has happened while she's been left alone. Perhaps you'll have to go for Dr. Perry."

Ivory went in with fear and trembling for there was no sound save the ticking of the tall clock. The fire burn ed low upon the hearth, and the door was open into his mother's room. He lifted a candle that Rod had left ready on the table and stole softly to her bedside. She was sleeping like a child, but exhaustion showed itself in every line of her face. He felt her hands and feet and found the soapstone in the bed, saw the brandy bottle and the remains of a cup of milk on the light stand, noted the handkerchief, still steeped in camphor, on the counterpane and the blanket spread carefully over her knees, and then turned approvingly to meet Rod stealing into the room on tiptoe, his eyes big with fear.

"We won't wake her, Rod. I'll watch awhile, then sleep on the sitting room lounge."

"Let me watch, Ivory! I'd feel better if you'd let me, honest I would!"

The boy's face was drawn with anxiety. Ivory's attention was attracted by the wistful eyes and the beauty of the forehead under the dark hair. He seemed something more than the child of yesterday—a care and responsibility and expense for all his loving obedience; he seemed all at once different, tonight—older, more dependable, more trustworthy—in fact, a positive comfort and help in time of trouble.

"I did the best I knew how. Was anything wrong?" asked the boy, as Ivory stood regarding him with a friendly smile.

"Nothing wrong, Rod! Dr. Perry couldn't have done any better with what you had on hand. I don't know how I should get along without you, boy!" Here Ivory patted Rod's shoulder. "You're not a child any longer, Rod; you're a man and a brother, that's what you are, and to prove it I'll take the first watch and call you up at 1 o'clock to take the second so that I can be ready for my school work tomorrow. How does that suit you?"

"Tiptop!" said the boy, flushing with pride. "I'll lie down with my clothes on; it's only 9 o'clock and I'll get four hours' sleep; that's a lot more than Napoleon used to have."

He carried the Bible upstairs and just before he blew out his candle he looked again at the chapter in Numbers, thinking he would show it to Ivory privately next day. Again the story enthralled him, and again, like a child, he puts his own name and his living self among the rods in the tabernacle.

"Ivory would be the prince of our house," he thought. "Oh, how I'd like to be Ivory's rod and have it be the one that was chosen to blossom and keep the rebels from murmuring!"

(To be continued next week.)

Political Announcement.

I wish through the columns of this paper to announce that I am a candidate for the office of sheriff upon the Republican ticket and that my name will appear on the primary ballot at the August primaries. If elected I will give the best that is in me to fulfill the duties of the office. I earnestly solicit the support of the Republican voters of Charlevoix county.

Ford Safety First

"Safety First!" What should it mean to the Motorist?

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as strong as the best materials can make it.

French Government laboratory tests, comparing the vital parts of the Ford with the vital parts of a high-priced French car, proved the Ford to be thirty per cent stronger than the best built French car. We hold the French Government's certificate attesting this fact.

More than a half-million Fords in world-wide service have proved the French tests to be correct.

The Ford is strongest—and therefore safest.

"Safety First" should mean that his car is as light as is compatible with utmost strength.

Ford Vanadium steel—by laboratory test and by actual service test—is not only strongest but is also lightest.

The lighter the car the easier it is to control. And ease of control means "Safety First."

A light car can go with perfect safety where a heavy car might be in serious danger.

The Ford is the lightest—and therefore safest. "Safety First" should mean that his car is simplest to drive.

The Ford Planetary transmission keeps the motor always "hitched" to the car. There is no shifting of gears to "hook up" the car with the motor—no bother-some levers to "manipulate" in a crisis. Simply a touch of the foot to the pedal and the Ford is off.

The powerful Ford foot brake—to say nothing of the emergency brake—will stop the car almost instantly from any speed.

The Ford "picks up" backs up and "gets away" faster than any other car—a big advantage in an emergency.

The Ford ease of control makes it the safest car for congested streets of the city as well as uncertain country roads.

The Ford is easiest to control—and therefore safest.

These are some of the "Safety First" reasons why 145,707 Fords were bought between last October and the first of May this year.

The Ford is the "Safety First" car.

Elephants With Human Sense.

One of the big events in Sun Brothers' performances this season is the superbly trained animal ensemble. It is claimed for this section of the show to be the surprise and wonder of all beholders. Here will be found h'r'ses that are clowns, acrobats, musicians and dancers; elephants with the wits of humans and with a sense of humor. These pachyderms are the sensation of every town and city visited; in fact, they have appeared in all parts of Europe and the big cities of the United States and form the most picturesque, laughable, comical, astounding display of elephant sagacity ever conceived. There is also a bunch of wonderfully trained bears, baboons, mules, lions, camels and zebras; in fact, more trained animals than ever before seen with one single show.

Sun Bros.' shows for this season also present many distinct European novelties and "thrillers," including features and feats absolutely new to the American public and vastly superior to those of past seasons. The wild beast and animal display is a big affair and serves to exhibit a superb collection of the finest specimens from all parts of the jungles of Africa, India and Asia.

As usual, and in vogue for nearly a quarter of a century with this show, the management is following its famous policy of allowing no gamblers, ticket scalpers, camp followers or immoral influences with the show at any time or place. Two complete performances will be given at Charlevoix Friday, July 24th.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

NEW ASPARAGUS.

THE advent of fresh green asparagus makes possible the preparation of many tempting additions to the menu. Among them may be mentioned the following:

Asparagus With Carrots.—Boil the young carrots and cut them in small pieces. Mix them with an equal quantity of asparagus, boiled tender and cut in short lengths. Cover with cream sauce or else make a drawn butter dressing, using the water in which the carrots were cooked for the foundation.

A Variety of Foods.

Asparagus and Macaroni.—To prepare it, cook the asparagus until tender, and in the meantime cook macaroni in cold, salted water until it, too, is tender. Drain both and put the asparagus, very hot, on a dish. Surround it with the macaroni, cut in short lengths and mixed with melted butter, so that it will not be sticky. Season both with salt and pepper, sprinkle with grated cheese and serve at once.

Asparagus Vol au Vout.—Remove crusts from a five cent baker's loaf in four places and cut out the center of each so as to leave a box shaped case, having walls three-fourths inch in thickness. Beat three eggs, add six tablespoonfuls of milk and season with one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Dip bread case in mixture and turn until soaked. Drain, fry in deep fat, fill with creamed asparagus.

A Vegetable Novelty.

Asparagus Omelet.—Cut two bunches of the tips of one bunch of asparagus, wash and boil carefully until tender. Break into a bowl four fresh eggs, add a pinch of salt, a dash of pepper and four tablespoonfuls of hot water. Beat one minute. Put on the fire a very smooth frying pan, in which heat, but not brown, one teaspoonful of butter. Pour the beaten eggs into the pan, and after a few seconds the fold will form; it will form again quickly, and after the third folding the omelet is sufficiently done to receive the asparagus tips, which should be poured in the center. Have a hot platter ready, slip the omelet half way in the platter and allow the other half to fall over and envelop the asparagus. Garnish the omelet with asparagus.

A Difference in Names.

One of the tenants in a big business building was leaving his office the other day, when he encountered in the hallway two little pickaninies, evidently one of the subjugators' children. "What's your name?" he demanded of the oldest of them. "Mah name," replied the little fellow, "is Hubert Gladstone St. Ignatius Brown." "And your brother's name?" asked Barnes. "His name am jes' Pleafnee."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY ON WHAT BLIND BARTIMAEUS SAW.

Mark 10:46-52—July 19.
"Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing."—Isaiah 35:5, 6.

IT was the Passover season, and many were journeying toward Jerusalem. Bartimaeus, a blind beggar, sat by the wayside. Hearing an unusual commotion, he inquired the cause. The answer was that Jesus had just passed by. Bartimaeus had heard that Jesus was the reputed Messiah who, according to Scripture, would eventually bless the whole world and remove sin, sickness, sorrow and pain. He had heard that already Jesus was healing the sick, casting out devils and opening blind eyes. His faith and hope flamed up, and he shouted, "Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me!" Jesus heard the voice, and bade the blind man come to Him. Helped by others, Bartimaeus finally found himself in Jesus' presence. The Master asked, "What wilt thou that I should do to thee?" Promptly came the answer, "Lord, that I might receive my sight." Jesus replied, "Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." Immediately he received sight, and followed in the concourse, praising the Divine power and acknowledging Jesus as the Messiah.

"Jesus, Thou Son of David." The blind man's words had a special significance to the Jews of his day which is lost so far as the multitudes of today are concerned. The Jews knew that Messiah as the great High Priest was prefigured by Aaron, and as the great Law-giver was typified by Moses, and as the great King was represented by Solomon. The nothing of all these hopes of prophecy in Jesus is pictured in Melchizedek, who was a priest upon his throne—he had a double office. On the basis of the prophetic statement in Psalm 110:4, St. Paul shows the Divine foreintention in respect to Jesus and the character of the Messianic Kingdom.

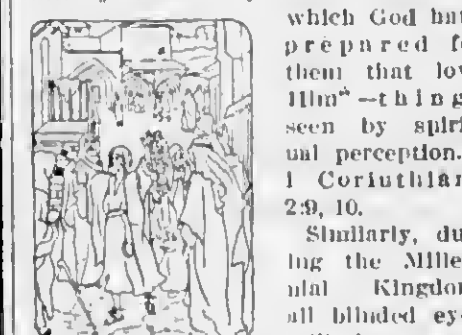

The committee arranging these International Bible Studies evidently had in mind the fact that Jesus' miracles at His First Advent were the merest foreshadows of the greater works which He will accomplish at His Second Advent. In line with this thought they have given us as today's Golden Text Isaiah's prophecy respecting Messiah's Kingdom. This agrees with the general trend of the Apostolic teaching to the effect that Jesus' miracles illustrated the greater work of the Messianic Kingdom. We read, "These miracles did Jesus, and manifested forth His glory"; that is, showed in advance His Kingdom power.

Not for a moment are we to suppose that Jesus and His disciples attempted to heal all the sick of Palestine. On the contrary, those healed were such as manifested special faith. Bartimaeus had his eyesight restored because he cried out, because he would not listen to those who sought to turn aside his faith. When we come to understand that Jesus' miracles pictured forth the blessings of His Kingdom we get the proper thought.

All the Blind Eyes Shall Be Opened. Whoever reads the Golden Text and thinks that merely natural blindness will be done away in Messiah's Kingdom sees only a small portion of the glorious work to be accomplished. The blindness of ignorance and superstition with which Satan has afflicted the race is far worse than physical blindness. The Scriptural declaration, "Every eye shall see Him, and they also that pierced Him," has undoubtedly reference to the eyes of understanding.

Jesus declared to His disciples, "Yet a little while, and the world seeth Me no more; but ye shall see Me." St. John says, "We shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." By the miraculous change of the First Resurrection the Church will be made spirit beings, and then will see the Master face to face, because spirit beings like Him. But the world will see Him only with the eyes of their understanding, just as believers now see the Father and Jesus—with the eye of faith—just as they see "the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him"—things seen by spiritual perception.—1 Corinthians 2:9, 10.

Similarly, during the Millennium, all blinded eyes will be opened to see the good news, the greatness, the love, the power, of God. Thus the world will come to know God, being helped to that knowledge through the Messianic Kingdom. All who avail themselves of the privilege then extended may attain that glorious degree of knowledge mentioned by Jesus, "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent."

INSTANTLY KILLED

Employee at Rock Products Plant Killed in Unfortunate Accident Wednesday

Jasper Mixmang, an employee at the Charlevoix Rock Product Company's plant, met almost instant death last Wednesday, while at work.

No one knows just how the accident happened, but it is thought that he slipped and fell onto the conveyor belt at the crushing plant, and was crushed to death between the belt and a large pulley. His head and arm were nearly severed from the body, and death was almost instantaneous.

His remains were taken to his former home at Cross Village for burial.

OPEN LETTER TO FRANK D. SCOTT

Hampton Still Believes That Promise of Post Office Job Was Made.

Says Scott's "Warm Friend" is to Blame for Present Rumpus—Reveals Name of the One Promised.

Editor Courier:

The letter below, was refused publication in the Sentinel, Mr. Smith following his usual plan of giving one side only a chance in his paper. It is now presented to you with a request that the Courier give it space, that the people may know what the fact are.

Will E. Hampton.

Frank D. Scott, Alpena, Michigan:

Dear Sir,—In the Charlevoix Sentinel of July 16th, under the heading "Scott Talks Back—Denies Allegations Made by Unscrupulous Enemies," appeared an article signed by yourself in which you deny that you have made any promise regarding the Charlevoix post office, and challenge me to give the name of any person to whom you have made any promise.

You further state that I have always opposed your political aspirations and that I am opposed to you because the editor of the Sentinel "has always been your warm friend." Permit me to correct your impression. I voted for you each time you ran for the senate. I make this statement not because I am proud of it, but to correct the wrong impression you seek to give. I am opposing you in your aspiration to go to congress not because the editor of the Sentinel is your "warm friend," but because I have become convinced that you are too much of a politician—the kind of a "politician" who is "policy" first and principles last. "The kind of a politician who is inclined to 'play both ends against the middle' and 'ride two horses.'" I am old-fashioned enough to believe that because a man is seeking office it is no excuse for his being "all things to all men." I have absolutely no use for a man who will talk one thing and in two minutes turn around and vote the other way. These are some of the reasons why I am opposing your nomination for the Republican party cannot afford to place in office men upon whom the people cannot rely. I am opposing you because you, seem to me to be the living image of the "hero" in Samuel G. Blythe's caustic depiction of a certain stripe of politician entitled "The Fakers," now running in the Saturday Evening Post. Read the story; then look into your own soul and see if the likeness is not there.

Your "warm friend," the editor of the Sentinel, asserts that there is a "conspiracy" against you and prattles loudly of "dirty deals" and "clean journalism." It was this same "friend" of yours who started this rumpus, when he falsely charged Joe Bayliss with having promised the post office here in return for local support. Editor Smith refused to print a denial and, while crawling to some extent, still insisted there were "underground connections" between the local support of Mr. Bayliss and the promise of a post office job. It was in reply to the Sentinel's false and slanderous charge that I used these words:

"It may interest you (Smith) to know that the candidate you are supporting promised the post office in this city to at least one man; possibly he has promised others. This may be disagreeable information for you and you may not believe it. But it is true, or else the man who would profit by this promise if kept—has lied."

You demand the name of this man. It is G. Ellsworth Dutton, formerly city clerk, now in the employ of the Charlevoix Lumber Company.

Unless Mr. Dutton has made untrue statements to one of his warmest friends you DID make him a promise. And I do not believe that Mr. Dutton lied to his friend, and I do not believe that he will lie now to shield you. But in order that you may know that I am not making this statement without the evidence to prove it, I have in my possession an affidavit made by a man to whom Mr. Dutton made the statement originally, and a man whose influence he was endeavoring to secure for you. I do not need to print this affidavit unless it becomes necessary. It is a disagreeable thing to do. But if you insist upon it I have the consent of the man to give it publicity.

Mr. Dutton is an exemplary young man, inexperienced in the ways of political self-seekers, and doubtless did not realize that old time methods of promising jobs in return for support have fallen into disrepute. You, Mr. Scott, have no excuse. You are the evil genius responsible for the unpleasant predicament in which a fine young man now finds himself. You challenged me to give the name and I was compelled to do so. You may have sufficient influence to induce this young man to stultify himself to save you. Knowing him as I think I do, however, I cannot think it possible that he will do this thing. But if he should, the people will surely believe the statements of an absolutely disinterested party when they see that every incident will bear out his words. Not only the admissions of Mr. Dutton, but the things that you did before and after, and the efforts of Mr. Dutton after the publication of my charge to prevent further exposure, is conclusive proof of your guilt.

A and please remember, again, that your dear friend Mr. Smith is responsible for all this unpleasant notoriety. Had he not charged in his paper that your opponent was guilty of the things you, and you alone, were doing, this would never have been aired in the press. At least, not by me. And if you had possessed the manhood to acknowledge the facts and say what might well have been said—that the man you had selected was, in your opinion, well fitted for the job—you would have stood higher in the esteem of the people than through the course you are now taking. It is not half so heinous an offence to promise a man a job as it is to seek to debase a honest young man in order to save your own political neck.

Will E. Hampton.

Here is the Affidavit.

Since writing the foregoing I am informed that Mr. Dutton denies that Mr. Scott made him any promise. The affidavit printed below should convince any unbiased man that my original statement was true. I am sorry that Mr. Dutton has been placed in such an unenviable light. The matter is up to the people to decide. They are the jury. If Mr. Dutton had no assurances of any kind, WHY did he do the things he did? There is only one answer.

Will E. Hampton.

WORK OF CITY DADS

Chemical Engine Purchased on Thirty Day Trial—Install Water Meters.

Work along the line of important additions to the fire department was accomplished by the common council at Monday evening's session, when they purchased a chemical engine on thirty days trial. A chemical engine has been needed for years and without a doubt will save a large percentage of its cost at the first bad fire that occurs.

Several additional sections to Ordinance No. 29 were passed, in which are defined the powers and duties for government of the Charlevoix water works. Some time ago the recommendation was made by the board of public works that a universal meter system be installed in the city. Monday night's meeting of the council saw the final step taken to solve the much-talked-of universal water rate. Meters are to be installed by the city for every consumer of water at once. The cost of the meters and installation will run from $7.00 to $9.00. One section of the above addition to the ordinance states that all meters must be installed by January 1, 1915. This will give plenty of time for the installation and when all have meters but one rate for water will be charged.

TWO BIG FEATURES

Booked for Bay View Assembly During the Coming Week.

The two big features of the coming week at the Bay View Assembly are the production of the musical drama "Joseph" next Thursday and the better babies contest which ends Sunday, July 26th.

The musical drama "Joseph" is under the direction of William Dodd Cheney, who has produced many similar dramas in all parts of the United States. Last year Mr. Cheney repeated a musical drama seven times at the great Chautauque at Winona Lake, Indiana. In this production there will be professional soloists of high reputation and a combined chorus from Petoskey, Bay View and neighboring towns.

The better babies contest is under the direction of Dr. Wm. S. and Lena K. Sadler, who will lecture on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. A free medical examination will be given for all babies and medals will be given at the end of the examinations for the most perfect baby.

The largest crowd in years is now at Bay View and almost every cottage and room are taken.

FATHER CHARLEVOIX

1682--1761

Interesting Sketch of His Life from Pen of Mr. Brayton Saltonstall

Pierre Francois Xavier Du Charlevoix was born, lived and died a Frenchman. St. Quentin, where he was born in 1682, about one hundred miles northeast of Paris, was an ancient city, and an important one since the time of the Romans, when it was a military stronghold with a wall around it. To-day it is a manufacturing center for textile fabrics, principally of cotton. Its cathedral, one of the finest Gothic structures in the north of France, was in existence at the time Charlevoix was living. His native city has erected no monument to the memory of its distinguished son, unless a little street which bears his name may be so considered, and a search for souvenirs of his fame within its borders would be made in vain. We know the place and date of his birth, but almost nothing of his family, or his life as an author, missionary or private individual, except by inference. The biography of Father Charlevoix is to be found only in his books. A traveller, he related his explorations; a man of letters and the editor of a paper for twenty-two years, his articles disclose his character, but there was never an author in the world less thirsty for fame and glory or more honestly devoted to his work than he. One would say that he had made it a rule to avoid speaking of himself or his work. In the matter of autographs only one or two of his signatures are known to exist, but his voluminous writings are a living tribute to his patient industry and perseverance. He was one of the earliest historians of New France, the one who did most to make Canada known to Europeans, of whom the educated class to this day show with pride his tawny volumes in their libraries. The private library of George Washington contained a copy of his "Journal," its pages well margined with notes, proof that the "Father of His Country" consulted Charlevoix when exploring the valleys of the Ohio and the Wabash.

That the parents of Charlevoix were pious people might be inferred from the fact that he was named for two saints and that he was educated for the priesthood. At the early age of sixteen he joined the Society of Jesus, a known more familiarly as the Jesuits, and while yet a deacon, at the age of twenty-three years, he was sent by his superiors to Quebec in Canada, where for four years he taught grammar in the college there. He returned to France in 1700, where he studied theology for four years at the college of Louis le Grand in Paris. Voltaire, the celebrated French author, was a pupil of his at this college, but it is not from Charlevoix himself that we have the fact. He probably was not proud of his cynical pupil who used his influence to oppose the struggle to retain Canada under French dominion while Charlevoix chanted its praises to a forgetful generation. After completing his divinity studies he began to mingle with the literary world, which occupied itself seriously with history and science, and he led for some years the peaceful and regular life of a professor of belles-lettres, devoting his long life to editorial and historical works, which are an immortal monument to his memory and an invaluable contribution to the world's literature.

His first work of importance was a history of the rise and fall of Christianity in Japan. Numerous churches and monasteries having been founded, these flourished for thirty years, when the same prince who had welcomed the Christians caused their religion to be suppressed by edict throughout the islands of the rising sun. This early effort of Charlevoix was a favorably received by the public, one critic writing as follows: "Father Charlevoix has the gift of narration so essential to the historian; his style is lively; his expression concise and correct; he holds the interest he inspires with admiration, with horror, with pity, with devotion, because he is full of them." The works of greatest interest to American readers are his "History and General Description of New France," which was praised by the English historian Gibbon as no historical work of great merit, and his "Journal of a Voyage in North America," in which is given a most vivid and accurate description of the country and its inhabitants, the manners and customs of the Indian tribes and their villages, of the missionary establishments and colonial posts and of persons and things in general as they existed at that day, extracts from which will be cited in this paper.

Father Charlevoix as a member of the Society of Jesus had taken the usual vows of poverty, chastity and obedience and to be ready always to go upon missions against heresy and heathenism, carrying the cross everywhere.

When French dominion was established in America, to the Jesuits was assigned the task of bearing the Christian religion to its dusky inhabitants and they became the pioneers of discovery and settlement, the paramount object being the conversion of the heathen and the extension of the church; the secondary object to promote the power and dominion of France.

There were fifteen Jesuit priests in Canada in 1635, the first and most noted of whom were Brebeuf and Daniel—bold, aggressive and self-sacrificing to the last degree. One of them, Father Dablon, in writing of his missionary experiences and the primitive temples of that day, said: "For marble and precious metals we employed bark, but the path to heaven is as open through a roof of bark as through vaulted ceilings of silver and gold." They carried the cross and the lily of France as emblems of religion and political dominion, assisted by the votaries of commerce. Fr. Charlevoix breathed the same spirit when in his preface to the "History of New France" he wrote: "Feeling that I owe myself to the state as a citizen, my profession also obliges me to serve the church and to devote to it at least a portion of my vigils to make known the mercies of the Lord and the triumph of religion."

Charlevoix was born in the reign of Louis XIV—if not the greatest king the finest actor of royalty the world has ever seen. With him the Jesuits were in full favor. Masters of speech, miracles of persuasiveness, they set the fashion in that age of pulpit eloquence. These were the palmy days when literature flourished. The brilliant writers who did honor to France during this reign were Corneille, Moliere, La Fontaine, and their influence must have been felt by Charlevoix, but now, in 1720, an opportunity came to him to revisit the land where he had won his first honors in learning and for which he had a little of the longing of homesickness. He was appointed to a double mission—that of determining the extent of the English possessions in Canada and that of the discovery of an overland route to the sea at the west, now known as the Pacific Ocean. So, at the bidding of the king, Charlevoix took his life in his hands and made that memorable journey up the Saint Lawrence, through the Thousand Islands and the Great Lakes and down the Mississippi, the interesting details of which are given in his "Journal." The discovery of America by Columbus was not the result of a methodic plan, but a happy chance which exceeded greatly the results expected. Columbus proceeded westward in the hope of finding the way to the Indies, but was confronted by the barrier of a new world and it remained for Balboa to discover the Pacific in 1513 and after years of effort by various explorers it was left to Magellan to find the way by water to the western ocean. Leaving Seville in 1519, he discovered the southern strait which still bears his name and, passing through it, made the first voyage around the world. The authorities at Quebec had been notified in advance that Charlevoix had been charged by the king with the discovery of an overland route to the western sea and were instructed to permit him to proceed. After spending nearly a year in the research of authorities and documents Charlevoix reported that England had a right to the Nova Scotia peninsula and that her rights had never exceeded its limits. It was through the enforcement of these rights by the English that the French inhabitants of Acadia were evicted from their homes, the pitiful details of which are portrayed in Longfellow's beautiful poem "Evangeline."

It was on the first of May, 1721, that Charlevoix left Montreal for the known west in search of the unknown, leaving civilization for wilderness, with an equipage consisting of two large canoes, eight attendants and a companion. The little flotilla ascended the rapids of the St. Lawrence, reached Niagara, skirted Lake Erie and on the eighth of June embarked at Detroit for a ten-day rest. (To be continued next week.)

FUNNY MEN COMING

Many Comic Signs and Ludicrous Novelties for the Children.

The comedy section with the great Sun Bros. Shows this season is an all-embracing feature. There is a score or more of funny men who are notable for their novel ideas and entirely refined methods.

They are the leaders of their class, presenting new, original comic entrees, ludicrous situations, humorous climaxes and hutton-burating proclivities. Among the names of this bunch of fun makers will be found the great American clown "Slivers" LaBelle; Jas. Duval, original arctic "copper;" Rube Walters, funny ruralite; Charles LaBelle, the Yankee character actor; Bob Rozelle, just plain clown; Gardinetti Brothers, the Italian comiques; the Brown brothers, English funny folks; Master Harrison "smallest clown alive;" Sam Jay Rice, Irish funster; Miss Gloria Dutton, original lady clown; Billy Hogan, the Hippodrome clown, and an assisting company of clever artists, forming in all an assemblage of famous clowns, all of infinite jest and merriment.

Sun Brothers' performances for this, their 22nd annual tour, are the very greatest ever handled by this well-known firm of amusement managers.

The equestrians, the acrobats, the big Japanese troupe, the blue-ribboned cake-walking and turkey-trotting horses, the sensational lady aerialists, the physical culture men and women and the marvelous trained elephants and lions are all classy features and seldom to be seen with an exhibition in this section.

The show is slated to pitch its tents at Charlevoix Friday, July 24th.

Big Tent to be Pitched on Central School Grounds Purchase Season Tickets.

Last Friday afternoon the Committee of Twenty-One met at the council room with Mr. Perkins, a representative of the Redpath Chautauqua, and the final arrangements were completed for the big seven-day chautauqua to be held in this city from August 12 to 13.

Committees were appointed to take charge of the work and the secretary of the committee was instructed to receipt for season tickets to the amount of $2200.

These tickets are now on sale at both the banks, all drug stores, dry goods stores and at Geo. W. Priest's studio. The people of the city are requested to keep in mind that a number of the leading business men had to vouch for the sale of $1500 worth of these tickets last spring as a guarantee to the bureau for the fulfillment of the contract. Every man who went good for the sale of these seven hundred and fifty tickets should make an effort to dispose of them and also to boost the chautauqua. A little hustling will dispose of them and a number besides, upon which a percentage will be made.

Up to the first day of the chautauqua these tickets will be sold as follows: Adults' season tickets, $2.00; children's season tickets, $1.00. After the chautauqua opens these tickets cannot be bought for less than $2.25 and $1.25 at any time during the seven days. Single admission tickets to the different sessions of the chautauqua aggregate more than $3, so it will pay to buy a season ticket.

The committee also secured the use of the grounds of the central school as the place where the big tent will be pitched and the chautauqua held.

One of the big features will be a children's hour in the forenoon of each day, when all will be admitted free. This will be in charge of a playground worker, who will conduct a story hour for the younger children, and for the older ones will carry out a program of athletics and physical culture.

Every citizen of Charlevoix should become a booster. Get out and sell all the tickets you can and the success of the chautauqua is assured.

Cups on Display.

The prize silver cups offered by the West Michigan State Fair for the best display of fruit made at the fair this fall are on exhibition in the windows of the Charlevoix County Bank. These cups will be awarded to the persons making the best display of fruit at the fair at Grand Rapids this fall.

OUR OPINION OF LAWYER SCOTT

Courier at No Time Gave Him Assurance of Positive Support.

Payment of $10.00 Mentioned Fully Explained and Some of the Reasons Why We Cannot Support Him.

Lawyer Scott of Alpena, who aspires to go to congress from this district, publishes an open letter in the last issue of the Charlevoix Sentinel, in which he refers to the editor of the Courier. We want the people of this county to read his article and for that reason we give below that part of the letter which referred to us:

"To Editor of Sentinel:—

"I am extremely sorry that a local controversy has arisen in Charlevoix in consequence of my candidacy for congress and I am equally surprised to note that the Courier is against me, as I had assurance of the editor over a month ago that he was favorable to me. Fortunately, the conversation was in the presence of a witness and there was no compensation offered or suggested to provoke his offer of support."

"Regardless of the kindly assurance of the Courier, I sent the editor ten dollars as payment for some small notices which I wished him to make. Incidentally the editor of the Sentinel has at all times flatly refused to accept any compensation for anything he might or could do for me in my behalf."

"Frank D. Scott."

Lawyer Scott says that over a month ago the editor of this paper told him in the presence of another witness (also a lawyer) that he was "favorable to him." It was considerably over a month ago and at that time the Courier did not know as much about Lawyer Scott as we do now. And, furthermore, the Courier did not at that time or any other time give him any assurance of positive support.

He says he sent the Courier $10 for advance payment on some notices he wished run in our columns. Yes, that is true. And the letter accompanying the check stated that similar arrangements were being made with other papers, and we were told that if we printed articles favorable to Lawyer Scott to an amount which would exceed his $10, settlement in full for whatever we might print would be made at the close of the campaign or at any time we sent in our bill.

We have never received from Lawyer Scott any notices on this contract except his formal announcement, which figured up to $5.33, and he has a balance due on his order of $4.12, which he can have at any time he furnishes us with the copy, or we will return it to him if he so desires and close the account. However, no charge will be made for the reproduction of his article above, nor for the publicity he is receiving in this article.

Every article run in the Courier for pay is plainly marked "political adv.," as the law requires, but I notice that other papers are running his stuff, for which they receive pay, without thus complying with the law. The advertising columns of this paper are open to all, but the editorial opinions are not for sale and neither Lawyer Scott nor any other person can by the influence or support of this paper, nor nuzzle its editor, by any payments they may make for advertising in its columns.

By the way, it might be interesting for me to say, in passing, that a part of the $10 which Lawyer Scott howls about was used by me in paying the expenses of a trip to Petoskey to the Elks' celebration. And if I ever had any slight idea of supporting him for congress such idea was banished forever when I learned of his hilarious conduct in a Petoskey booze emporium, accompanied by one of his chief fuglers in Charlevoix—the man who was present when the alleged promise of support was made.

Lawyer Scott may be able to win his way to Washington, but if he does it will be without any assistance from the Courier.

If Lawyer Scott desires to go into this matter further we can give him more most edifying information concerning him at the time mentioned above and there will be no charge for the publicity either.

BARNES' CIRCUS COMING

World's Greatest Wild Animals Shows on Exhibit Here August 6th.

Possessing the distinction of being the original and world's largest wild animal show, the A. G. Barnes Big Three-Ring Wild Animal Circus is presenting the most unusual and entirely new array of educational, entertaining, amazing, amusing, thrilling animal acts ever shown.

Practically the entire performance offered by the Barnes show is given by trained wild and domestic animals, 600 in number, the largest assemblage of trained animals. These animal actors have been recruited from the ranks of almost every known animal family. Man-eating African and Asiatic lions, tigers, leopards, pumas and jaguars, grizzly, brown, black and Russian polar bears, seals and sea lions, elephants, camels, zebras, hyenas, 500 of the world's premium horses and ponies, monkeys, dogs, and even goats, have been cast as actors in the Barnes show. Sixty-five big wild animals features are presented, the principal one being a group of twenty-four man-eating African lions shown in one act by Herr Louie Roth, which is the most thrilling wild animal spectacle ever shown.

One of the sensational features on the program is the large number of trained bears, Big Bill, the champion wrestler, being the star. Tom, Dick and Harry, juggling, horse riding sea lions, is another amazing spectacle. Sampson, the aviation lion, and Tom, Brutus and Jerry, horse-riding lions, comprise wild animal training feats that are absolutely unrivalled.

Fifty comely elephants, bears, dogs, monkeys, zebras, ponies, mules and a dozen clever clowns provide for the laughing spots in the entertainment.

A big, all new, special feature parade is presented to the public at 10:30. Performances will be given at 2 and 8 p.m. Thursday, August 6th.

LEWIS FOR SHERIFF

Well-Known Business Man of Boyne City Makes His Announcement in This Issue.

In another column of this issue of the Courier will be found the announcement of John H. Lewis of Boyne City, who is out after the office of sheriff of Charlevoix county.

Mr. Lewis has been a resident of this county since 1884. He is a butcher by trade and claims to be the man who has followed this line of business in this section longer than anyone else. Thirty-two years ago he was a meat cutter in Charlevoix for A. J. McCloud, who at time conducted a market where Fowler's market now stands. He is now in the same line of business at Boyne City.

Mr. Lewis is also conducting business along other lines in his home town. This is the first time he has ever placed his name before the people, asking for a county office. He is one of the heaviest tax payers in his home town, has always taken an active part in the development of the county, has been a Republican all his life and for these reasons believes he is the man who is entitled to the office of sheriff.

MOODS.

One of the elements which make for happiness and unhappiness is the vigor and persistence of moods. Will means something definite. Intellect, if properly used, moves to certain ends. The affections are positive. Moods, on the other hand, are mere states of feeling—drifting fog that arises now at one point and now at another of the landscape, changing nothing, unstable, driven away by a passing wind, yet for the moment obscuring the view as completely as if they had destroyed it.

Idle Curiosity.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

BY
KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter's mother.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Haying time arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling her the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waitstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is fickle.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossips are busy with the names of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and sends Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waitstill volunteers her help in the Boynton housekeeping.

CHAPTER XIX. Lois Buries Her Dead.

THE replies that Ivory had received from his letters of inquiry concerning his father's movements since leaving Maine and his possible death in the west left no reasonable room for doubt. Traces of Aaron Boynton in New Hampshire, in Massachusetts, in New York and finally in Ohio all pointed in one direction, and although there were gaps and discrepancies in the account of his doings, the fact of his death seemed to be established by two apparently reliable witnesses.

That he was not unaccompanied in his earliest migrations seemed clear, but the woman mentioned as his wife disappeared suddenly from the reports, and the story of his last days was the story of a broken down, melancholy, unfriended man, dependent for the last offices on strangers. He left no messages and no papers, said Ivory's correspondent and never made mention of any family connections whatsoever. He had no property and no means of defraying the expenses of his illness after he was stricken with the fever. No letters were found among his poor effects and no article that could prove his identity, unless it were a small gold locket, which bore no initials or marks of any kind, but which contained two locks of fair and brown hair, intertwined. The tiny trinket was enclosed in the letter, as of no value, unless some one recognized it as a keepsake.

Ivory read the correspondence with a heavy heart, inasmuch as it corroborated all his worst fears. He had sometimes secretly hoped that his father might return and explain the reason of his silence or in lieu of that that there might come to light the story of a phrengue, fanciful perhaps, but innocent of evil intention, one that could be related to his wife and his former friends and then buried forever with the death that had ended it.

Neither of these hopes could now ever be realized nor his father's memory made other than a cause for endless regret, sorrow and shame. His father, who had begun life so handsomely, with rare gifts of mind and personality, a wife of unusual beauty and intelligence and, while still young in years, a considerable success in his chosen profession. His poor father! What could have been the reasons for so complete a downfall?

Ivory asked Dr. Perry's advice about showing up or two of the brief letters and the locket to his mother. After her fainting fit and the explanation that followed it Ivory begged her to see the old doctor, but without avail.

Finally, after days of idling, he took her hands in his and said: "I do everything a mortal man can do to be a good son to you, mother. Won't you do this to please me and trust that I know what is best?" Whereupon she gave a trembling assent, as if she were agreeing to something indescribably painful, and, indeed, this sight of a former friend seemed to frighten her strangely.

After Dr. Perry had talked with her for a half hour and examined her sufficiently to make at least a reasonable guess as to her mental and physical condition, he advised Ivory to break the news of her husband's death to her.

"If you can get her to comprehend it," he said, "it is bound to be a relief from this terrible suspense."

"Will there be any danger of making her worse? Mightn't the shock cause too violent emotion?" asked Ivory anxiously.

"I don't think she is any longer capable of violent emotion," the doctor answered. "Her mind is certainly clearer than it was three years ago, but her body is nearly hurried away by the mental conflict. There is scarcely any part of her but is weary—worn out to death, poor soul! One cannot look at her patient, lovely face without longing to lift some part of her burden. Make a trial, Ivory. It's a justifiable experiment, and I think it will succeed. I must not come any oftener myself than is absolutely necessary. She seemed afraid of me."

The experiment did succeed. Lois Boynton listened breathlessly with parted lips and with apparent comprehension to the story Ivory told her over and over again he told her—

Her Face Showed That She Was Deeply Moved.

ly the story of her husband's death, trying to make it sink into her mind clearly, so that there should be no consequent bewilderment. She was calm and silent, though her face showed that she was deeply moved. She broke down only when Ivory showed her the locket.

"I gave it to my husband when you were born, my son," she sobbed. "After all, it seems no surprise to me that your father is dead. He said he would come back when the mayflowers bloomed, and when I saw the autumn leaves I knew that six months must have gone and he would never stay away from us for six months without writing. That is the reason I have seldom watched for him these last weeks. I must have known that it was no use."

She rose from her rocking chair and moved feebly toward her bedroom. "Can you spare me the rest of the day, Ivory?" she faltered as she leaned on her son and made her slow progress from the kitchen. "I must bury the body of my grief and I want to be alone at first. If only I could see Waitstill! We have both thought this was coming; she has a woman's instinct; she is younger and stronger than I am and she said it was braver not to watch and pine and fret as I have done, but to have faith in God that he would send me a sign when he was ready. She said if I could manage to no longer you would be happier too. Here she sank on to her bed exhausted, but still kept up her murmuring faintly and feebly between long intervals of silence.

"Did you think Waitstill could come tomorrow?" she asked. "I am so much braver when she is here with me. After supper I will put away your father's cup and plate once and for all, Ivory, and your eyes need never fill with tears again as they have sometimes when you have seen me watching. You needn't worry about me; I am remembering better these days, and the bells that ring in my ears are not so loud. If only the pain in my side were less and I were not so pressed for breath, I should be quite strong and could see everything clearly at last. There is something else that remains to be remembered. I have almost caught it once and it must come to me again before long. Put the locket under my pillow, Ivory; close the door, please, and leave me to myself. I can't make it quite clear, my feeling about it, but it seems just as if I were going to bury your father, and I want to be alone."

New England's annual pageant of autumn was being unfolded day by day in all its accustomed splendor, and the feast and riot of color, the almost unimaginable glory, was the common property of the whole countryside, rich and poor, to be shared alike if perchance all eyes were equally alive to the wonder and the beauty.

Waitstill Baxter went as often as she could to the Boynton farm, though never when Ivory was at home, and the affection between the younger and the older woman grew closer and closer, so that it almost broke Waitstill's heart to leave the fragile creature when her presence seemed to bring such complete peace and joy.

"No one ever clung to me so before," she often thought as she was hurrying across the fields after one of her half-hour visits. "But the end must come before long. Ivory does not realize it yet, nor Rodman, but it seems as if she could never survive the long winter."

Thanksgiving day is drawing nearer and nearer, and how little I am able to do for a single creature to prove to God that I am grateful for my existence! I could, if only I were free, make such a merry day for Patty and Mark and their young friends. Oh, what joy if father were a man who would let me set a beautiful table in our great kitchen; would sit at the head and say grace and we could bow our heads over the cloth, a united family, or if I had done my duty in my home and could go to that other, where I am so needed—go with my father's blessing! All the women in me is wasting, wasting. Oh, my dear, dear man, how I long for him! Oh, my dear man, my helpmate, shall I ever live by his side? I love him, I want him, I need him! And my dear little unmothered, unfathered boy, how happy I could make him! How I should love to cook and sew for them all and wrap them in comfort! How I should love to smooth my dear mother's last days, for she is my mother in spirit, in affection, in desire and in being Ivory's!"

Waitstill's longing, her discouragement, her helplessness, overcame her whistling, and she flung herself down under a tree in the pasture in a very passion of sobbing, a luxury in which she could seldom afford to indulge herself. The luxury was short-lived, for in five minutes she heard Rodman's voice, and heard him running to meet her as he often did when she came to their house or went away from it, dogging her footsteps or Patty's whenever or wherever he could waylay them.

"Why, my dear, dear Waitstill, did you tumble and hurt yourself?" the boy cried.

"Yes, dreadfully, but I'm better now, so walk along with me and tell me the news, Rod."

"There isn't much news. Ivory told you I'd left school and am studying at home? He helps me evenings and I'm 'way ahead of the class."

"No, Ivory didn't tell me. I haven't seen him lately."

"I said if the big brother kept school the little brother ought to keep house," laughed the boy. "He says I can hire out as a cook 'vestly soon'. Aunt Boynton's 'most always up to get dinner and supper, but I can make lots of things now—things that Aunt Boynton can eat too."

"Oh, I cannot bear to have you and Ivory cooking for yourselves!" exclaimed Waitstill, the tears starting again from her eyes. "I must come over the next time when you are at home, Rod, and I can help you make something nice for supper."

"We get along pretty well," said Rodman contentedly. "I love book learning like Ivory, and I'm going to be a schoolmaster or a preacher when Ivory's a lawyer. Do you think Patty'd like a schoolmaster or a preacher best, and do you think I'd be too young to marry her by and by, if she would wait for me?"

"I didn't think you had any idea of marrying Patty," laughed Waitstill through her tears. "Is this something new?"

"It's not exactly new," said Rod, jumping along like a squirrel in the path. "Nobody could look at Patty and not think about marrying her. I'd love to marry you, too, but you're too big and grand for a boy. Of course I'm not going to ask Patty yet Ivory said once you should never ask a girl until you can keep her like a queen. Then after a minute he said: 'Well, maybe not quite like a queen, Rod, for that would mean longer than a man could wait. Shall we say un-ill he could keep her like the dearest lady in the land?' That's the way he said it. You do cry dreadfully easy today, Waitstill. I'm sure you lurked your leg or skinned your knee when you fell down. Don't you think the 'dearest lady in the land' is a nice sounding sentence?"

"I do, indeed!" cried Waitstill to herself as she turned the words over and over trying to feed her hungry heart with them.

"I love to hear Ivory talk. It's like

A Man Without Clothes Would Soon Be Locked Up.

But don't worry. There's no need for you to be locked up in this town so long as we are making suits at their present prices. It's cheaper to buy than to pay the fine.

You ought to see our summer suits without delay, before too many of the best patterns are sold. They are without doubt the best values for the money we have ever offered to our customers, and they are walking right out of our door every day. It's simply a case of SEE AND BUY.

the stories in the books. We have our best times in the barn, for I'm helping with the milking now. Our yellow cow's name is Molly and the red cow used to be Dolly, but we changed her to Golly 'cause she's so troublesome."

"We had a cross old cow like that once," said Waitstill absently, lying to hear the boy's chatter and the eternal quotations from his beloved hero.

"We have great fun cooking, too," continued Rod. "When Aunt Boynton was first sick she stayed in bed more, and Ivory and I hadn't got used to things. One morning we boiled up each other's livers. Ivory had three fingers and I two done up in battery pans to take the life out. Ivory called us 'saddlers dressing their wounds after the battle. Sausages sputter dreadfully, don't they? And when you turn a pan-koek it hops on top of the stove. Can you flip one straight, Waitstill?"

"Yes, I can; straight as a die; that's what girls are made for. Now run along home to your big brother, and do put on some warmer clothes under your coat. The weather's getting colder."

"Aunt Boynton hasn't patched our thick ones yet, but she will soon, and, if she doesn't, Ivory'll take this Saturday evening and do them himself. He said so."

"He shall not!" cried Waitstill passionately. "It is not seemly for Ivory

A Word to Our Readers.

It is, and has been and will be the policy of the Courier to give our readers an unbiased statement of the records of aspirants for state and national offices. The ordinary man does not have the opportunity to learn the records of these men. We believe it is the duty of every newspaper to do this and we shall do it to the best of our ability. We shall do it "with malice towards none," but with the sole idea of helping our readers to choose intelligently and honestly between candidates whom they do not know personally. Our investigations will be impartial and our reports to you—published through the columns of this paper—will be the results of thorough investigation, and are not purchased or paid for by money or any promise of any kind.

Judd Yelland, the Escanaba lawyer, has formally withdrawn from the congressional contest in the 11th district. At the time he made his announcement he claimed he had the support of the Republican leaders of Menominee and Delta counties. Now he sneaks out of the fight because he finds he cannot be elected, and is throwing what little support he has to Lawyer Scott of Alpena. Evidently Lawyer Yelland and Lawyer Scott got their heads together. Possibly Lawyer Scott has made promises in Escanaba similar to those alleged to have been made here. Both these lawyers say that Mr. Bayliss cannot be nominated. Fortunately for the people of the 11th district, some twenty-five or thirty thousand voters will have something to say about this, and we are of the opinion that they will protect themselves from the possibility of the consummation of any deals that may have been made between Lawyer Scott and Lawyer Yelland at Escanaba or by Lawyer Scott in any other part of the district. Lower peninsula newspapers say: "We know too much about Lawyer Scott now." Evidently the voters in the upper peninsula are also getting wise to Lawyer Scott's methods.

When two men like Lawyer Yelland and Lawyer Scott get their heads together men who are not lawyers had better watch out.

To the Editor. The Charlevoix Sentinel says there is a conspiracy afoot to defeat Frank D. Scott for congress. Oh dear — whenever there is opposition to the candidate of the Sentinel for an office it is to him the result of a conspiracy. What lawyer has put this bug in Willard's bonnet? It is a common lawyers' defence. Whenever a skilled criminal attorney is engaged in the defence of a person charged with crime and finds that he has no good defence on the merits, he invariably concocts a defence based on a conspiracy against his client. We are familiar with that sort of defence in a noted case in our own county.

Have the PEOPLE of this county got their heads together, and agreed upon a vile conspiracy to oppose Mr. Scott? Are the men who have announced their preference for Mr. Bayliss and are openly supporting him CONSPIRATORS? If so there are many good men in this vicinity who are "guilty as charged."

Or have the voters of this community, and every community, the right to vote as they please and to support whomever they please for any office without regard to what the editor of the Sentinel may say or do? Are there not such things in our body politic as honest motives, honest purposes, good faith, differences of opinion, desires to support and vote for the best man, and, possibly more than all these, a patriotic endeavor to advance our state and nation?

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.— Benjamin Franklin.

How to Take Refreshing Baths.
YOU will enjoy a wonderful skin restorative if you bathe the face, neck and arms every night with hot milk and water, which is a wonderful skin restorative, dry gently with a very soft and fine face towel and then apply a very little good face cream with circular and upward massage movements of the finger tips.

In the morning again bathe the face with hot milk and water; then rinse with cold distilled water to which a few drops of toilet vinegar have been added.

Dry thoroughly, always using upward movements; apply a little toilet cream, wiping off any superfluity with a soft handkerchief; dust on some good powder and smooth with a fine wash leather.

This simple treatment has really astonishingly beneficial effects in a very few days if persevered with. All one must, of course, be very careful to build up the general health not by "cosseting," but by common sense precautions. A nourishing but digestible diet, including plenty of milk, eggs, fish, poultry and beef once a day; as much fresh air and sunshine as possible, judicious but not strenuous exercise and plenty of rest in between provide an excellent restorative regime to those below par.

A course of electric baths is a most admirable tonic to the whole system, but where this is impossible on the score of expense have a warm bath every night. A little liquid ammonia may be added to it; a brisk bath—for a long soak in hot water does far more harm than good—followed by a sponge off with equal quantities of toilet vinegar or eau de Cologne and water and a brisk towelling till the whole body is aglow. Then get into bed at once. In the morning have a loofah massage, rubbing the whole body well with a dry loofah till you tingle from head to foot, followed by several minutes' deep breathing and simple Swedish exercises.

How to Protect the Party Gown.
Nearly every girl realizes that the average party gown gets more hard usage when hanging in the crowded wardrobe than while it is being actively worn. As most girls have far less wardrobe space than they need, the best means of protecting the party frock from contact with the workaday garments is to make a special cover for it of lawn, dimity, muslin or a similar dainty and sheer material.

Having measured the length of the gown from shoulders to skirt hem, take two full widths of the chosen covering material and shape an end of each one of them into shoulders and the half of a neck.

These shoulders and the long straight sides of the cover are then seamed together, the bottom is hemmed, the neck is neatly bound with ribbon bowed in front at the top of two short silken cords from which depend two small square or oval sachets. When the gown is adjusted to its individual hanger and the muslin covers drawn smoothly over its folds and draperies it is in a condition to be as nicely kept as it is possible to keep any unboxed garment.

How to Utilize Space.
A remarkable idea has just been patented. It is a very simple one, but one about which every one is asking, "Why did we not think of it before?" We all know that in very many houses there is a lack of cupboard accommodation for the keeping of clothes. The cupboard seems to have been altogether forgotten by the architects of these modern residences.

An ingenious Frenchman has found a way of getting over this difficulty. He has had the staircase built in his house in such a manner that each stair can be used as a drawer. The drawers are not wide enough to keep dresses and skirts in, but blouses, gloves, brushes, combs and all sorts of odds and ends which take up a lot of room can be easily stored away in the staircase.

The handles are the thickest, quaintest little things imaginable. It seems funny to see handles on the stairs, but still one gets used to that in time. After all, comfort is the chief thing—at least, so the Frenchman who invented this novel contrivance seems to think.

How to Store Your Furs.
The Russians have a special way of cleaning their furs which should be effective, as it is in general use in that cold country. They beat some rye flour in a sateen bag, setting it as hot as the hand can stand it. Then they spread this hot flour over the fur and rub it in well. The flour is then brushed out.

Imitation white furs may be washed in warm soap and water. If the lining be of colored material it should be removed, as it might run and spoil the fur.

When the fur is thoroughly washed it should be put out to dry, shaking it frequently to prevent the loss of fur.

Keep in touch with what's going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

BORROWED TIME CLUB

Steps to be Taken to Organize Club of This Kind in Charlevoix.

One of our well-known summer visitors, James R. Webb of the Belvedere resort, is making an effort to organize a club in the city to be called the "Borrowed Time Club." To be eligible to this club one must be at least 70 years of age or an ex-soldier of the Mexican war or of the civil war of 1861-5.

Mr. Webb, whose home is at Oak Park, Illinois, is a charter member of the first club of this nature organized in the United States. The club has a membership of about forty and holds regular meetings, at which time the happenings of the days gone by are discussed and the helping hand and words of cheer given to those who have passed the prime of life and have but a short time before they will be unable to answer to roll call.

In Charlevoix there a number who are eligible to membership in a club of this nature, among whom are Captain Beattie, one of the few survivors of the Mexican war; Capt. H. Berdan, George Hughes, D. C. Nettleton, M. J. Stockman, Geo. M. DuBois and others whose names are not known at present.

Initial steps are being taken for the organization of the club, the details of which will appear at a later date in these columns.

WEST MICHIGAN PIKE

Tourists Reached Charlevoix on Scheduled Time Last Thursday.

The West Michigan Pike tourists were met at Norwood last Thursday by a number of autos from Charlevoix and escorted to the city.

The bunch stopped at the VanPelt cottage in Norwood, where lemonade was served the thirsty pikers and photographs taken. From there they proceeded to this city, escorted by Charlevoix autos. Speeches were made by a number of the tourists on the vacant lots of the Green estate and as each speaker completed his speech he resumed his journey north to Petoskey and the end of the route.

DROWNED WHILE BATHING

Floyd-Duran of East Jordan Taken with Cramps and Loses His Life.

Floyd Duran of East Jordan was drowned while bathing in Pine Lake last Thursday near the west side dock. The young man was convalescing from a siege of typhoid fever and was still weak. During the day he had eaten a quantity of ice cream and did not realize the risk he was running in going bathing.

After donning his bathing suit he dropped off the dock into the water and was evidently taken with cramps, as he did not come to the surface again. Nearly fifteen minutes elapsed before an alarm was given, as those who saw him go in thought he had swam under water and come to the surface somewhere out of their sight. The body was readily recovered, but it had been in the water too long.

He was about 21 years of age and the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Duran, who about three years ago lived on the Padlock dairy farm southeast of Charlevoix.

The racing schooner Freda M. with Allie Moore and wife arrived in port this morning. The left Detroit June 20, and reached Mackinac Island Tuesday afternoon, coming down from there this morning. The schooner was originally built for salt water sailing and is 23 feet long and was named after Mr. Moore's wife. They will spend some time here visiting friends and relatives.

Wednesday afternoon, just as the Courier was about ready to go to press the fire alarm called the department to the Cohen house, corner Hurlbut Ave., and south Bridge St. The house is occupied by Dr. Levi Lewis for the summer, and the doctor and Mrs. Lewis were sitting on the front porch. He went inside to get a drink of water, and found the kitchen a mass of flames. The interior was gutted, the flames spreading so rapidly that the doctor was able to save only a portion of their clothing and personal effects. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Open Letter to Frank D. Scott.

tor of the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper published and circulated at Charlevoix, Michigan. That on or about the 9th of June, 1914, Mr. G. Ellsworth Dutton, of Charlevoix, Michigan, came to the office of this deponent and stated to this deponent that he desired to secure the endorsement of the Charlevoix Courier for Frank D. Scott of Alpena, a candidate for the Republican nomination for representative in congress. That said Dutton and this deponent discussed the matter for some time, and during the conversation Mr. Dutton told this deponent that Mr. Scott had promised him that if he were nominated and elected, he would recommend Mr. Dutton's appointment as postmaster of Charlevoix, in consideration of his (Mr. Dutton's) services in furthering Mr. Scott's candidacy. That Mr. Dutton further stated during the conversation, that although the time when such an appointment could be made was some time ahead, that he believed he would have been a fool had he not secured the promise of the appointment when he had the opportunity. And that Mr. Dutton further stated, in answer to this deponent's direct question, that he was sure Mr. Scott would keep his promise.

This deponent further says, that during this conversation he asked Mr. Dutton if he knew whether Mr. Scott had made a like promise to any other person in Charlevoix, whereupon Mr. Dutton told this deponent that he would inand am taking this means of letting my friends throughout the county know that I desire their support. I have had a hope that some day I could have the honor of being the Prosecuting Attorney for my home county. I believe this is a laudable ambition for any attorney.

I have practiced law in Charlevoix county ten years. I have waited for the older attorneys of the county to reasonably satisfy their ambitions and I do not think I am presumptuous in now asking the people of my home county to make me their candidate for Public Prosecutor, to the exclusion of the other candidates, who have either held the office for a reasonable length of time or who have recently become lawyers and are anxious to be placed in an important office without first having their college training made practical by years of active practice.

My name will be found on the primary ballot among the Republican candidates. Pol. Adv. 2292 A. G. Urquhart.

vestigate the matter, and a few days later returned to the office of this deponent and said that he had put the question directly to Mr. Scott, and that Mr. Scott told him that he had talked with certain other supporters of his candidacy, and that they had assured him that they were asking no promises of him for political preferment, and that Mr. Scott had assured said Dutton that the promise made him would stand good.

This deponent further says, that during both of these conversations he told Mr. Dutton that, despite the friendship existing between this deponent and Mr. Dutton, the Courier would not promise to endorse the candidacy of Mr. Scott or any other candidate. That it was contrary to the policy of the Courier to make a decision in such matters until it had made a full and exhaustive investigation of the merits of the several candidates, and that this deponent at this time had not made a thorough investigation and was not prepared to endorse any candidate.

This deponent further says, that during both of the above-mentioned conversations he told Mr. Dutton that this deponent did not approve of promises of this nature, and that he was sorry that Mr. Scott had been so indiscreet as to make such a promise to anyone.

This affidavit is made for the purpose of stating facts just as they are for the information of any person or persons who may be concerned, and is not made for the purpose of advancing the interests of any candidate, or any other person.

Further, deponent says nnt.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

to see and meet, and I will not allow it. You shall bring me those things that need patching without telling any one, do you hear, and I will meet you on the edge of the pasture Saturday afternoon and give them back to you. You are not to speak of it to any one, you understand, or perhaps I shall find you in a jolly. You'd make a sweet rose jelly to eat with turkey for Thanksgiving dinner, you dear, comforting little boy."

Rodman ran toward home, and Waitstill hurried along, scarcely noticing the beauties of the woods and fields and waysides, all glowing masses of goldenrod and purple frost flowers.

Patty was standing under a little rock temple, her brown floppy-woolsey in tune with the landscape and the hood of her brown cape pulled over her bright head. She looked flushed and excited as she ran up to her sister and said: "Waitstill, darling, you've been crying! His father's been scolding you?"

"No, dear, but my heart is aching today so that I can scarcely bear it. A wave of discouragement came over me as I was walking through the woods, and I gave up to it a bit. I remembered how soon it will be Thanksgiving day, and I'd so like to make it happier for you and a few others that I love."

Patty could have given a shrewd guess as to the chief cause of the heartache, but she forbore to ask any questions. "Cheer up, Waitstill," she cried. "You can never tell. We may have a thankful Thanksgiving, after all."

CHAPTER XX. Phoebe Triumphs.

MRS. ABEL DAY had come to spend the afternoon with Aunt Abby Cole, and they were seated at the two sitting room windows, sweeping the landscape with eagle eyes in the intervals of making patchwork.

"The foliage has been a little mite too rich this season," remarked Aunt Abby. "I believe I'm glad to see it thinning out some, so 't we can have some kind of an idea of what's going on in the village."

"There's plenty going on," Mrs. Day answered unhesitatingly. "Some of it above board and some underneath it."

"An' that's just where it's aggravating to have the leaves so thick and the trees so high between you and other folks' houses. Trees are good for shade, it's true, but there's a limit to all things. There was a time when I could see 'bout everything that went on up to Baxter's and down to Bart's shop and, by golly, up little, considerable many things that happened on the bridge. Bart vows he never planned that plum tree in the back door of his shop—says the children must have love on plum stones when they were settling on the steps and the tree came up of its own accord."

"Men are an awful trial," admitted Mrs. Day. "Abel never sympathizes with my headaches. I told him a Sunday I didn't believe he'd mind if I died the next day, an' all he said was, 'Why don't you try it an' see, Lyddy? He thinks that's humorous.'"

"I know. That's the way Bartholomew talks. I guess they all do. You can see the bridge better'n I can, Lyddy. Has Mark Wilson drove over since you've been settin' there? He's like one o' them ostriches that hides their heads in the sand when the bird catchers are coming along, thinkin' 'cause they can't see anything they'll never be seen. He knows folks would never tell tales to Deacon Baxter, whatever the girls done. They hate him too bad. Lawyer Wilson lives so far away he can't keep any watch of Mark, an' Miss Wilson's so cloyed an' course proud nobody ever goes to her with any news, bad or good; so them that's the most concerned is as ill off as bats. Mark's considerable odder'n he used to be, but you needn't tell me he has any notion of bringin' one o' them girls into his family. He's only amusin' himself."

"Patty'll be Mrs. Wilson or nothin'," was Mrs. Day's response. "Both o' them girls is silk purses, an' you can't make sows' ears of 'em. We ain't neither of us hardly fair to Patty, an' I s'pose it's because she didn't set any proper value on Cephas."

"Oh, she's good enough for Mark, I guess, though I s'pose she's his intentions as you be. She's nobody's fool, Patty ain't; I allow that, though she did treat Cephas like the dirt to the road. I'm thankful he's come to his senses an' found out the difference between brass an' gold."

"It's very good of you to put it that way, Abby," Mrs. Day responded gratefully, for it was Phoebe, her own offspring, who was alluded to as the most precious metals. "I suppose we'd better have the patching notice put up in the frame before Sunday? There'll be a great crowd out that day, and at Thanksgiving service the next Thursday too."

"Cephas says he don't care how soon folks hear the news, now all's settled," said his mother. "I guess he's kind of anxious that the village should know just how little truth there is in the gossip 'bout him 'n' all upset over Patience Baxter. He said they took considerable notice of him an' Phoebe settin' together at the harvest festival last evenin'." He thought the Baxter girls would be there for certain, but I s'pose Old Fogy wouldn't let 'em go up to the Mills in the evenin' nor spend a quarter on their ticks."

"Mark could have invited Patty an' paid for her ticket, I should think, or passed her in free, for that matter, when the Wilsons got up the entertainment; but, of course, the deacon never allows his girls to go anywhere with men folks."

"Not in public; so they must 'em side o' the river or round the corner of Bart's shop, or anywhere they can, when the deacon's back's turned. If you tied a handkerchief over Waitstill's eyes she could find her way blindfold to Ivory Boynton's house, but she's good as gold, Waitstill is. She'll stay where her duty calls her every time. If any misfortune or scandal should come near them two girls the deacon will have nobody but himself to thank for it, that's one sure thing."

"Young folks can't be young but one," sighed Mrs. Day. "How'd you like that Boston suzer that the Wilsons brought here, Abby? Wait a minute, is Cephas, or the deacon temlin' store this afternoon?"

"The deacon, Cephas is waitin' up to the Mills."

"Well, Mark Wilson's horse an' buggy is meanderin' slowly down Aunt Betty Jack's hill, an' Mark is studyin' the road as if he was lookin' for a four leaved clover."

"He'll hitch at the tavern, or the Edgewood store, an' wait his chance to get a word with Patience," said Aunt Abby. "He knows when she takes milk to the Morrills, or butter to the parsonage; also when she cuts an' drunks an' whisks her eye an' belches her mouth an' lifts her foot. Now he's disappointed an' we'll wait. . . . Why, us to that Boston suzer, I don't know how high she went, but I guess there wa'n't no higher to go!"

"It made me kind o' nervous," allowed Mrs. Day. "Folks said she came runs and rills better'n any woman up to Boston."

"Runs an' rills," ejaculated Abby scornfully. "I was talkin' 'bout singin', not runnin'. My niece, Ella, up to Parsonage has taken three terms on the piano, an' I've heard her practice. Seides has got to be done no doubt, but they'd ought to be done to home, where they belong. A concert ain't no place for 'em. There! What did I tell yer? Patience Baxter's crossin' the bridge with a pall in her hand. She's got that everlasting yellow brown, luscious-woolsey on an' a white cloud wrapped around her head, with considerable red hair showin', as usual. You can always see her fur's you can a surprise. And there goes Rod Boynton chasin' behind, as usual. These Baxter girls make a perfect fool o' that boy, but I don't s'pose Rod Boynton's got wit enough to make much fuss over the poor little creature!"

Mark Wilson could certainly see Patty Baxter as far as he could see a sunrise, although he was not intimately acquainted with that natural phenomenon. He took a circuitous route from his watch tower and, knowing well the point from which there could be no espionage from Deacon Baxter's store windows, joined Patty in the road, took the pall from her hand and walked up the hill beside her. Of course the village could see them; but, as Aunt Abby had intimated, there wasn't a man, woman or child on either side of the river, who wouldn't have taken the part of the Baxter girls against their father.

Meantime Phoebe Phoebe Day was driving her father's horse up to the Mills to bring Cephas Cole home. It was a thrilling moment, a sort of outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual life, for their names were to be published the next day.

It had been an eventful autumn for Cephas. After a third request, for the hand of Miss Patience Baxter and a refusal of even more than common decision and energy, Cephas turned about face and employed the entire month of September to a determined assault upon the affections of Miss Lucy Morrill, but with no better avail.

Cephas' belief in the holy state of matrimony as being the only one proper for a man, really ought to have commended him to the opposite (and ungratifying) sex more than it did, and Lucy Morrill held as respectful an opinion of the institution and its manifold advantages as Cephas himself, but she was in a very unsettled frame of mind and not at all susceptible to wooing. She had a strong preference for Philip Perry and held an opinion, not altogether unfounded in human experience, that in course of time, when quite deserted by Patty Baxter, his heart might possibly be caught on the rebound. It was only a chance, but Lucy would almost have preferred remaining unmarried even to the withering age of twenty-five rather than not be at liberty to accept Philip Perry in case she should be asked.

Cephas, therefore, by the middle of October could be picturesquely and attractively described as being raw from repeated rejections. His bruised heart and his despoiled all liberally cried out for the appreciation so long and blindly withheld. Now all at once Phoebe disclosed a second virtue, her first and only one hitherto in the eyes of Cephas having been an ability to get on with his mother—a feat in which many had made an effort and few indeed had succeeded. Phoebe, it seems, had always secretly admired, respected and loved Cephas Cole. Never since her pale and somewhat glaucous blue eye had opened on life had she believed a being she could so adore if encouraged in the attitude.

The moment this unusual and unexpected position was really applied to Cephas' wounds they began to heal. In the course of a month the most ordinary observer could have perceived a physical change in him. He cringed no more, but held his head higher; his back straightened; his voice developed a gruff, assertive note like that of a stern Roman father; he let his muscles grow and sometimes, in his most reckless moments, twiddled the end of it.

And then congratulations began to pour in. Was ever marriage so fortuitous? The Coles' farm joined that of the Days', and the union between the two only children would cement the friendship between the families. The fact that Uncle Hart was a joiner, Cephas a pulper and Abel Day a mason and bricklayer made the alliance almost providential in its business opportunities. Phoebe's Massachusetts aunt sent a complete outfit of light edged china, a clock and a mahogany chamber set. Aunt Abby relinquished to the young couple a bedroom and a spare chamber in the "main part," while the Days supplied live geese, fowls and table and bed linen with positive prodigality. Aunt Abby trod the air like one inspired.

"If only I could 'a' looked ahead," smiled Uncle Bart quizzically to himself, "I 'a' had thirteen sons and daughters an' married off one of 'em every year. That would 'a' made Ab's good temper kind o' permanent."

Cephas was content too. There was a good deal in being settled and having "the whole dargoned business" of your hands. Phoebe looked a very different creature to him in those latter days. Her eyes were just as pale, of course, but they were brighter, and they radiated love for him, an expression in the female eye that he had thus far been singularly unfortunate in sensing. She still held her mouth slightly open, but Cephas thought that it might be permissible, perhaps after three months of wretched bliss, to request her to be more careful in closing it.

Cephas did not think of Patty any longer with bitterness in these days, being of the opinion that she was punished enough in observing his own growing popularity and prosperity.

"If she should see that mahogany chamber set going into the ell I guess she'd be glad enough to change her tune," thought Cephas exultingly, and then there suddenly shot through his mind the passing fancy, "I wonder if she would?" He promptly banished the infamous suggestion, however, reinforcing his virtue with the reflection that the chamber set was Phoebe's anyway, and the marriage day approached and the wedding cake being baked, a loaf at a time, by his mother and Mrs. Day.

As a matter of fact, Patty would have had no eyes for Phoebe's magnificent mahogany, even had the cart that carried it passed her on the hill where she and Mark Wilson were walking. Her promise to marry him was a few weeks old now, and his arm encircled her slender waist under the brown homespun cape. That in itself was a new sensation and gave her the delicious sense of belonging to somebody who valued her highly and assured her of his sentiments clearly and frequently, both by word and deed. Life, dull gray life, was going to change its hue for her presently, and not long after, she hoped, for Waitstill too.

The "publishing" of Cephas and his third choice, they dull walk up the aisle of the meeting house before an admiring throng on the Sunday when Phoebe would "appear bride," all this seemed very tame as compared with the dreams of this prudent and adventurous pair of lovers who had gone about for days harboring secret's great and more daring, they thought, than had ever been breathed before within the hearing of Sage water.

IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

While Mr. Bayliss is a staunch Republican, he is a very progressive one; and instead of leaving the old party he wishes a thorough house-cleaning and stands for the statement that everything in the political field should be done in the open and be able to stand the light of publicity. His belief is the "greatest good for the greatest number" and he is working to that end. Mr. Bayliss is a man of the people who knows the needs of the people and who assures his friends that he will appreciate their support at the primaries and that he, if elected, will do all in his power to voice the people of this part of Michigan.—Muncie News.

No hotter man could be chosen than Joseph E. Bayliss. His record in the legislature and at home whenever he has been in the political limelight is that of a progressive Republican. He is close to the people and would make for them a loyal and efficient representative.—Saulte Ste Marie Evening News.

Mr. Hinkley's action in leaving the field to Senator Frank Scott of Alpena, Representative Joe Bayliss of the Soo and Judd Yelland of Escanaba has so simplified matters that the friends of Bayliss are now certain that he will be nominated.

The 11th district contest is to be some fight, too, and the big guns are about to be unlimbered. Scrap books have been carefully kept and past political records are soon to be dragged out and exposed.

Senator Scott is impeached by his enemies on the charge of speaking in favor of bills and then voting against them, while Representative Bayliss is a Progressive Republican who refused to leave his party, although he favored T. Roosevelt at all times, while Judd Yelland is mentioned as a mere novice put up to draw votes from Bayliss.

Mr. Bayliss was the author of many bills in the 1913 legislature which were designed to place the party machinery squarely in the hands of the rank and file of the parties and thus clip the power of party bosses. He has claimed since the defeat of President Taft that not issues but party bosses split the Republicans in twain. With the cause of the split removed, he says, the party should get together.

And while Mr. Bayliss is contending for peace the old guard leaders are planning to test out the constitutionality of his law to have state central committees elected by parties at the primaries. They want the old convention system re-established. This is an act of bad faith, Mr. Bayliss claims, when the party is trying to get away from the rock on which the good ship foundered two years ago.—Grand Rapids Press.

Edward Amherst Ott to Lecture Here Chautauqua Week

EDWARD AMHERST OTT'S popular lectures are bearing fruit in the way of advanced legislation for the betterment of the American people. His lecture on "Sour Grapes," which treats of marriage and divorce, has been given nearly 2,000 times. In one of the states where it was given the legislator who introduced a reform marriage bill said he received his inspiration to do so from hearing Mr. Ott's address. But whether he delivers this lecture or one of his other subjects he is always alike—forceful, entertaining and inspiring. He has appeared before more than 3,000 audiences in America, and more than 2,500 copies of his books have been sold.

BRACING WITH THE MOTOR.

Serves to Cool Engines as Well as Save Brake Wear.

As generally practiced, the use of the motor as a brake has serious faults, but when the driver of a car learns the proper method of applying the forces he controls to this purpose, the majority of the disadvantages vanish with their cause and there is added to the control of the car a powerful factor of safety, writes a correspondent of the Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

The engine should be shut off, with the throttle closed at the top of the hill. The car being in high gear, the driver is ready for the descent, will climb out.

The foot brakes should first be lightly applied and the clutch slowly let off until it begins to grip and to turn the engine slowly. The engine will offer the greatest resistance at the slowest possible speed. The engine may be then kept at a very slow speed by varying the clutch pressure and the brakes will be found to be relieved of at least one-half the pressure needed to hold the car by that means alone. If the grade is very bad and the brakes are inefficient second speed or even low may be used in the same manner.

This will not injure the clutch. The power required to turn the engine is so slight in proportion to the power transmitted by the clutch in driving the car that it will grip entirely before receiving injurious pressure.

To use the motor as a brake to the best advantage the gears must be shifted in accordance with the severity of the grade. If nothing out of the ordinary there is no necessity of changing from the first drive; if rather bad use second; if very bad use first. Shift on the brow of the hill before the car gathers any momentum and immediately shut off the ignition, taking care in so doing that the switch is not shoved from the magnet clean over to the battery. Where the car is not equipped with a good kick switch with plenty of space between the points, test this by pressing the accelerator gingerly. If there is no response the car is then running on.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY ON FAITHFULNESS TO OPPORTUNITIES.

Luke 19:11-27—July 28.
"Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Matthew 25:21.

It is not to confound the Parable of the Pounds with the Parable of the Talents. They teach totally different lessons. In the case of the talents, the amount given each servant differed. In the case of the pounds, the amount was the same. This parable, therefore, deals with something common to all the class referred to.

Jesus and His disciples were approaching Jerusalem, where shortly He was to be crucified. The disciples, on the contrary, supposed that the Messianic Kingdom would immediately be established. This parable was intended to inform them that a long time would first elapse.

The kings of Palestine were appointed by the Roman Emperor. One of the Herods had recently gone to Rome, seeking appointment to a kingdom. Some who hated him sent a message to Rome, declaring their preference for another king. Jesus seized upon this circumstance as illustrating His own case. He was the Appointee for the Messianic Kingdom; but He would go to Heaven, and there the Heavenly Father, Emperor of the Universe, would invest Him with authority. Later He would return to earth and exercise dominion. This is exactly the presentation of prophecy.—Psalm 2:8.

"Occupy Till I Come."

During the Master's absence, in Heaven, He has committed to His disciples, His servants, one pound each, with full liberty to use their best judgment in His service. At His return, these servants will be reckoned with, and rewarded in proportion to their zeal and efficiency.

The parable distinguishes between these consecrated servants of God and the world. It shows that nothing is committed to the masses, and that no judgment, reward, is made in their case at the Master's return. Only His servants will be held responsible for either reward or punishment in respect to their faithfulness.

In considering what is signified by the pound, we must keep in memory that the fulfillment must show some blessing or responsibility given alike to all of God's consecrated people. We can think of but one thing given alike to this class. Their talents and opportunities are very unlike—wealth, mental capacity, environment, etc. None of these varied talents belong to this Parable of the Pounds.

The pound represents justification. The one thing which the Redeemer does for all His followers is to justify them freely from all things, leaving them on exactly an equal footing; for justification makes up to each in proportion as he is short of perfection.

"Be Thou Faithful Unto Death."

All who now become Christ's followers must receive from the Lord, as a basis for this relationship, the pound—free forgiveness of sins—justification. Because they are thus alike qualified, the results will show the degree of loving zeal controlling each servant.

"As in the parable one servant gained ten pounds, so such noble characters as St. Peter, St. John and others counted all earthly things as loss and dross, that they might be pleasing to their Master, the coming King. These, and such as these, who have gladly spent themselves in the Lord's service, will have the highest rewards. The servant who retained a gain of five pounds represents a class who will receive a less influential place in the Kingdom.

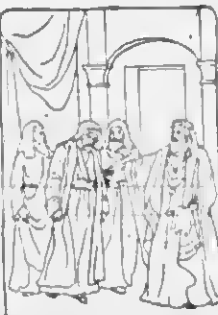

"Those Mine Enemies—Slay Them!" The servant who hid his pound represents those who have entered into a covenant with the Lord to be His servants, who have received justification at His hands, but who have not complied with their agreement to sacrifice self in His service. This class is represented by the foolish virgins, who failed to enter in to the wedding. These will fail to become members of the bride class.

Not until He comes shall we have dealt with His servants at His Second Coming with Messiah begin to deal with the world, and especially His enemies. This statement is borne out by numerous Scriptures. The work of the Gospel Age is merely for the selection and testing of His servants, to determine which will be found worthy of association with Himself in the Kingdom.

At first thought we might gather that verse 27 signifies that the King of Glory will be implacable, ferocious, unsympathetic, with His enemies. A picture of this carnage is given in Revelation 19:15, where He is represented in glorious majesty, with a sword proceeding out of His mouth, that with it He should smite the nations. Blessed smiling! This terrible carnage will mean a great blessing; for the Lord smites to heal. Unless His enemies be thus brought into subjection, nothing remains for them but extinction.—Acts 2:23.

Pride and Love.

"So you turned him down, eh?"
"Yes, I rejected him."
"But I thought you loved him?"
"I do. I'm just crazy about him."
"Then why did you reject him?"
"One of my gut friends refused him once, and I can't have her saying that I took one of her cast offs."—Houston Post.

Grange Column

Pomona Grange.

The next meeting of the Charlevoix County Pomona Grange will be held with South Arm Grange Tuesday, August 18th. Miss Dora H. Stockman, a well-known grange leader, will be the principal speaker. Grangers throughout the county are urged to attend.

Grand Ball at Ironton Grange Hall Friday evening, July 31st. Good music, best of order, refreshments. Adv. 2912

Harmony Grange.

Harmony Grange met on Saturday evening, July 18th, with a good attendance. After the regular business was disposed of the following program was presented: Roll call—each one gave an original poem or, if not poetically inclined, a current event; paper and discussion, "How Can Children Be Taught to be Cheerful When Things Do Not Go as They Wish?" led by Mrs. W. C. Burdick. The subject of "Sweet Clover" was much discussed by the members and it was decided that it was worthy of a thorough trial at least.

For the good of the order it was decided to hold a box social, Friday evening, July 24th, at the Pleasant Valley schoolhouse. It was also decided to send our lecturer, Mrs. H. L. Wilson, to the lecturers' conference at Bay View August 14th.

We save you money on Automobile Supplies and Tires. Adv. 2911 Benj. Brown.

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session, Friday evening. In the absence of the Worthy Master, the Worthy Steward took charge of the meeting. Communications from the State Grange and the Charlevoix Agriculture Society were read and placed on file. After recess the lecture hour was taken up with music, songs and readings. Attendance, 29; visitors, 4. Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

Peninsular Grange.

The regular meeting of Peninsular grange was held Saturday evening, July 18, with Worthy Master Heller and officers in the chair. There were 31 members and one visitor present. One candidate was obligated in the first and second degrees. Lecturer's hour was taken up in practice of drill. The grange voted to buy a new grange seal. The new lights, in addition to those already in the hall, lighted up the room nicely. This grange has more than doubled its membership during the past six months. Next meeting August 1.

Fine Window Display.

The object and use of Pyrene Fire Extinguishers are displayed in fine style in the windows of Myrtle Young & Son's insurance office, Bridge street, this week. The window is tastefully arranged and why this method of fire protection should be adopted is fully illustrated. Notice the window as you pass by.

COURIER GIVES FREE DINNERS

On July 24 and August 6 to Subscribers on Rural Routes

Read the Liberal Offer Below—Come to Charlevoix and Be Our Guests on These Dates.

Many of the country readers of the Courier will make it a point to visit Charlevoix on Friday, July 24, and Thursday, August 6, the dates of Sun Brothers' and Barnes' shows. To the subscribers living on rural routes who will pay in on their subscriptions to this paper on that day the following proposition is made:

Any subscriber in arrears who pays and obtains a receipt for a year's subscription will receive a dinner ticket good at some one of the several restaurants in the city.

Any subscriber who pays a year's subscription in advance will receive a dinner ticket.

Any subscriber who pays a year's back subscription and a year in advance will receive two dinner tickets.

In other words, every year's subscription paid in means a dinner ticket to the subscriber. This offer is conditioned only as follows: In order to obtain a free dinner ticket the subscriber must settle his account up to date.

Chautauqua Postcards.

Beautifully-colored postcards containing views of the Chautauqua attractions and scenes have been placed on exhibition in several of the different stores. They are free for the asking and are to be used in inviting your friends to the forthcoming Chautauqua assembly and for other Chautauqua publicity. Be sure to invite someone to the Chautauqua and show your friends a good time.

Our Opinion of Lawyer Scott

The Courier is opposed to personalities in a campaign; we do not like to deal in personalities even in self-defense. But in this case Lawyer Scott has opened his own barrel of mud and if he gets covered with the same by the return breeze we are not to blame.

The Courier is opposed to his nomination because:

He is a politician first—a statesman last.

Because he is seeking support through methods of which we cannot approve.

Because he claims to be "dry" and acts decidedly "wet."

Because he continually plays to the grand stand.

Because he has not the moral courage to take a decided stand on questions when by so doing his own personal ambitions might be jeopardized.

Because, to sum it up, he is not to be compared with Joe Bayliss in ability, statesmanship, devotion to the people, or any other qualifications for the office he seeks.

Joe Bayliss is every inch a man, and for these reasons we are supporting him.

Re-Stocking Lakes.

Jay Adams received a shipment of small mouth black bass fingerlings last week, which were planted in Adams' Lake. The shipment amounted to about 5,000 of the small gamefish. The small lakes around Charlevoix all need re-stocking each year with gamefish and an effort will be made to have this done by the local fishermen.

SAXON $395

The Price of $395 includes Top, Windshield, Lamps and Taps.

No Other Car in the World Like This

The handsome Saxon is the first motor car—and the only one selling at or near its price—to embody the essential features of standard motor car design. It is not a cycle car—but a real automobile.

The Saxon Meets the demand for a low-priced car that is both good looking. It is a big car for the price, with roomy, streamline body; 96 inch wheel base; standard tread; shaft drives 4 cylinder, 15 horsepower Continental motor of Special Saxon design; left drive with center control—and other standard features.

There is nothing skimpy or cramped about it—spacious body, ample leg room, generous doors. The well shaped body, molded oval fenders, tapered bonnet and graceful, sweeping curves, make this car a delight to the eye.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, JULY 29, 1914

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

THE CHARLEVOIX COUNTY FAIR

Synopsis of What is in Store for Those Who Attend This Year.

County Grange Day Wednesday, September 9th-- School Day September 10th.

Owing to a wise and conservative business management in the past the Charlevoix County Fair Association is now approaching its thirtieth annual exhibition with every prospect of success.

Up-to-date buildings and facilities now guarantee the proper display and protection of the largest and finest agricultural exhibit ever shown in Northern Michigan. It is expected that the largely increased premiums offered for cattle, swine and sheep will greatly strengthen the exhibit in these sections and already several of our best stockmen have promised to compete.

The new speed committee will endeavor to present the races in a manner both pleasing and convenient to all interested in this popular sport.

Regarding special free attractions the executive committee have sought to avoid as much as possible the uncertainty and disappointment that frequently attend such acts as aeroplane flights, balloon ascensions, etc., and secure some first-class attractions that will be certain to perform under ordinary conditions. Thus far three first-class attractions to be given in connection with the races have been secured.

Lionel Legare's Mammoth Spiral Tower Exhibition, in which Mr. Legare besides performing other difficult feats ascends and descends a mammoth spiral tower by propelling a 26-inch ball with his feet on a narrow track with perfectly smooth surface. This is an attraction of state fair magnitude and is endorsed by the highest authorities as one of the greatest equilibristic feats of the age.

Ray Burton performs many difficult feats in fancy pistol and rifle shooting, firing three weapons hitting the target simultaneously, etc. A $10,000 challenge act.

Company X, an Independent military company commanded by Captain Henry L. Winters, a Spanish War veteran, and Lieut. Spring and Bulch, will camp on the grounds during the fair and give an exhibition daily of the highest order. This company is comprised of 60 men fully uniformed, officered and equipped and has creditably passed state inspection. Its concluding exhibition on the last day of the fair will consist of a great sham battle. Several thousand rounds of ammunition will be used in this extraordinary feature, illustrating complete military maneuvers of modern warfare. This feature alone should be worth many times the price of admission to the entire fair.

The order of Patrons of Industry have selected Wednesday, September 9th, as Grange Day and Hon. John C. Ketcham, Worthy Minister of the Michigan State Grange, will be present to deliver an address. A prize is offered for the Grange registering the largest percentage of attendance on this day. Also, the heaviest patron, the tallest, shortest and the oldest will be suitably rewarded. Patrons will register at the Grange headquarters.

School Day, Thursday, September 10th, will fully demonstrate the efficiency and progress of our public schools. The new educational and fine arts building will contain an exhibit worthy of careful inspection by every thoughtful citizen.

It is aimed to make every day of the county fair a "big" day and all that is needed to make it a grand success is the goodwill, active support and attendance of all good citizens. The management is making a honest effort to please you. Do your part. Throw away your hammer and buy a horn. Quit knocking and boost, and our county fair, in the broadest sense, will continue to be all it should be—an institution of profit and delight, the great humanizing event of the year.

A Stick Story.

MET AT BOYNE FALLS

Charlevoix County Federation, A. O. G., Entertained by State Lecturer Marvin.

The Charlevoix County Federation, A. O. G., held at Boyne Falls Tuesday was a very interesting event. The next meeting will be held with Bay Arnot Tuesday, September 1st.

Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Marvin of Detroit were present and discussed organization and co-operation among farmers. In his remarks Mr. Marvin introduced the new Gleaner profit-sharing co-operation plans. He said: "The Gleaners have searched every county where co-operation has been tried out so that the best there is may be given to the farmers of this country. In the Gleaner plan only the most practicable and feasible principles, as found profitable in Europe, have been adopted for application here. The Gleaner slogan is: 'A warehouse in every Gleaner community.' The purpose of the order is to use the sixty-six thousand and Michigan Gleaners for the development of a nation-wide movement for profit-sharing co-operation by which American farmers may eliminate many of the abuses practiced against producers of farm products."

He further stated that Gleaner life protection is safe at the minimum cost and the highest efficiency is guaranteed each member. Besides life insurance and co-operation for better markets before 1915 fire and lightning insurance will be added. In December a State Federation will be held at Lansing.

WILL SPEAK AT IRONTON

Mrs. Dora H. Stockman Will Talk To Grangers Afternoon of August 17.

On Monday, August 17, Mrs. Dora H. Stockman will be at the Ironton Grange hall and give her lecture on the subject of "The Kitchen as a Power Plant." She will also demonstrate some of the methods of producing power in the kitchen.

Dinner will be served at noon (the patrons bring baskets) and the program will be given in the afternoon. Mrs. Stockman uses the same topic at Pomona Grange in the afternoon, and her evening topic will be "Efficient Farm Homes." All know of Mrs. Stockman's ability as a speaker, and the Ironton meeting will make it possible for all in that section to hear her who cannot attend the meeting of Pomona.

CHAUTAUQUA AUGUST 12-18

List of Attractions Offered for Educational Entertainment Next Month.

Magnificent Array of Attractions for Program Which Will Open Wednesday, August 12.

A long list of renowned talent has been provided for the chautauqua which will open in Charlevoix on Wednesday, August 12, and continue through to the following Tuesday. Kyril's famous band will make its first appearance here, as will also the Ben Greet players, while the list of lecturers, instrumentalists, vocalists and entertainers is a long one.

The Durbur Bell Singers and Male Quartette will open the chautauqua, their first concert being given at 2:30 p. m. They will be followed by Doctor Leslie W. Sprague, who will lecture on "Learning to Live in Cities." In the evening the Durburs will give another of their famous concerts.

The second day will open at 9 a. m. with a children's hour in charge of Miss Bond, an entertainer of note. Mr. Mills, who has been selected as the "morning" hour lecturer, will then speak on "As a Man Thinks." These morning entertainments and lectures will continue throughout the chautauqua.

Saturday will be musical festival day, when in the afternoon a recital will be given by Marcus A. Kellerman, and in the evening the Westminster Choir will give a grand concert. Kyril and his band will appear Sunday at the chautauqua in two sacred concerts, afternoon and evening.

Monday and Tuesday's forenoon, afternoon and evening's programs will be equal to those of the preceding days and should not be missed by those who care to attend.

Tickets for the chautauqua are now on sale at various places in the city and a large number have been disposed of at this early date.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

FATHER CHARLEVOIX

1682-1761

Interesting Sketch of His Life from Pen of Mr. Brayton Saltonstall

Charlevoix was enchanted with the beauty and variety of the scenery which he had viewed thus far. He writes of it as follows: "If one could journey forever under a serene sky and a delightful climate upon waters clear as the purest fountains, finding always safe and pleasant spots for camping with the pleasures of the chase at hand, inhaling its pure air, enjoying the prospect of the most beautiful scenery, one might be tempted to travel to the end of life. I recalled to mind those ancient patriarchs who had no fixed abode. How many springs reminded me of the well of Jacob. Every day a change of scene, a shelter clean and comfortable, arranged and furnished in less than a quarter of an hour, strewn with unfading flowers upon a carpet of green; everywhere simple and natural beauty which art has not changed and cannot imitate. If these pleasures sometimes meet with interruptions through stress of weather or unexpected accident they are the more relished when they reappear."

Resuming the journey at Detroit, Charlevoix writes as follows: "It was on the eighteenth of June that I left Fort Pontchartrain at Detroit a little before sunset. I had gone hardly a league when a storm accompanied by a deluge of rain constrained me to go ashore. I was wet through and we passed a most uncomfortable night. The next day all I could accomplish was to cross Lake Saint Claire, although it was only thirty-six miles. While crossing Lake Saint Claire I had in my canoe a young savage, strong and vigorous, upon whose arms I had counted much in return for the passage I had accorded him at his own request. He was not of much use to me, but he amused me greatly until the storm which arose over our heads began to alarm me. This young man had made his toilet before embarking and he couldn't take three strokes with his paddle without taking up his mirror to see if the motion of his arms had not disarranged the adjustment of his costume or if the perspiration had not obliterated the marks he had put upon his face, of red and other colors with which he had adorned it. I do not know if he hoped to reach the village of Mesasagwez before night to attend some event, but we could not get so far. The storm broke just as we reached an island, which ended our crossing of the lake and we had to stop there. The young savage, however, did not seem to be much put out by this disappointment, for these people are not easily disconcerted. Perhaps he had only intended to show himself to us in all his beauty, but if that was his design he had his trouble for his pains. I had seen him as nature made him a few days before that and I liked him much better than with this fantastic assortment of colors which had cost him so much effort. One sees few women who paint their faces, but the men, especially the young men, are very fond of this adornment. There are some who spend half a day in priming thus solely for the purpose of going from door to door to show themselves, returning very self contented, even when no one has said a word!"

"We entered Lake Huron the twenty-first, about ten o'clock in the morning, and we enjoyed there the diversion of fishing for sturgeon. "The next day, in spite of the thunder which rumbled all day but only threatened us, I advanced nearly twenty-five miles into the lake, but on the twenty-fifth a thick fog which prevented us from seeing four feet from the canoe compelled us to go more slowly because we were navigating upon a rocky coast which in many places was not covered with half a foot of water. It extends away out into the lake and is ten miles long. Our Canadians called it "les pays plats," the flat lands. The day following we reached the "Baye du Saginaw," which is twenty-five or thirty miles wide and twice as long. The "Outaouais" have a village at the head of this bay, which I am assured is in a beautiful country. From there to "Mackinac" one sees nothing attractive—no more vines, poor woods and very little hunting. Ten leagues from the edge of Saginaw Bay one sees two rivers, quite large ones, two leagues apart, and four or five leagues further on "L'Anse au Tonnerre," or Thunder Bay, seven or eight miles wide and not very deep.

"Michillimackinac is at 45 degrees and 30 minutes north latitude, and the course, which extends one hundred leagues from Detroit along the west shore of Lake Huron, is almost north. (Note.—In spelling words in which we use the letter "w" Charlevoix had to use a substitute for it, as there is no letter "w" in the French alphabet. So in writing the word Saginaw he spelled it Sa-gu-in-a-w. In writing Mackinaw he used a "c" in place of the "w," but he pronounced it nearly as we do when we use the "w," so that the pronunciation of Mackinac should be the same whether spelled with a "c" or a "w" and to speak of Mackinac is only for the convenience of the post office department. It is Mackinaw City and Mackinac Island, regardless of the spelling. We who live in Charlevoix should call it Mackinaw, and let the resorters call it Mackinac if they will.) Continuing the journal, Charlevoix says of Mackinaw:

"I arrived the twenty-eighth in this port, which is most desolate since Monsieur de la Motte Cadillac has attached to Detroit the better part of the savages who were located there, especially the Hurons. Several Ottawas have followed them there; others have scattered among the islands of the Beavers; there only remains here a mediocre village, where, nevertheless, quite a large trade in furs is done because it is the passage or rendezvous of numerous savage nations. They have kept the fort and mission house, which are not now much occupied, not having found much docility among the Ottawas, but the court of France deems their presence necessary in a place where it is useful to treat often with our allies, to exert their influence upon the Frenchmen who go there in great numbers. I am assured that since the establishment of Detroit and the dispersion of the savages which it has occasioned several northern nations who were accustomed to bring their furs here have been going to Hudson Bay to trade with the English, but Monsieur de la Motte failed to foresee this difficulty, since we were then in possession of the Hudson Bay.

"The situation of Mackinaw is very advantageous for commerce. This port is between three great lakes—Michigan, which has three hundred leagues of coast without counting the great bay which discharges into it; Huron, which has three hundred and fifty leagues of coast in the form of a triangle, and Superior, which has five hundred. All these are navigable for the largest boats and the two former are separated only by a narrow strait, which also has sufficient water for them, and they could also navigate with no obstacle in Lake Erie to Niagara. It is true that there is no communication between Lake Huron and Lake Superior except by a stream about twenty-two leagues long much interrupted by rapids, but these rapids do not prevent the canoes coming to discharge at Mackinaw all that can be brought out of Lake Superior. This lake is two hundred leagues long from east to west and in some places eighty leagues in width from north to south. All the south coast is sandy and nearly straight. It would be dangerous to be surprised there by a wind from the north. The north shore is better suited to navigation because it is rock-bound, which makes little harbors where it is very easy to take refuge, and nothing is more necessary when navigating in canoes in this lake, where travellers have noticed a very singular phenomenon when there is going to be a storm, they say, one is notified two days in advance. At first there is noticed a little trembling upon the surface of the water and this lasts all day without increasing sensibly. The next day the lake is covered with pretty large waves, but they do not break all that day, so that one can proceed without fear and can make good progress if the wind is favorable, but the third day—when you would expect it the least—the lake is all in a turmoil. The ocean in its greatest fury is not more agitated and it is necessary to have at a fixed point an asylum for one's safety such as is to be found upon the north shore rather than upon the south, where after the second day it is necessary to camp well back from the water's edge.

"The savages through gratitude for the quantities of fish which this lake furnishes them, and the awe which its vast expanse inspires, have made of it a sort of divinity, offering sacrifices to it. I think, nevertheless, that it is not to the lake itself, but to the genius which presides there that they address their devotions. If one can give credence to them, the origin of the lake had something divine about it. It was "Michibou," the god of waters, who formed it as a preserve for beavers. In the canal through which it discharges into Lake Huron there is a rapid caused by large rocks. Our missionaries, who had there a very flourishing church, named it "Le Sault de Sainte Marie." These rocks, according to these barbarians, are the remains of a dam which God had erected to hold back the waters of the rivers which had filled this great lake.

"Upon the shores in some places and around certain islands large pieces of copper are found which are the object of the superstitious veneration of the savages, who regard them as presents from the gods who reside beneath the waters. They gather the smallest fragments and preserve them with care, but make no use of them. When Michibou, add the savages, formed Lake Superior he dwelt at Michillimackinac, where he was born. This is, properly speaking, the name of a little island nearly round, quite high, situated at the extremity of Lake Huron, and has been extended by usage to all the country around it. The island may be eight or nine miles in circumference and can be seen thirty-six miles away. There are two other islands to the south, of which the farthest is five or six leagues long; the other perfectly round and very small. Both of them are well wooded and the soil good, while Mackinac is nothing but a rock, altogether sterile and thinly covered with a little moss and grasses.

(Note.—What a contrast between the picture of Mackinaw in 1721 as Father Charlevoix draws it and the one he would draw to-day could he but visit it! The barren rock is now a bower of arbor-vitae and evergreens interspersed with maples and other deciduous trees, whose summer hues and autumn tints are the despair of artist or writer.) (To be continued next week.)

HAD PLEASANT TIME

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Crandell Entertain Number Friends at Dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Crandell entertained a number of their friends and relatives on Sunday last at their home on R. F. D. No. 4. One of those dinners usually had on an occasion of this kind was served by the hostess, and from accounts related by those present, it was satisfying to an extent that is beyond description.

Those who were present were their niece and nephew, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grover and little daughter, Bernidine of Detroit; Mrs. Allen Grover of Mt. Pleasant; Mr. and Mrs. George Priest and daughter, Blanche, of Petoskey; Mr. and Mrs. L. Bryant and children of Pellston; Mrs. Germond of Pellston; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Ostrum and children, Spencer Martin, and Amandus Evers of Bay Shore; Mr. and Mrs. George Scott and children, also of Bay Shore; Mr. and Mrs. Ed Seamon and son, Mrs. Hanley, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Crandell and children, and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Lenore of Charlevoix.

After the dinner was disposed of, the day was spent in visiting and having a good social time.

BAYLISS MEETING AT EAST JORDAN

Wilkinson Brothers Male Quartette the Star Attraction.

Will E. Hampton and A. L. Fitch Speakers of the Evening—Bayliss Sentiment Growing.

Saturday night, an open-air meeting was held at East Jordan in the interest of the candidacy of Joseph E. Bayliss for congress. The Wilkinson brothers male quartette was the star attraction and they sang two original campaign songs in addition to other selections.

The speakers were Will E. Hampton and A. L. Fitch and the people listened with apparent interest while the merits of the candidate they favored were set forth. Editor Lorraine had said that Mr. Bayliss was a Socialist or espoused Socialist doctrines, citing the initiative, referendum and recall as a horrible example of what might be expected if Mr. Bayliss was nominated, and Mr. Hampton rather caustically called attention to the fact that all three of these measures were now on the statute books of Michigan, having been placed there by a Republican legislature and that if Bayliss was a Socialist then all good Republicans were also Socialists, for the initiative, referendum and recall were established as good Republican doctrines in Michigan.

The demand for Bayliss buttons and cards exhausted the supply and it seemed apparent that Mr. Bayliss will get a good many votes in East Jordan, judging from the sentiments expressed by a lot of people after the meeting.

Special Announcement.

Rev. David Hugh Jones, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Evanston, Ill., will preach in the Congregational church next Sunday morning. Dr. Jones is a preacher of unusual ability, whose message should receive a wide hearing. The public is invited.

FOUR TICKETS IN THE FIELD

Saturday Last Day For Filing Primary Nominating Petitions.

Complete Tickets Filed for Republicans and Socialists—Part of Other Tickets Filed.

The time for filing primary nominating petitions expired at 4 o'clock Saturday and below is given the complete list of candidates whose names will appear upon the primary ballot next month.

It will be noticed in scanning over the list, that in the Republican columns every office has from one to four candidates seeking office with the exception of the last four, all of minor importance.

The Democrats filed the names of candidates for but three of the offices, while the Socialists file a complete ticket. A merry acrap is looked for and the coming four weeks will be hummers along political lines. The list of candidates follows:

REPUBLICAN TICKET

Representative—Jas. M. Felts, Herman I. McMillan.
Prosecuting Attorney—Rollie L. Lewis, Dwight H. Fitch, Merrill E. Silverstein, Arthur G. Urquhart.
Sheriff—Charles Novak, John H. Lewis, Frank McWain, Tony H. Josselyn.

Clerk—Richard Lewis, Thaddeus O. Bissell.
Treasurer—Daniel S. Payton, George W. Weaver.
Register of Deeds—Ford P. Robbins, Romeo A. Emrey, Andrew Ross.

Surveyor—Earnest A. Robinson.
Circuit Court Commissioner—Robert W. Kane.
Coroners—William H. Marshall, Allan M. Wilkinson.

Drain Commissioner—Lewis E. Smith.

DEMOCRATIC TICKET

Representative—Henry A. Jersey.
Sheriff—Byron J. Quirk.
Register of Deeds—Wm. P. Triplett.

SOCIALIST TICKET

Representative—Andrew T. Brockway.
Prosecuting Attorney—Ira G. Mosher.
Sheriff—William H. Cook.
Clerk—William J. Higman.
Treasurer—Oliver T. Johnson.
Register of Deeds—Noble W. Burdick.
Surveyor—David C. Nettleton.
Circuit Court Commissioner—Albert Holmes.

Coroners—George W. Lusk, Frank M. Gates.

Drain Commissioner—Louis P. Etz.

PROGRESSIVE TICKET

Sheriff—George Block.
Clerk—Fred D. Kovalsky.
Register of Deeds—Frank A. Hull.

It is quite doubtful as to whether the Progressive ticket as filed will appear on the ballot. Practically all of the nomination petitions were made out wrong and the requirements of the primary law were not followed out in other instances. The ticket is now held up awaiting an opinion from the attorney general as to its disposition.

When the voters go into the booths to vote they will be confronted with a primary ballot larger than any blanket-ballot ever before voted. The names of candidates of all parties will appear on one sheet and will include state, county, etc. Voters should carefully look up the law and read the instructions, as it is expected there will be an unusually large number of ballots spoiled in the marking.

BARNES CIRCUS

One of the Best on the Road Booked to Show Here Next Week.

"Modesty—extreme modesty—being the chief characteristic of all members of the newspaper craft, it would not be in keeping for me to tell you a really-to-goodness circus story." So said N. F. Johnson, general press representative of the Barnes circus, who is in the city to-day exploiting the engagement of the show here on Thursday, August 6th.

"Seeing is believing," said the circus man, "and we know that all of your people who visit the Barnes show will have then seen the largest collection of performing wild and domestic animals ever assembled in one lot. To be exact, there are 619 of them; ranging in size from ponderous elephants down to the tiniest ponies, monkeys and dogs. These animals are presented in 65 instructive, amusing, thrilling acts and 4 features. Forty clown animals provide fun for the kids."

French Remedy Aids Stomach Sufferers

France has been called the nation without stomach troubles. The French have for generations used a simple mixture of vegetable oils that relieve all stomach and intestinal ailments and keep the bowels free from foul, poisonous matter. The stomach is left to perform its functions normally.
Mr. George H. Mayr, a leading druggist of Chicago, cured himself with this remedy in a short time. The demand is so great that he imports these oils from France and compounds them under the name of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. People everywhere write and testify to the marvelous relief they have received using this remedy. One dose will rid the body of poisonous secretions that have accumulated for years and convince the most chronic sufferer from stomach, liver or intestinal troubles. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by all druggists.

HOW FAR IS PETOSKEY?

Not So Far That the Statements of its Residents Cannot Be Verified.

Rather an interesting case has been developed in Petoskey. Being so near by, it is well worth publishing here. The statement is sincere—the proof convincing.
S. L. Wixson of 509 Wachtel avenue, Petoskey, Michigan, says: "A few months ago I had an extremely lame back and severe pains across my loins. I could hardly get around. I couldn't stoop or lift or rest well, and mornings I was stiff and lame. My kidneys were sluggish and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I got a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. I don't have any headache or pains in my kidneys now."
Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Wixson had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father. Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his mother.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her. Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Haying time arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure. To punish Waitstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is tickle.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossips are busy with the names of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and needs Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waitstill volunteers her help in the Boynton housekeeping.

Despairing of winning Patty, Cephas turns his affections elsewhere. Patty and Mark are now sweethearts.

CHAPTER XXI.

Love's Young Dream.

IT was not an afternoon for day dreams, for there was a chill in the air and a gray sky. Only a week before the hills along the river had been the walls of the New Jerusalem, shining like red gold. Now the glory had departed, and it was a naked world, with empty nests hanging to boughs that not long ago had been green with summer.

Young love thought little of nature's intrusions, and hearts that beat high and fast were warm enough to forget the bleak wind and gathering clouds. If there were naked trees were there not full barrels of apples in every cellar? If there was nothing but stubble in the frozen fields, why there was plenty of wheat and corn at the mill all ready for grinding. The cold air made one long for a cheery home and fire, the crackle of a hearth log, the bubbling of a steaming kettle, and Patty and Mark clung together as they walked along, making bright images of a life together, snug, warm and happy.

Patty was a capricious creature, but all her changes were sudden and enduring ones, captivated those who loved her more than a momentous and unchanging virtue. Of late her little capriciousness and petulances had disappeared as if by magic. She had been melted somehow from irresponsible girlhood into womanhood and that, too, by the ardent affection of a very ordinary young man who had no great gift save that of loving Patty gently.

The love had served its purpose in another way, too, for under its influence Mark's own unworldly had broadened and deepened. He longed to bind Patty to him for good and all, to capture the bright bird whose fluttering wings and burnished plumage so captured his senses and stirred his heart, but his longings had changed with the quality of his love, and he glowed at the thought of delivering the girl from her dreary surroundings and giving her the tenderness, the ease and comfort, the innocent gaiety, that her nature craved.

"You won't fall now, Patty darling," he was saying at this moment. "Now that our plans are finally made, with never a weak point anywhere as far as I can see, my heart is so set upon carrying them out that every hour of waiting seems an age."

"No, I won't fall, Mark; but I never know the day that father will go to town until the night before. I can always hear him shuffling his preparation."

"You won't fall me, Patty, darling?" he was saying.

tions in the barn and the shed, and ordering Waitstill here and there. He is as excited as if he was going to Boston instead of Milford.

"The night before will do. I will watch the house every evening till you hang a white signal from your window."

"It won't be white," said Patty, who would be mischievous on her deathbed. "My Sunday-gown (mother) petticoat is too grand, and everything else that I have is yellow."

"I shall see it, whatever color it is, you can be sure of that," said Mark gallantly. "Then it's decided that next morning I'll wait at the tavern from sunrise and whenever your father and Waitstill have driven up Saco hill I'll come and pick you up, and we'll be off like a streak of lightning across the hills to New Hampshire. How lucky that Riverboro is only thirty miles from the state line! It looks like snow, and how I wish it would be something more than a flurry, a regular whizzing, whirling storm that would pack the roads and let us slip over them with our sleigh bells ringing!"

"I should like that, for they would be our only wedding bells. Oh, Mark! What if Waitstill shouldn't go, after all, though I heard father tell her that he needed her to buy things for the store, and that they wouldn't be back till after nightfall. Just to think of being married without Waitstill!"

"You can do without Waitstill on this one occasion, better than you can without me," laughed Mark, pinching Patty's cheek. "I've given the town clerk due notice and I have a friend to lend me his horse for the drive home, and we shall change back the next week. That will give us a fresh horse each way and we'll fly like the wind, snow or no snow. When we come down Gully Board hill that night, Patty, we shall be man and wife; isn't that wonderful?"

"We shall be man and wife in New Hampshire, but not in Maine, you say," Patty reminded him dolefully. "It does seem dreadful that we can't be married in our own state and have to go dangling about with this secret on our minds day and night, but it can't be helped. You'll try not to even think of me as your wife till we go to Portsmouth to live, won't you?"

"You're asking too much when you say I'm not to think of you as my wife, for I shall think of nothing else, but I've given you my solemn promise," said Mark stoutly. "And I'll keep it as sure as I live. We'll be legally married by the laws of New Hampshire, but we won't think of it as a marriage till I tell your father and mine and so drive away once more together. That time it will be in the sight of every body, with our hands in the air. I've got the little house in Portsmouth all ready, Patty. It's small, but it's in a nice part of the town. Portsmouth is a pretty place, but it'll be a great deal prettier when it has Mrs. Mark Wilson living in it. We can be married over again in Maine afterward if your heart is set upon it. I'm willing to marry you in every state of the Union so far as I am concerned."

"I think you've been so kind and good and thoughtful, Mark, dear," said Patty, more fondly and meltingly than she had ever spoken to him before. "And so clever, too. I do respect you for getting that good position in Portsmouth and being able to set up for yourself at your age. I shouldn't wonder a bit if you were a judge some day and then what a proud girl I shall be!"

Patty's praise was bestowed none too frequently, and it sounded very sweet in the young man's ears.

"I do believe I can get on with you to help me, Patty," he said, pressing her arm more closely to his side and looking down ardently into her radiant face. "You're a great deal cleverer than I am, but I have a faculty for the business of the law, so my father says, and a faculty for money making, too. And even if we have to begin in a small way my salary will be a certainty, and we'll work up together. I can see you in a yellow satin dress stiff enough to stand alone!"

"It must be white (satin, if you please, not yellow). After having used a hundred and ten yards of shop worn yellow calico on myself within two years I never want to wear that color again! If only I could come to you better provided," she sighed, with the suggestion of tears in her voice. "If I'd been a common servant I could have saved something from my wages to be married on. I haven't even got anything to be married in!"

"I'll get you anything you want in Portland tomorrow."

"Certainly not; I'd rather be married in rags than have you spend your money upon me beforehand!"

"Remember to have a box of your belongings packed and slipped under the shed somewhere. You can't be certain what your father will say or do when the time comes for telling him, and I want you to be ready to leave on a moment's notice."

"I will; I'll do everything you say, Mark. But are you sure that we have thought of every other way? I do so hate being underhanded. Everything depends on my keeping it secret from Waitstill, but she doesn't suspect anything yet. She thinks of me as nothing but a child still. Do you suppose Ellen would go with us just to give me a little comfort? I shouldn't miss Waitstill so much if I had Ellen, and how happy I shall be if she approves of me for a sister and thinks your mother and father will like me in time."

"There never was a creature born into the world that wouldn't love you, Patty."

"I don't know; look at Aunt Abby Cole," said Patty pensively. "Well, it does not seem as if a marriage that isn't good in Riverboro was really decent. How tiresome of Maine to want all those days of public notice; people must so often want to get married in a minute. If I think about anything too long I always get out of the notion."

"I know you do. That's what I'm afraid of." And Mark's voice showed decided nervousness. "You won't let out the notion of marrying me, will you, Patty dear?"

"Marrying you is more than a notion," Mark said soberly. "I'm only a little past seventeen, but I'm far older because of the difficulties I've had. I don't wonder you speak of my notions. I was as light as a feather in all my dealings with you at first."

"So was I with you. I hadn't grown up, Patty."

"Then I came to know you better and see how you sympathized with Waitstill's troubles and mine. I couldn't love anybody; I couldn't marry anybody who didn't feel that things at our house can't go on as they are. Father has had a good long trial. Three wives and two daughters have done their best to live with him and failed. I had not willing to die for him, as my mother did, nor have Waitstill killed if I can help it. Sometimes he is like a man who has lost his senses, and sometimes he is only grim and cruel. If he takes our marriage without a terrible scene, Mark, perhaps it will encourage Waitstill to break her chains as I have mine."

"There's sure to be an awful row," Mark said as one who had forecasted all the probabilities. "It wouldn't make any difference if you married the Prince of Wales; nothing would suit your father but setting the man and making all the arrangements, and then he would never choose any one who wouldn't tend the store and work on the farm for him without wages."

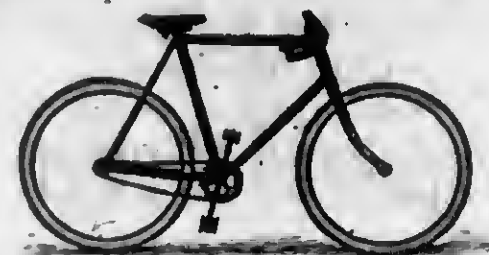

"Waitstill will never run away. She isn't like me. She will sit and sit there, shivering and suffering, till doomsday, for the one that loves her isn't free like you."

"You mean Ivory Boynton? I believe he worships the ground she walks on. I like him better than I used, and I understand him better. Oh, but I'm a lucky young dog to have a kind, liberal father and a bit of money put by to do with as I choose. If I hadn't I'd be eating my heart out like Ivory."

"No, you wouldn't eat your heart out. You'd always get what you wanted somehow, and you wouldn't wait for it either, and I'm just the same. I'm not built for giving up and enduring and suffering. I'm naturally just a bit of this-world, Mark, but, living beside Waitstill all these years, I've grown ashamed to be so light, blowing about like a feather and tither. Oh, if only she will forgive me, Mark, I won't mind what father says or does."

"She will forgive me, Patty, darling. Don't fret and cry and make your pretty eyes all red. I'll do nothing in all this to make either of you girls ashamed of me."

"Does the town clerk or does the justice of the peace give a wedding ring just like the minister?" Patty asked. "I shouldn't feel married without a ring."

"The ring is all ready and has 'M. W. to P. R.' engraved in it, with the place for the date waiting, and here is the engagement ring if you'll wear it when you're alone, Patty. My mother gave it to me when she thought there would be something between Annabel Franklin and me. The moment I looked at it, you see, it's a topaz stone, and noticed the yellow line in it, I said to myself, it is like no one but Patty Baxter, and if she won't wear it no other girl shall!" It's the color of the tip ends of your curls, and it's just like the light in your eyes when you're making fun."

"It's heavenly," cried Patty. "It looks as if it had been made of the yellow autumn leaves, and, oh, how I love the sparkle of it! But never will I take your mother's ring or wear it, Mark, till I've proved myself her loving, dutiful daughter. I'll do the one wrong thing of running away with you and encouraging our marriage, but not another if I can help it."

"Very well," sighed Mark, replacing the ring in his pocket with a rather crestfallen air. "But the first thing you know you'll be too good for me, Patty. You used to be a regular will-o'-the-wisp—all nonsense and fun, forever laughing and teasing, so that a fellow could never be sure of you for two minutes together."

"It's all there underneath," said Patty. (Continued on page 6.)

USE OF NEW PRIMARY BALLOT

Form Provided by James Primary Law Gets First Trial This Year.

Party Enrollment Done Away With and Names of All Candidates on One Ballot.

When the voters of Michigan cast their ballots at the primary election—August 25th—they will use for the first time the ballot form provided in the James primary law, which abolished party enrollments. At a few scattering elections to fill vacancies the ballot has been used in widely separated sections since the passage of the James bill last year, but for the most part the voters of the state are unfamiliar with the ballot.

The ballot will be arranged in columns, after the form of the general election ticket. The old form of a separate ballot for each party goes with the abolishment of enrollment and each voter may choose the party for whose candidates he will vote after entering the booth.

The voter should place an X at the head of the party ticket, but his failure to do so will not in itself invalidate the ballot. The names of the candidates for each office will be arranged under the name of the office and the voter must select one candidate, or two if two such offices are to be chosen. No candidate in another column than that the voter designates will count. If the voter fails to place an X at the head of a party column and then votes for candidates in more than one column his ballot is absolutely void. If he does place an X at the head of one column and votes in more than one the votes in the column designated will count and the others will be thrown out.

If the voter marks an X in front of two candidates for an office when only one officer is to be elected neither vote can be counted, but the ballot is only spoiled in so far as that one office is concerned.

STRUCK BY TRAIN

Trained Nurse from Findlay, Ohio, Meets with a Serious Accident Near Petoskey.

Miss Edith Helfrick of Findlay, Ohio, who is spending the summer at Petoskey, was struck by the Harbor Springs train near Kegonic last Thursday and seriously injured.

Miss Helfrick, who is a trained nurse about 24 years of age, had been bathing in Little Traverse Bay in company with several friends and on her return home walked on the railroad track. Apparently she did not hear the approaching train and became confused and stood alongside the track. In passing, the train struck her on the head and threw her some distance.

She was taken to Petoskey hospital, where it was found she had received three deep gashes in her head and her skull was crushed quite badly. She is now in a serious condition.

THEATRICAL

During the remainder of the resort season Mgr. Loskot of the Charlevoix Theatre will show an exclusive feature picture every Monday (matinee and night) in addition to the four special features now shown during the week.

This will be the first time that an exclusive feature film has ever been shown in this city by any theatre. Those who have never seen a picture of this class may rest assured that they will see something out of the ordinary.

"Judith of Bethulia" is the offering for Monday. This four reel motion picture production, telling of the tragic story of Judith and Holofernes is based on the book of Judith in the Apocrypha and on the poem and tragedy from the same source by Thomas Bailey Aldrich. It is a free rendition, in which the siege of Bethulia by Holofernes and the storming of the walls are given spectacular importance.

Among the striking scenes in this remarkable picture are those showing the battle outside the city, the assault on the massive walls, the scenes of famine within, the unsuccessful attempt of the Jews to regain the walls, the tragic death of Holofernes at the hands of Judith and the final destruction of the Assyrian camp.

Those who fail to see Lyman H. Howe's reproduction at the Majestic Theatre on August 1st, of how Uncle Sam "made the dirt fly" at Panama will miss one of the greatest spectacles of the ages—scenes at which at no other time or place have been or will again be enacted. It is now freely admitted by the highest authorities that Mr. Howe's reproduction is the only one

A. G. URQUHART OF BOYNE CITY.

TO THE PEOPLE OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY:

I have decided to become an active candidate for the nomination of Prosecuting Attorney

and am taking this means of letting my friends throughout the county know that I desire their support. I have had a hope that some day I could have the honor of being the Prosecuting Attorney for my home county. I believe this is a laudable ambition for any attorney.

I have practiced law in Charlevoix county ten years. I have waited for the older attorneys of the county to reasonably satisfy their ambitions and I do not think I am presumptuous in now asking the people of my home county to make me their candidate for Public Prosecutor to the exclusion of the other candidates, who have either held the office for a reasonable length of time or who have recently become lawyers and are anxious to be placed in an important office without first having their college training made practical by years of active practice.

My name will be found on the primary ballot among the Republican candidates. P. G. 292 A. G. Urquhart.

that is absolutely perfect photographically, and that, at the same time, does justice to every important phase of the construction work, and this will be the only opportunity of seeing it, as Mr. Howe will never present this series here again. The program will also include many other big new features. Remember the date, Majestic Theatre, Saturday, August 1.

What is certain to prove the most important theatrical event in the history of Charlevoix will be the engagement of the popular young artist Miss Stewart and her distinguished company at the Charlevoix theatre Friday night, July 31st, in an elaborate production of "The Sculptor's Dream," by W. S. Gilbert, author of the comic operas "Pinafore" and "Mikado." The coming of Miss Stewart has aroused pleasurable anticipations among all classes of theatregoers, who realize they have an opportunity of seeing the foremost Shakespearean actress of the younger class and the most promising on the American stage.

The position Miss Stewart holds today has been attained by the pronounced successes she has made for the past six years that no other of the younger class can boast of. She has been the only Shakespearean actress of the younger set who has been able to weather the storm a full season each year.

Charlevoix has been very fortunate to secure this attraction and already a crowded house has been predicted.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

ty, pulling her hand on his arm and turning her wistful face to his. "It will come again. The girl in me isn't dead. She isn't even asleep, but she's all sobered down. She can't laugh just now. She can only smile, and the tears are waiting underneath, ready to spring out if any one says the wrong word. This Patty is frightened and anxious, and her heart beats too fast from morning till night. She hasn't any mother, and she cannot say a word to her dear sister, and she's going away to be married to you, that's almost a stranger, and she isn't eighteen and doesn't know what's coming to her nor what it means to be married. She dreads her father's anger, and she cannot rest till she knows whether your family will love her and take her in, and oh, she's a miserable, worried girl, not a bit like the old Patty."

Mark held her close and smoothed the curls under the hood. "Don't you fret, Patty darling. I'm not the boy I was last week. Every word you say makes me more of a man. I wish the road to New Hampshire was full of lions and I could fight my way through them just to show you how strong I feel."

"There'll be lions enough," smiled Patty through her tears. "though they won't have names and tails. But I can imagine how father will roar and how my courage will ooze out of the heels of my boots."

"Just let me catch the dancin' round at my wife!" exclaimed Mark, with a swelling chest. "Now, run along home, Patty, dear, for I don't want you scolding on my account. I'll sound Ellen and see if she's brave enough to be one of the chipping party. Good night! Good night!"

CHAPTER XXII. A Wedding Ring.

THE snow had come. It had begun to fall softly and steadily at the beginning of the week, and now for days it had covered the ground deeper and deeper, drifting about the little red brick house on the hilltop, banking up against the barn and surrounding the sheds and the smaller buildings.

There had been two cold, still nights, the windows were covered with silvery landscapes whose delicate patterns made every pane of glass a fairy tower, while a dizzying crust belabored the hillsides, so that no eye could rest on them long without becoming snow blinded.

Town House hill was not as well traveled as many others, and Deacon Baxter had often to break his own road down to the store without waiting for the help of the village snow plow to make things easier for him.

Many a path had Waitstill broken in her time, and it was by no means one of her most distasteful tasks that of shoveling into the drifts of heaped-up whiteness, tossing them to one side or the other and cutting a narrow, clean edged track that would mark down into the hardness of untrampled snow.

There were many "chores" to be done these cold mornings before any household could draw a breath of comfort. The Baxters kept but one cow in winter, killed the pig—not to eat, but to sell—and reduced the flock of hens and turkeys, but Waitstill was always as busy in the barn as in her own proper domain.

Her heart yearned for all the dumb creatures about the place, intervening between them and her father's scanty care, and when the thermometer descended far below zero she would be found stuffing hay into the holes and cracks of the barn and henhouse, giving the horse and cow fresh beddings of straw and a mouthful of extra food between the slender meals provided by the deacon.

It was 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and a fire in the Baxters' kitchen since 6 in the morning had produced a fairly temperate climate in that one room, though the entries and chambers might have been used for refrigerators, as the deacon was as parsimonious in the use of fuel as in all other things, and if his daughters had not been hardy young creatures, trained from their very birth to discomforts and exposures of every sort, they would have died long ago.

The Baxter kitchen shone and glittered in all its accustomed cleanliness and order. Scrubbing and polishing were cheap amusements and nobody grunted them to Waitstill. No tables in Riverboro were whiter, no tins more lustrous, no powder brighter, no brick hearths redder than hers. The beans and brown bread and Indian pudding were bubbling in the warmth of the old brick oven, and what with the crackle and sparkle of the fire, the gleam of the pine willow ware on the cupboard shelves, and the scarlet geraniums blooming on the sunny shelf above the sink, there were few places in the village that could be found in the village than that same Baxter kitchen.

Yet Waitstill was ill at ease this afternoon, she hardly knew why. Her father had just put the horse into the harness and driven up to Milliken's mil-for some grain, and Patty was down at the store instructing Bill Morrill (Cephas Cole's successor) in his novel task of waiting on customers and learning the whereabouts of things; no easy task in the bewildering variety of stock in a country store, where flax, treacle, ketchup, epsom salts, Indian meal, shoestrings, shovels, brooms, saltpetre, tobacco, suspenders, rum and indigo may be demanded in rapid succession.

Patty was quiet and docile these days, though her color was more brilliant than usual, and her eyes had all their accustomed sparkle. She went about her work steadily, neither ranting nor railing at fate, nor bewailing her lot, but even in this Waitstill felt a sense of change and difference too subtle to be put in words. She had noted Patty's summer flirtations, but regarded them indulgently, very much as if they had been the irresponsible friskings of a lamb in a meadow.

Waitstill had more than the usual reserve in these matters, for in New England at that time, though the soul was a subject of daily conversation, the heart was felt to be rather an indelicate topic to be alluded to so seldom as possible. Waitstill certainly would never have examined Patty closely as to the state of her emotions, intimate as she was with her sister's thoughts and opinions about life. She simply bided her time until Patty should confide in her.

She had wished now and then that Patty's capricious fancy might settle on Philip Perry, although, indeed, when she considered it seriously, it seemed like an alliance between a butterfly and an owl. Cephas Cole she regarded as quite beneath Patty's right ambitions, and, as for Mark Wilson, she had grown up in the belief, held in the village generally, that he would marry money and position and drift out of Riverboro into a gayer, larger world. Her devotion to her sister was so ardent and her admiration so sincere that she could not think it possible that Patty would love anywhere in vain. Nevertheless she had an instinct that her affections were crystallizing somewhere or other, and when that happened the uncertain and eccentric temper of her father would raise a thousand obstacles.

While these thoughts coursed more or less vaguely through Waitstill's mind she suddenly determined to get her cloak and hood and run over to see Mrs. Boynton. Ivory had been away a good deal in the woods since early November chopping trees and helping to make new roads. He could not go long distances like the other men, as he felt constrained to come home every day or two to look after his mother and Rodman, but the work was too lucrative to be altogether refused.

With Waitstill's help he had at last overcome his mother's aversion to old Mrs. Mason, their nearest neighbor, and she, being now a widow with very slender resources, went to the "Hurry up and don't make me stan here all winter!"

Boynton's several times each week to put the broken household a little on its feet.

It was all in all and down to Ivory's farm. Waitstill reflected, and she could take her time and savor the way, going and coming, for she could cut across the frozen fields on the errand.

She caught up her shawl from a hook on the kitchen door, not, throwing it over her head and shoulders to shield herself from the chill blasts on the stairway, ran up to her bedroom to make herself ready for the walk.

She slipped on a quilted petticoat and a warmer dress, braided her hair freshly, while her breath went out in a white cloud to meet the freezing air; snatched her wraps from her closet, and was just going down the stairs, when she remembered that an hour before, having toiled to a out dinner for her father, she had saved her father's dinner from an old handkerchief, and that it was in it that she had hidden the key to the deacon's cupboard.

"Hurry up and don't make me stan here all winter!" he had shouted. "If you ever kept things in proper order you wouldn't have to hunt all over the house for a piece of rag when you need it!"

Patty was very dainty about her few patchwork and darned belongings, also very exact in the adjustment of her bits of ribbon, her collars of crocheted thread, her adorned corn peddles and her pile of neat cotton handkerchiefs hemstitched by her own hands. Waitstill, accordingly, with an avowed aversion at her own unwomanly capriciousness, darted into her sister's room to replace in perfect order the articles she had disarranged in her haste. She knew them all, these poor little trinkets—handkerchiefs, pathetic evidences of Patty's feminine vanity and desire to make her bright beauty a trifle brighter.

Suddenly her hand and her eye fell at the same moment on something hidden in a far corner under a white "fastinator," one of those head coverings of flimsy wool-dotted with beads, worn by the girls of the period. She drew the glittering, unfamiliar object forward and then lifted it wonderingly in her hand.

It was a string of burnished gold beads, the avowed desire of Patty's heart—a string of beads with a brilliant little stone in the fastening. And, as if that were not mysterious enough, there was something slipped over the clasped necklace and hanging from it, as Waitstill held it up to the light—a circlet of plain gold, a wedding ring!

Waitstill stood motionless in the cold, with such a throng of bewildering thoughts, unglivings, imaginings, rushing through her head that they were like a flock of birds beating their wings against her ears. The hangings were not those of absolute dread or terror, for she knew her Patty.

If she had seen the necklace alone she would have been anxious indeed, for it would have meant that the girl, urged on by ungovernable desire for the ornament, had accepted a present from one who should not have given it to her secretly. But the wedding ring meant something different for Patty—something more, something certain, something unescapable, for good or ill.

A wedding ring could stand for nothing but marriage. Could Patty be married? How, when and where could so great a thing happen without her knowledge? It seemed impossible. How had such a child surmounted the difficulties in the path? Had she been led away by the attractions of some stranger? No, there had been none in the village. There was only one man who had the worldly wisdom or the means to carry Patty off under the very eye of her watchful sister, only one with the reckless courage to defy her father, and that was Mark Wilson. His name did not bring pleasant condescendence to Waitstill's mind. He was gay and young and thoughtless. How had he managed to do this wild thing, and had he done all decently and wisely, with consideration for the girl's good name?

The thought of all the risks lying in the train of Patty's youth and inexperience brought a wall of anguish from Waitstill's lips, and dropping the beads and closing the drawer, she stumbled blindly down the stairway to the kitchen, intent upon one thought only—to find her sister, to look in her eyes, feel the touch of her hand and assure herself of her safety.

She gave a dazed look at the tall clock and was beginning to put on her cloak when the door opened and Patty entered the kitchen by way of the shed—the usual Patty—rosy, buoyant, alert, with a kind of childlike luminescence that could hardly be associated with the possession of wedding rings.

"Are you going out, Wally? Wrap up well, for it's freezing cold. Wally, Wally, dear! What's the matter?" she cried, coming closer to her sister in alarm.

Waitstill's face had lost its clear color, and her eyes had the look of some dumb animal that has been struck and wounded. She sank into the sag, long-tongued rocker by the window and, locking back her head, uttered no word, but closed her eyes and gave one long, shivering sigh and a dry sob that seemed drawn from the very bottom of her heart.

RENOVATING A HOUSE.

How to Make an Old Dwelling Clean and Sanitary.

Do you remember what Nathaniel Hawthorne says in "The House of the Seven Gables"—that each generation is entitled to new houses, that old houses are tainted with old ideas and unpleasant reminders of their past? That is just the way every housekeeper feels when moving day comes.

Moving is hard enough at best, but it is surely more difficult when the house to be moved into is old than when it is new. However, intelligently directed cleaning will do wonders to freshen up old and dingy rooms and to remove any stains or spots that have been carelessly left in rooms that have been refurbished.

If mortar or paint has been splattered on the window glass, it can be removed with boiling hot vinegar, applied with a heavy cloth, and after the paint or mortar is entirely removed the window should be washed in the regular manner.

If there is a choking odor of fresh paint in the house it will be largely absorbed by pails or tubs or jardinières of water containing each a handful of hay, which should be left in the rooms which have been painted for twenty-four hours.

Grease stains can be removed from the floors by making a mixture of a quart of a pound each of pearl ash and fuller's ash and a quart of boiling water. This should be spread on the floor and left there for twenty-four hours, and then the floor should be washed with hot water in which washing soda, a little of it, has been dissolved.

Pol. Adv. 29tf

If any of the drains from sinks and wash basins seem to be clogged they can be cleaned with washing soda. A lot of it should be crumbled into the pipe and then bubbling boiling water should be slowly poured over it. This solution will clean the pipe from grease, and if it seems still clogged a plumber's attention will probably reveal the presence of solid substances—hair or dust or bits of paper or cloth.

Any enameled surface, like a sink or wash basin or bathtub, can be effectively cleaned with gasoline rubbed on with a wooden cloth. Soap and water, in which there is a little ammonia, are usually effective in cleaning enameled surfaces, but if they are badly stained the gasoline will be found better.

Brass that is badly stained can best be cleaned with one of the regular brass pastes. It can then be polished with a flannel and a little whiting if it was in an especially bad condition. Nickel can be cleaned with whiting and vinegar if it is too badly stained to be cleaned with hot water, which really ought to keep nickel in good condition.

Zinc can best be cleaned with turpentine. Any amount of rubbing with the usual cleansing powders may be unavailing in the case of zinc, but turpentine is effective.

How They Kept Prices Down.

Edward III., king of England, announced in 1364 that for "the great dearth which exists in various parts of our realm, it is commanded that the price of young capon shall not exceed threepence, of an old one, four; of a cock, two; and in those places where the price of such fowls is less, let it be retained without increase."

ELECTRIC STARTERS.

Pertinent Observations on the Correct
Use of This Device.

Electric engine starters should not be used more often than is necessary, and, further than this, the operator should make quite sure before attempting to start the engine with electrical equipment that all the necessary adjustments have been made in regard to throttle, ignition, mixture, etc., to insure the easiest possible start, says the Automobile Dealer and Repairer.

Another matter to which attention may be directed is the absolute necessity for constant recharging of the battery when the electric engine starter is used. The charging switch connecting the dynamo and the battery should therefore be in the "on" position at every possible occasion. Especially is this the case in town use, when the dynamo is only for a very small proportion of its running time turning at sufficient speed to give a good charging current, owing to the slow speed at which the car engine is usually revolving.

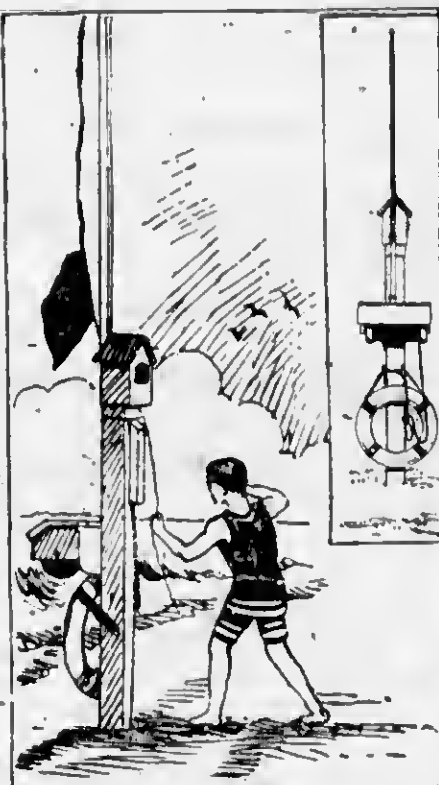

With an electric lighting equipment it is always desirable that the batteries should be kept fully charged so that they may give the best possible service and the least amount of trouble, but with an electric engine starting set the necessity is far more important, owing to the much greater demands upon the battery for engine starting.

The average electric motor forming the engine starter is not overpowerful for the work it has to perform, and the current required for starting results in a serious demand upon the batteries. If half a dozen friends successively ask for demonstrations of the engine starter's efficiency, by the time the fifth or sixth has been satisfied the battery has been very severely stressed and requires time for recuperation and probably recharging.

LIFE SAVING EQUIPMENT.

Apparatus Designed For Quick Action

On the beach at Ocean Park, about fifteen miles from Los Angeles, a new life saving station has been installed which is notable because of its adaptability to immediate use. Upon a support close to the water's edge a post is driven, equipped with a life preserver.

FIRST AID AND DANGER SIGNAL.

a gong and a signal flag and an electric signal connected with the main life saving station.

In case of danger any bystander pushes a button on the post, which rings a bell in the main station, and the life saving crew is on the spot in a few minutes. Meanwhile the life preserver is carried to the surf and flung to the one in peril. The gong is rung and the flag hoisted to direct the crew to the spot. Several lives have been saved in this way since the new stations have been installed.

Record For Engine Building.

Building a steam driven air compressor with cylinders 48 and 84 by 90 inches in thirty-eight days is a record, says Power. A second unit of the same size was built in fifty-nine days. One unit required sixteen freight cars for transportation. The engines weighed 1,800,000 pounds, or 800 tons, and contained 10,210 pieces, the lightest weighing one-fourth ounce, the heaviest 311,550 pounds. "This is believed to be the world's record in large engine construction. Each engine consists of a high pressure and low pressure cylinder under forty-eight and eighty-four inches in diameter and two air cylinders eighty-four inches in diameter; stroke, sixty inches.

New York's Highest Point.

"Results of Spirit Leveling in New York, 1896 to 1911, inclusive," which has been issued by the geological survey, gives the elevation of more than 1,800 datum points established in co-operation with the state, and in addition more than 2,500 secondary elevations of well known summits and prominent lakes. The highest point in the state is Mount Marcy, in Essex county, 5,344 feet above mean sea level.

Stars in the Heavens.

Eight thousand stars are visible to the naked eye as observed from any part of our globe on a clear night. Except the five visible planets of our own solar system, all these are suns. Observed through a large telescope their number increases to 100,000. Celestial photography has now raised the number to 1,000,000. From some of these the magnificent fixed stars it takes the light two years to reach us.

HOW TO SAVE LEFTOVERS.

Don't throw out fat after frying or boiling pork or bacon, but keep until there is a quart or more; then simmer over slow fire till fat ceases to bubble. Turn off clear fat from the sediment. The fat makes excellent shortening.

Don't forget that a dirty oven is liable to spoil the flavor of anything cooked in it.

Don't put pastry into slow oven; the fat will melt out and the pastry will be hard.

Don't throw away sour milk; it will make sweet, light bread, griddlecakes, tea cakes and pastry.

Don't waste cold vegetables; fritters, purées and salads can be excellently made from them.

HANGS HIMSELF

Walloon Lake Man Takes His Life—Body Found Hanging from a Tree.

Andrew Schlient, ninety years of age, residing at Walloon Lake, committed suicide last Wednesday by hanging himself to a tree. He had been slightly demented for the past few years and had often threatened to end his life in the manner he finally did.

At noon Wednesday he appeared at the dinner table the same as usual and no thought was given his threats. At supper he failed to put in an appearance and a search was made. He was found a short time later hanging by his neck to a tree about twenty rods from the house. The rope was fastened about twelve feet from the ground, a ladder was leaning against the tree and a few feet from him stood a kitchen chair. When found he was quite dead. No inquest was held, for it was apparent that he came to his death from his own act.

Mears for Senator.

In announcing my candidacy for the nomination for the office of State Senator in the 29th senatorial district, I want to impress upon the minds of the voters that I am not a corporation lawyer, nor a banker, but just a plain, ordinary citizen.

I served as a member of Charlevoix County, Pomona Grange for four years; served from 1882 till 1885 in the 23rd Michigan Infantry; have lived in Northern Michigan 10 years, and served one term as state senator during the years 1892-93.

While acting as your representative I served you faithfully and my record is open at all times to the closest scrutiny. I believe I am entitled to a second term and appeal to the patriotism and loyalty of the people of this district to be chosen to serve a second term.

OZONE FOR VENTILATION.

Its Use as an Atmosphere Aid Commended by Scientists.

A lecturer on the use of ozone for ventilation, speaking at the ninth congress for heating and ventilating, held at Cologne, said that the favorable effect of ozone in cafes, restaurants, theaters and halls has been highly lauded. The ventilation of the subway is also a success. Lubbert has had splendid results with one of the most difficult subjects—the ventilation of emigrant ships. With closed windows the ozonator was able to maintain a tolerable air condition, which without the apparatus was unbearable. Regarding these tests of Lubbert, Kourich states that there were no complaints as to irritation from ozone.

Of greatest interest on account of its application to restaurants is the influence of ozone on tobacco. Cramer says, "If we blow ozone into a glass tube filled with tobacco smoke the smoke conglomerates and soon disappears." Hill and Flack were able to dispose of tobacco smoke through ozone. Erdandson and Schwarz saw no influence of ozone on very heavy tobacco smoke, though in weaker concentrations the smoke was "covered over" by the ozone. In tests with strong ozone concentrations cigarette smoke was entirely destroyed in a room and could not be perceived after re-entering the room, as there was no after-smell. Tobacco smoke on clothing is disposed of by the ozone.

As the oxygen in the air is needed for life processes and as it can be used only in the pure, uncontaminated state from the outside, rooms must be supplied with fresh air. The only safe method of obtaining this is an efficient ventilation installation, but since it is not always easy to obtain perfect ventilation ozone has been used in many cases as a very helpful ally, and within a comparatively short time there have been installed a large number of ozone ventilation plants.

There is a difference between ventilation with ozonized fresh air and ozonization of the room air. The former is preferable—Metallurgical and Chemical Engineering.

TUNNELS AND BRIDGES.

Comparison of Two Methods of Crossing the Hudson River.

The joint commission of the states of New York and New Jersey, which was primarily created to devise plans for bridging the Hudson, has been brought seriously to consider the alternative of tunnels under the river, as highways for general traffic and travel by ordinary vehicles. This looks as if bridges over the Hudson, although talked of for many years, may never materialize, says Amer. Engr. Mech. Engr. The satisfactory experience already had with passenger tunnels should go a long way toward creating confidence in vehicular tunnels. But perhaps the most conclusive argument will be the fact that while the estimated cost of a bridge at Fifty-ninth street is $42,000,000, two tunnels, one for movement in each direction, could be constructed under the river from about Canal street, where they would be of no use, for not over $11,000,000.

Denatured Alcohol.

Germany now uses between 40,000,000 and 50,000,000 gallons of denatured alcohol a year, of which over 20,000,000 gallons are sold to the general public for burning purposes, according to a monograph recently issued by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, United States department of commerce. The importance of this fuel in Germany may be appreciated when it is considered that France uses about 18,000,000 gallons, the United States about 10,000,000 gallons and the United Kingdom only 4,000,000 gallons annually. Denatured alcohol is not only gaining in favor for general burning purposes, but a determined effort is being made to find a way of using it as a motor fuel in place of the high priced gasoline.

As a general thing, the kind of man who wants but little here below has a credit to match—Dallas News.

Ten Day Camp Meeting.

The annual camp meeting of the Church of God will be held on the camp grounds, two and one-half miles south of Charlevoix, beginning August 7 and continuing ten days. A bible ministers will be present and a cordial invitation is extended to all lovers and seekers of Gospel truth.

SAXON $395

The Price of $395 includes Top, Windshield, Lamps and Tools.

No Other Car in the World Like This

The handsome Saxon is the first motor car—and the only one selling at or near its price—to embody the essential features of standard motor car design. It is not a cycle car—but a real automobile.

The Saxon Meets the demand for a low priced car that is both good and good looking. It is a big car for the price, with roomy, streamline body; 96 inch wheel base; standard tread; shaft drive; 4 cylinder, 15 horsepower Continental motor of Special Saxon design; left drive with center control—and other standard features.

There is nothing skimpy or cramped about it—spacious body, ample leg room, generous doors. The well shaped body, molded oval fenders, tapered bonnet and graceful, sweeping curves, make this car a delight to the eye.

Now is the time to place your order—to insure prompt delivery

HOW TO VOTE PRIMARY BALLOT

Many Important Changes Have Been Made in the Law.

Primary Day is Registration Day as Well—Voters Should Carefully Read Instructions.

Tuesday, August 25th, is primary day. It differs so much from other primary days that every voter should be fully acquainted with its provisions.

Under the new law there is no party enrollment and, of course, no enrollment day.

There is no separate registration day just before the primary day, but every voter on primary day must be registered. If any voter has been previously registered so that he is entitled to vote at election he does not need to register again, but if he is not so registered he can appear on primary day and register. In other words, primary day is also registration day.

The ballots used are not separate for each party and of different color, as under the old law, but all party candidates are on white paper and on the same ballot, arranged in columns under the heading of the party, exactly as in a regular election ballot.

Under each party name is a circle for each voter to designate the name of the party of which he considers himself a member. Under this are the names of the various offices and under each office named on each ticket are the names of all the candidates for that office.

For illustration:
The Republican ticket—which under the law will stand first on the ballot—is arranged similar to this:

REPUBLICAN

NATIONAL

No candidates this year in any party.

STATE

Governor

Vote for one

- | | |
|-----|------------|
| [] | Ellis |
| [] | Gardner |
| [] | Groesbeck |
| [] | Linton |
| [] | Martindale |
| [] | Osborn |

The order of these will change six times in each township, so that each name will appear once at the head of the ticket, etc.

After the Republican ticket in a parallel column at the right is the Democratic ticket; then the National Progressive, etc.

After the voter has designated the ticket he intends to vote by putting a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket he should then mark a cross in the square before each name he intends to vote for. He must not vote for more than one candidate for governor nor any other officer except coroner or circuit court commissioner. To these last he may vote for two, since there are two elected.

Should he put a cross opposite two names for governor neither would be counted.

He must not vote for any officer on any ticket other than that he has designated at the head of the ticket. Should he do so neither will be counted for this office.

If a voter does not designate his party by putting a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket, but marks candidates under only one party heading, then all such votes shall be counted. But if he shall designate candidates under more than one party, then the entire ballot is void. (See Primary Election Law, Section 16.)

These ballots are canvassed and the results declared in a manner similar to regular elections.

700 Candidates Seeking Office.

Michigan voters will have a field of more than 700 candidates to make selections from at the August primaries. All told more than 3,000 petitions containing 75,000 names have been filed at the capital. Candidates for the legislature will number near 500, and those for governor, lieutenant governor, congressmen and state senators will number approximately 200. In all, it is the largest number of candidates which have ever sought offices in a state election.

Moonlight Excursion.

Everybody is going on the excursion given by the Epworth League to Fort Jordan Friday night. The Beaver leaves the Wilbur dock at 7 p. m.

STORES WILL CLOSE

Charlevoix Merchants to Close Places of Business at 8 P. M. Chautauqua Week.

During Chautauqua week, August 12 to 19, in order to give their clerks an opportunity to attend the Chautauqua entertainments, the following merchants will close their places of business at 8:00 p. m. with the exception of Saturday evening:

S. M. See & Sons, J. L. Crane, Martin Block, F. E. Frazier, H. Bedford, Mrs. B. W. Miller, A. E. Mason, C. M. Hull, C. Danto & Son, W. C. Bellinger, C. L. Gonser, H. E. McHugh, P. S. Bettes, H. R. Fowler, W. F. Graham, M. A. Levinson & Co., A. Bergeon.

The merchants are to be commended for the action thus taken.

Editor Perry Hits Back.

The Charlevoix Sentinel is devoting a lot of its valuable political space and editorial billingsgate to the Progress and its editor. We do not permit any old ringster to tell us whom we shall support. The Sentinel will have all and more than it can perform in defending the character and record of its candidate, Frank Scott. We "have the goods" to substantiate all the statements we may have ever made about Scott. Anyway we are not a candidate for anything and never expect to be, so Willard's air-gun shooting falls far short of the mark and his vituperation rolls off us "like water off a duck's back." Scott needs all your attention, Willard, and more than you can give.—Elk Rapids Progress.

CHAUTAUQUA NEXT WEEK

Dunbar Bell Ringers and Male Quartet the Opening Number.

Business Men Back of the Proposition and Should Have the Support of All Citizens.

R. H. Finger, the Redpath Chautauqua agent, is in the city to help the local committee in their Chautauqua campaign. Mr. Finger states that the program is one of the best that has ever been on a Chautauqua platform anywhere in the United States and it has met with tremendous success all over the country. The business men of Charlevoix are back of this proposition and need the support of every energetic citizen of this place. A thousand season tickets have been purchased by the committee and will be sold at $2 until they are exhausted. Then the price will be raised to $2.50.

The people of this community are indeed fortunate to have for the opening number on their Chautauqua program the Dunbar Bell Ringers and Male Quartet. This organization is not only one of the most unique but also the oldest one of its kind in America. They carry with them a set of over 200 bells. The heaviest bell weighs 264 pounds and is the largest bell ever cast. It is an octave lower than any church bell in the United States.

The program the Dunbars give is a most varied one. It consists of three parts—vocal, instrumental and bell ringing. As a male quartet Messrs. Malcolm Wood, first tenor; Arthur Nesbitt, second tenor; Mark Swigley, bass, and Earl McConnell, baritone, make an ideal vocal organization. As instrumentalists Arthur Nesbitt, pianist; Earl McConnell, violinist; and Malcolm Wood, cellist, possess remarkable talent. As bell ringers the entire four are superb. All are talented artists. Their repertoire is in no way limited. In the afternoon they give only the prelude. In the evening they present a full concert using the 200 bells. As versatile entertainers the Dunbars have no peers in all America. They have appeared in every state in the union, in Canada and in Mexico. Just recently they appeared before 30,000 people at Winona Lake Assembly, Winona, Indiana, and were accorded one of the greatest receptions of their entire career. Their rendition of "Silver Threads Among the Gold" on the bells is one of the most inspiring pieces ever played. They have never given a concert anywhere in America without being greeted with rapt attention and round of applause.

A monster automobile parade is planned for Saturday afternoon of this week. Every owner of a car is urged to form in line on Park avenue, from which place the parade will start at 4:30. Decorations and pennants will be furnished by the local committee for decorating the cars in line. Every effort is being made to make the Chautauqua a success and stimulate the ticket-selling campaign.

FATHER CHARLEVOIX

1682--1761

Interesting Sketch of His Life from Pen of Mr. Brayton Saltus Hall

The Michillimackinaws gain their livelihood by fishing and there is perhaps no place in the world where fish are more abundant. They catch three kinds—among which are monstrous big ones—and in such quantities that a savage with his spear sometimes gets fifty in three hours time, but the most famous of all is the whitefish. It is about the size and shape of a mackerel. Fresh or salted, nothing is better among fishes. The savages say that it was Michabou who taught their ancestors to fish; that he invented nets and that it was the spider's web which gave him the idea. These people do not give their god more honor than is his due, since they do not hesitate to send him to school to a vile insect! As far as one can judge; the land is not good, but we need not go far to find good soil, and this is true of the Beaver Islands, which are at the left soon after entering Lake Michigan. The Ottawas, who retired to these islands, plant corn there. They learned it from the Huron Indians.

At Mackinaw Charlevoix could not get any information as to a route to the Pacific and, hearing that some Sioux Indians were camped at Green Bay, he went there to make inquiries of them. Their responses were vague and conflicting. He returned to Mackinaw convinced that he would have to go to the extremity of Lake Superior to get the desired information. He hesitates, and no wonder. A journey of such length in a frail canoe, full of dangers and uncertainties, would make anyone hesitate. Could he have taken the rail at Saint Ignace and alighted in Duluth the same day it would have been a different matter. He was groping in the dark, while we view his problem in the light of day. He decided to follow his instructions and proceeded to the Gulf.

Fr. Charlevoix continued, July 31st, 1721: "I left Michillimackinaw the day before yesterday at noon and here I am a prisoner since yesterday on a little island without a name. A canoe coming from Saint Joseph River, where I am going, could not leave any more than we. Although the wind was favorable, the weather was too threatening and the lake too rough. Although the wind was contrary the twenty-ninth I made eight leagues. I made first five leagues to the west to reach Lake Michigan and then turned south, which is the course for one hundred leagues to St. Joseph. Nothing could be more beautiful than the country which separates Lake Michigan and Huron. Yesterday I made three leagues more, when a severe flood compelled me to stop at this island. I will amuse myself here in trying to acquaint you with the native inhabitants of this vast country, through a large part of which I have already gone.

"The savages of Canada are generally well-built and of good size except in some nations. They are strong and of a clear complexion. They would live a long time if they took better care of themselves, but they ruin their constitutions by forced marches, long fasts, by excessive eating. Besides, in childhood they often go barefooted in the water, snow and on the ice. Brandy, which the Europeans have brought them, for which they have a passion passing description and which they drink only to intoxicate—has completed their destruction and has contributed in no small degree to the decay of these people, who to-day are only a fraction of what they were a hundred and fifty years ago—If this continues they will disappear entirely.

"River St. Joseph, August 16th, 1721: "I arrived at this post, where we have a mission, a week ago. The house of the commander is called the fort because it is surrounded by a palisade. There are a few cannons to keep the savages respectful; but I continue my journal where I left off. The first day of August, after having crossed under sail a bay thirty leagues deep, I left on the right the Beaver Islands, which seem to me to be very well wooded, and a few leagues further I perceived upon an eminence of sand a bush which in passing has the appearance of a recumbent animal. The French call it 'l'ours qui dort,' that is 'the sleeping bear.' I made twenty leagues that day and camped on a little island at 11 degrees and 30 minutes north latitude, about the same as Montreal. From the entrance to Lake Michigan up to this island the shores are very sandy; but a little way inland the country looks very good, judging at least from the magnificent forest with which it is covered; besides it is well watered, for we went hardly a league without either a large creek or a pretty river and the further south the larger the rivers and the longer the peninsula which separates Lake Michigan from Lake Huron, enlarging as it extends southward. Most of these rivers are small and shallow at their mouths. A peculiar feature is that most all of them have lakes of two, three or four leagues in circumference not far from their mouths. They are caused, no doubt, by the quantity of sand which they carry down, and these sands, pushed back by the west winds which prevail, accumulate at the mouths of the rivers, damming the waters so as to form the lakes, which prevent the country being flooded when the snow melts.

"The third I entered the River Pere Marquette to verify my information with regard to it. It is at first only a brook, but fifteen yards higher up one enters a lake which has nearly two leagues of shore. To enable it to discharge into Lake Michigan one would say that the high bluff had been cut with a pick. It had been so represented to me.

"I navigated thus pleasantly to the River Saint Joseph, which I entered on the sixth very late or the seventh very early, for it was near midnight when we arrived there, having reposed for two hours at the lake of Black River eight leagues away, where there is plenty of ginseng.

"The River Saint Joseph is more than three hundred miles long and its source not far from Lake Erie. It is navigable for two hundred and forty miles and in the seventy-five miles that I penetrated I saw only good lands with trees of prodigious height, under which grow in certain places very beautiful ferns. I was two days in making this trip, but on the evening of the first I ran great risk of going no further! I was mistaken for a bear and I came very near being killed as such by one of my guides! This is how it happened: After supper and prayers, it being very hot, I went for a walk along the bank of the river. A spaniel which followed me everywhere took a notion to jump into the water to fetch something which I thoughtlessly had thrown into it. My men, who thought I had retired, especially since it was quite late and the night a dark one, hearing the noise which the dog made, thought it a deer crossing the river and two of them rushed out with their guns loaded. Luckily for me, one of them, a thoughtful fellow, was called back by the others lest he should make them miss the game, but it might have happened that through carelessness he might not have missed me! The other advanced slowly, saw me about twenty paces from him and had not the least doubt that I was a bear standing upon its hind legs, as these animals always do when they hear a noise. At the sight the hunter poised his gun, into which he had put three balls, and, bending close to the ground, came towards me as quickly as he could. He was about to shoot, when I, on my side, thought I saw something, but—without being able to distinguish what it was, not doubting, however, that it was one of my men—it came into my head to ask him if he was taking me for a bear! He made no reply and when I had joined him I found him dumbfounded, as if seized with horror at the thought of the tragedy which he had so narrowly escaped being the cause of. My comrades told me what had happened.

We will not follow the journal farther as it describes the journey down the Mississippi and back to France. How little did the modest Charlevoix dream as he sailed past these shores that his name would one day be written upon a beautiful city, "Charlevoix the Beautiful," over the entrance to a free library and upon a noble county in Michigan and a vast county in Canada as large as three departments in France, bristling with mountains as beautiful as those of Switzerland, abounding in picturesque lakes and divided by rivers beside which the largest in France would seem like brooks, or that upon the facade of the House of Parliament in Quebec his name would be inscribed in letters of gold beside the most famous names in history—honors which are certainly well deserved.

Father Charlevoix died in February, 1761, and was spared the humiliation of seeing the Jesuits banished from France later on in the same year and the extinction of French dominion in 1763.

What estimate shall be put upon the character of the man whose name has been given to our city and county? The sidelights which are reflected from his life are neither dim nor flickering, but reveal to us plainly a character of marked strength of will and purpose softened by subjection to the will of his Divine Master, whom he served with perfect devotion. A member of the Society of Jesus, he illustrated in his life the example of the Holy Nazarene. That highest virtue was his which controls self for the good of others. He was not a self-seeker in any sense. Riches, ambition, fame, self love—all were renounced for the duty of service, and no nobler motive can actuate anyone. He was the servant of the King of France, entrusted with important missions, but above all he was the servant of the King of Kings, entrusted with the most important of all missions, the advancement of the Kingdom of Heaven upon Earth. No more honorable title could be given him than the one he bore, that of "Father Charlevoix." His name should be an inspiration to all to emulate his example of devotion to high ideals.

BIG BREAD ORDER

McCann Bros. Bakery Turn Out Hundreds of Loaves for Circuses Coming Here.

Hundreds of loaves of bread have been turned out this week by McCann Bros. Bakery in excess of the usual baking, they having secured the contract for furnishing Barnes' big circus with the bread which will be used in their great dining tents as well as that which will be fed to many of the animals.

They also filled a contract for a large number of loaves of bread for Sun Brothers' Circus which was here last week. The same care and absolute cleanliness was exercised in turning out both these big orders and is insisted upon baking for the regular customers.

WAR WAGES IN ALL EUROPE

Other Nations Will Be Drawn Into Scrap Within Short Time.

Fighting Along the Frontier of France, Germany, Russia and Austria.

Latest news from Europe states that France and Germany are officially at war and several sharp engagements have been fought. England will undoubtedly be drawn into the fight within the next few days. Austria and Russia are fighting on the frontier, and Switzerland, Belgium, Italy and other nations may be drawn into the scrap. Below is the present situation at a glance:

Germany—Kaiser formally declares war against France. Issues statement placing blame of war on Paris. German troops enter Holland and Belgium. The king of Belgium warned he will face war if he does not permit the peaceable passage of German army. German forces skirmishing with French on the border and airships shell Lunenburg. A warship shells French post in Algiers.

France—Great army is interposed in path of Germans and a battle is near. French fleet said to have engaged the Germans in North Sea. Paris in uproar at news of German aerial attack on Lunenburg and declaration of war.

England—Anti-war members of the cabinet resign. English merchant ships ordered to safety. Nation waits, but is certain to declare war.

Belgium—Her territory invaded by Germany. Belgium is preparing to declare war against the Kaiser.

Holland—Germany has invaded the province of Limburg. In order to protect a portion of her territory Holland may open some of her dykes.

Italy—The King has ordered complete mobilization of the army, but still insists that he will maintain strict neutrality.

Austria—Emperor Franz Josef's troops appear unable or unwilling to make great advances against Serbia.

United States—A Russian goes to aid Americans stranded abroad and prepares declaration of neutrality.

Russia—Makes slow headway in mobilization and movement of army against Germany. Baltic fleet remains hidden.

BAD RUNAWAY

Mrs. McClellan and Children of North Bay Badly Shaken Up and Bruised.

North Bay was the scene of a runaway accident Friday, in which Mrs. John McClellan was badly injured and three little children badly shaken up and bruised. The two small children of Mr. and Mrs. Clair White had climbed into the wagon, so which a team of horses were hitched, and before their father could reach them the animals ran away. One child was thrown out, but the other clung to the wagon. The horses ran east on the road across Horton's creek and collided with a buggy in which Mrs. McClellan and baby were riding. This rig was upset and Mrs. McClellan quite badly hurt. The baby was uninjured.

Services rendered by Payton and Van Pelt, agents, will be paid by the satisfaction they have already received by having been informed that Charlevoix county has the best posts of any county between Chicago and Mackinaw.

It has come to us that many are disappointed because they were not asked to contribute to the putting up of posts with signs on the West Michigan Pike, and to all such we will say a word of comfort: In finishing the new, level road to Burgess and for filling in holes and ruts and leveling the high knobs (not "high balls") between Burgess and Petoskey, you may all have an opportunity to show your generous interest in a substantial manner to your own city, and it is to be hoped that the names of all men so interested will appear on the right side of the ledger.

In connection with the above the following business houses of Charlevoix took advertising space in the West Michigan Pike Route Book: Charlevoix County Bank, Hotel Elston, Hooker's Garage, Martin Block, Charlevoix State Savings Bank, Frank E. Wood, Gonser's New Variety Store and George H. VanPelt. These firms paid $5.00 for the advertisements, which covered Charlevoix county's share of the expense in getting out the route book.

Note—In the Sentinel of this week advertising for the route book to the amount of $64 is added to the amount collected and expended for pike posts. This is misleading and should not be included in the expense of placing posts and signs. It was for Charlevoix county's part of the expense for the route book only.

No Superior in the State.

There came a man to Michigan; straightway to fish he began. It was not the trout he cared to catch, but the man whose pants needed a patch. It was not the perch with the shining eye, but the person who had clothes to clean or dye. His work, well it is simply great; he has no superior in the state. If you have clothes to be cleaned or pressed, say LILLY and you have the whole thing guessed.—O. G. Lilly, Prop., 103 Mason street, Charlevoix. Phone 104. 311adv

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTERCopyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas WigginBY
KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father. Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Hart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Having time arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Hart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waitstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is fickle.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was in full sympathy.

The village gossips are busy with the names of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and sends Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waitstill volunteers her help in the Boynton housekeeping.

Despairing of winning Patty, Cephas turns his affections elsewhere. Patty and Mark are now sweethearts.

Patty and Mark know Deacon Baxter will not consent to their marriage, so they plan an elopement to New Hampshire.

Deacon Baxter is more than usually "difficult." Patty runs off with Mark, is married and returns and tells Waitstill.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Confessional.

"WAITSTILL, I know what it is— you have found out about me!" Who has been wicked enough to tell you before I could do so? Tell me— who?"

"Oh, Patty, Patty!" cried Waitstill, who could no longer hold back her tears. "How could you deceive me so? How could you shut me out of your heart and keep a secret like this from me, who have tried to be another and sister in one to you ever since the day you were born?"

"God has sent me much to bear, but nothing so bitter as this—to have my sister take the greatest step of her life without my knowledge or consent!"

"Stop, dear, stop, and let me tell you!"

"All is told, and not by you, as it should have been. We've never had anything separate from each other in all our lives, and when I looked in your bureau drawer for a bit of soft cotton— it was nothing more than I have done a hundred times—you can guess now what I stumbled upon—a wedding flag for a hand I have held ever since it was a baby's. My sister has a husband, and I am not even sure of his name!"

"Wally, Wally, don't take it so to heart!" and Patty flung herself on her knees beside Waitstill's chair, "not till you hear everything. When I tell you all, you will dry your eyes and smile and be happy about me, and you will know that in the whole world there is no one else in my love or my life, but you and my—my husband!"

"Who is the husband?" asked Waitstill, still dryly as she wiped her eyes and leaned her elbow on the table.

"Who, said it be but Mark? Has there ever been any one but Mark?"

"I should have said that there were several in these past few months."

Waitstill's tone showed clearly that she was still grieved and hurt beyond her power to conceal.

"I have never thought of marriage any one but Mark, and not even of marrying him till a little while ago," said Patty. "Now do not draw away from me and look out of the window as if we were not sisters or you will break my heart."

break the news to father at once, as he intended."

"Does a New Hampshire marriage hold good in Maine?" asked Waitstill, still intent on the bare facts at the bottom of the romance.

"Well, of course," stammered Patty, somewhat confused. "Maine has her own way of doing things and wouldn't be likely to fancy New Hampshire's. But nothing can make it wicked or anything but according to law."

Besides, Mark considered all the difficulties. He is wonderfully clever, and he has a clerkship in a Portsmouth law office waiting for him, and that's where we are going to live, in New Hampshire, where we were married, and my darling sister will come soon and stay months and months with us."

"When is Mark coming back to arrange all this?"

"Late tonight or early tomorrow morning."

"Where did you go after you were married?"

"Where did I go?" echoed Patty in a childish burst of tears. "Where could I go? It took all day to be married—all day long, working and driving hard from sunrise to 7 o'clock in the evening. Then when we reached the bridge Mark dropped me, and I walked up home in the dark and went to bed without any supper for fear that you and father would come back and catch me at it and ask why I was so late."

"My poor, foolish dear!" sighed Waitstill.

Patty's tears flowed faster at the first sound of sympathy in Waitstill's voice, for self pity is very enfeebling. She fairly sobbed as she continued:

"So my only wedding journey was the freezing drive back from Allentown, with Eliza crying all the way and wishing that she hadn't gone with us. Mark and I both say we'll never be married again so long as we live."

"Where have you seen your husband from that day to this?"

"I haven't laid eyes on him," said Patty, with a fresh burst of woe. "I have a certificate thing and a wedding ring and a beautiful frock and hat that Mark bought in Boston, but no real husband. I'm no more married than ever I was. Don't you remember I said that Mark was sent away on Tuesday morning? And this is Thursday! I've had three letters from him, but I don't know till we see how father takes it when we can tell the Wilsons and start for Portsmouth."

"We shan't really call ourselves married till we get to Portsmouth. We promised each other that from the first. It isn't much like being a bride never to see your bridegroom; to have a father who will fly into a passion when he hears that you are married; not to know whether your new family will like or despise you and to have your only sister married with you for the first time in her life."

Waitstill's heart melted, and she lifted Patty's tear stained face to hers and kissed it. "Well, dear, I would not have had you do this for the world, but it is done, and Mark seems to have been as wise as a man can be when he does an unwise thing. You are married, and you love each other. That's the comforting thing to me."

"We do," sobbed Patty. "No two people ever loved each other better than we, but it's been all spoiled for fear of father."

"I must say I dread to have him hear the news," and Waitstill knitted her brows anxiously. "I hope it may be soon, and I think I ought to be here when he is told. Mark will never understand or bear with him, and there may be trouble that I could avert."

"I'll be here, too, and I'm not afraid," and Patty raised her head defiantly. "Father can't quarrel any; that's why we acted in this miserable, secret, underhand way. Somehow, though I haven't seen Mark since we went to Allentown, I am heavier than I was last week, for now I've got some body to take my part."

"I've a good mind to go upstairs and put on my gold beads and my wedding ring just to get used to them and to feel a little more married. No, I can't after all, for there is father driving up the hill now, and he may come into the house. What brings him home at this hour?"

"I was expecting him every moment," and Waitstill rose and stirred the fire. "He took the pump and went to the mills for grain."

"He hasn't anything in the back of the pump—nothing. Wally, he is standing up now and whipping the horse with all his might. I never saw him drive like that before. What can be the matter? He can't have seen my wedding ring, and only three people in all the world know about my being married."

Waitstill turned from the window, her heart beating a little faster. "What three people know three hundred are likely to know sooner or later. It may be a false alarm, but father is in a fury about something. He must not be told the news until he is in a better humor."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Patty is Shown the Door.

DEACON BAXTER arose into the barndoor, flinging a blanket over the wheeling horse, closed the door behind him and hurried into the house without even thinking to lay down his whip.

Opening the kitchen door and stopping outside long enough to kick the snow from his heavy boots, he strode into the kitchen and confronted the two girls. He looked at them sharply before he spoke, seeing their flushed faces and tear stained eyes; then he broke out savagely:

"Oh, you're both here; that's lucky. Now stand up and answer to me. What's this I hear 'at the Mills about Patience—common talk outside the store?"

The time had come, then, and by some strange fatality when Mark was too far away to be of service.

"Tell me what you heard, father, and the matter? He can't have seen my

Jos. E. Bayliss

Candidate for Representative in Congress, Eleventh Congressional District, and the only man left in the race who it will be safe to send to Washington to represent this district.

We believe no man in the eleventh congressional district will better represent these sixteen important counties than Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo. He was sheriff of Chippewa county for two terms and was one of the most efficient officers ever elected to office. He also served as representative to the state legislature from the Chippewa district and gained the reputation of being a man loyal to his constituents and one who was not afraid to make a fight for what he believed was right and the best for the people. Forceful, open-minded, emphatic in his decisions, he never trimmed his sails to catch the fleeing breath of popular applause.
Any statesman with the qualities, which not only the voters of the eleventh congressional district but the State of Michigan know Mr. Bayliss possesses, is needed in the service of the state at Washington. It falls to the lot of the eleventh district to take advantage of an opportunity to send this kind of a man to congress. For the sake of the state at large—which is judged at Washington by the caliber of the men who represent it—it is to be hoped that the people of the eleventh district nominate and elect Joseph E. Bayliss.
The Courier believes he will be the choice, because he is a man who can be relied upon, and for this reason, among many others, we are glad of the opportunity of endorsing his candidacy.

We wonder when the next move on the part of Lawyer Scott to gain the influence of gullible young men to support his candidacy will take place.
Perhaps he is too busy lining up the support of the liquor interests in the upper peninsula to favor the Charlevoix with another visit.

No LONGER do the girls sing "Mother, mother, mother, pin a rose on me."
There is hardly any place to pin one.

SOME are born rich, others acquire riches, and some get into politics and thrust riches upon themselves.

By covering up their tracks some men get credit for walking in the straight and narrow path.

It has always been a source of wonder to us just how "dry" Lawyer Scott is, anyway.

THE Courier is the newspaper you should have come to your home.

FAMILY GATHERING

Five Generations Represented at the Home of Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard Sunday.

Five generations were represented
Sunday, August 2, at a family gathering at the home of Mr. and Mrs.
Chester Blanchard in Hayes township.

Those present were Mrs. Wm. Vosburgh, great great grandmother, Mrs.
J. Howe, great grandmother, Mrs. C.
Blanchard, grandmother, Mrs. W. Van-Dusen, mother, and Master Irwin Van-Dusen, son. The youngest of the five generations is over fourteen years old.
Of the five members present, four of them were born in Charlevoix county.

If any of our neighboring counties can beat this, we would like to hear from them.

IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

Had the primary election been held four weeks ago Scott would have carried the lower peninsula end of the district, but as the situation stands to-day Bayliss has it by a comfortable majority and the Bayliss sentiment is growing there every day. Everywhere he goes he makes friends with all he meets.
Men are attracted to him by his frank talk and the honesty and sincerity that is indelibly stamped upon his face.—
Pellston Journal.

The contest between Scott and Bayliss grows more interesting daily and the chances of Bayliss are growing brighter.
To us he looks like a winner over Scott.
However, this is none of our fight, but we are trying to acquaint our Republican readers with the personal character and qualifications of the two candidates asking for their suffrage. We predict that Bayliss will carry this county. He will get the support of the better element of his party, and that element is largely in the majority in Antrim county.—
Elk Rapids Progress.

Our next congressman must be a man of ability, one who has been in touch with the various social stages of life and knows what the needs of the people are. He need not necessarily be a highly educated man, for there are always plenty of educated fools who can supply enough schoolboy oratory to keep congress amused during its leisure hours. But he must be a man of brains, with an insight into the future and a comprehension so deep that he will know what is best for the people he represents. There is one candidate for congress who will stand the test of the closest scrutiny into his private and public life. His record is not ashamed of.
He has foregone boss rule; he is not a standpatter; he has always been found where expected. He is an honest, sincere, a clean moral man, progressive in thought and action. He is not afraid to tell where he stands and can give his reasons for his convictions.
We speak of Joseph E. Bayliss. Vote for him at the coming primaries and you will have voted for a good man.—

WOULD OUST OLD GANG

Progressive Democrats to Make Determined Effort to Control Party Organization.

That a determined effort is being made by Progressive Democrats to take control of the party organization is indicated by their activities in organization work. Recently a state-wide Progressive Democratic League was formed, headed by Judge George L. Yapple of Mendon and Sidney T. Miller of Detroit. Other Democratic leaders prominent in the contest for Wilson delegates in 1912 in opposition to the Wood-Shields element are behind this movement. County organizations have already been formed in most of the larger counties and this work is being rapidly extended. Two candidates for the state central committee were endorsed in each of the thirteen congressional districts and nominating petitions filed under the primary law.
The refusal of Secretary of State Martindale to file nominating petitions and the adjournment of the Supreme Court balked the efforts of the Progressive Democrats to secure a primary vote.
Active preparations for continuing the contest in county and state conventions are now being made, however.

The Progressive Democrats assert their strong support of President Wilson and Governor Ferris, loyalty to progressive policies and their opposition to machine politics and weak party campaigning as exemplified by the old organization. From the character of the men backing the present movement and judging also from the strength of the candidates for the state central committee and the strenuous campaign work being done, Messrs. Wood and Shields will have even a harder time to maintain their domination over the party organization than they had in 1912, when they succeeded in corraling a majority of the Michigan delegation to Baltimore in opposition to President Wilson.

Caterpillars Diminishing.

It will be good news to the farmers and fruit growers of this section of the state to learn that an avenging parasite is following the tent caterpillar and that the depredations of this pest will probably not be as extensive in this section next spring as they were this year. The farmers have had hard work this season fighting the caterpillars, but they are now congratulating themselves that the worst is over.
Comparatively few new nests are being formed by the pest.

Will Hold Picnic.

Members of the Ancient Order of Gleaners will hold a basket picnic in the grove at Ironston Wednesday, August 19th. The principal speaker of the day will be Grant Slocum of Detroit. All members are requested to make an effort to be present and make the picnic a success. Non-members will be made welcome.

PRESENT ROAD IS IMPASSIBLE

Effort Being Made to Complete Unfinished Road to Burgess.

Enthusiastic Meeting at Home of Col. M. Shoen-berg Monday Evening.

A very enthusiastic good roads meeting was held at the home of Col. M.
Shoenberg Monday evening. The primary object of the meeting was to formulate plans to raise sufficient funds to put what is known as the shore road, running parallel with the Pere Marquette railroad track, into shape fit for travel.

The road in question is considered the best route from this city to Burgess, on account of there being no hills to climb. It starts from the end of North Michigan avenue, running east for about a half mile, then north to the Waller farm corner, thence east to Burgess. Considerable work was done on the road last spring, but not having sufficient funds, it was not completed.

The present move is to raise funds for its completion through to Burgess, where it converges onto the old Petoskey road. At present road construction work on the old route makes it impossible, it being almost impossible for heavy cars or loads of any kind to make their way over the loose gravel.
It was estimated by those present that about $1,500 will place the road under consideration into shape for travel of all kinds. This money will be raised by subscriptions from the business men of Charlevoix and summer visitors who are owners of cars.

Each year sees a larger number of automobile parties in this region.
From the south and touring through this section for their summer vacation seems a popular pastime, growing steadily in favor. But with the increase in the number of automobile parties come the increased kick from every one of them on the condition of northern Michigan roads.

Just now there are a large number of automobile parties in this city and an equal number in Petoskey who wish to drive back and forth who cannot do so on account of the frightful condition of the roads. It has often been remarked that there seems no reason for allowing the roads to become so bad in this county and in fact there is no reason. Work on the road in this section could be commenced early in the season and by at least the 10th of July should be completed for the summer season. Starting again after the rush of travel from the south, work could be handled nicely until well along in the fall, and the constant clamor over the condition of the roads will soon be a thing of the past.

This is the real condition at the present time. The road to Petoskey is impassible, and to partially relieve the situation an effort will be made to raise enough money by subscriptions to place the road mentioned above into condition for travel. It is of extreme importance to every business man, hotel keeper and property owner of Charlevoix to see that this proposition is carried through. A large number of our summer visitors have signified their willingness to donate amounts, some as high as $100, and with a little hustling on the part of all, a road fit for travel will be the result.

Within the next few days funds will be solicited from all, and it is hoped all will realize the importance of having this road put into condition for travel.
A. F. Bridge, W. J. Rachow and L.
S. See were named as the finance committee. Lists have been made of names of all business men, and summer visitors, owners of cars, etc., who will be asked to contribute to the road building fund. The new road will be called the "Petoskey and Charlevoix Parkway."

ENDORSE BAYLISS

Typographical Union at the Sno Pass Resolutions in His Behalf.

Sault Ste. Marie Typographical Union,
No. 359, at a recent meeting, passed resolutions endorsing the candidacy of Joseph E. Bayliss for congress. The resolutions are as follows:

"Whereas, during the 1913 session of the Michigan legislature an effort was made by the Callaghan Publishing Co.
of Chicago, Illinois, to legalize a compilation of the laws of the State of Michigan made by said company and published by labor outside of the State of Michigan. The act, if passed, would have obligated this state to purchase a certain number of copies of said compilation at a cost of about $37,000.00, and

"Whereas, The typographical union of this state and other friends of labor opposed the passage of said bill, which passed the state senate but was defeated in the house of representatives. Frank D. Scott voted in favor of said bill in the state senate, while in the house of representatives Joseph E. Bayliss voted against it, and

"Whereas, Both of said men are candidates for their party's nomination for congress at the primaries, August 25th, 1914.

"Therefore be it resolved, That we do commend and endorse Representative
Jos. E. Bayliss for his courageous stand

How Dish Washing Becomes an Art.
The art of dish washing has become almost extinct in this rapid age, when the only way to do a thing is to do it once and have it over. Yet real dish washing is an art.

Dish washing requires two dishes, one in which to wash and the other to rinse the dishes; an abundance of heavy flannel towels, some lighter ones for glasses, a good dish mop and dish brush. The dish brush should be strong (then a hair brush is excellent for this purpose), as it will become soft enough to be flexible and is very durable. Make these dishes about ten inches long of narrow mesh and hem them to prevent the edges from fraying when they are put through the laundry.

First of all, the dishes should be gathered up and properly scraped, then held for a moment under the hot water faucet to take off the first coating of grease. Any dishes of knives and forks used for fish should be carefully wiped with paper as fish-bones are affected by fish immediately.

Put the dishes in hot suds. Use the dish mop freely and transfer them to the other pan to be rinsed. Let this second pan be very large and have a wooden drain fitted in two inches from the bottom so that the boiling water poured over the dishes will drain off them. This is the best and safest way of dish washing.

In washing the silver use a silver soap and then avoid the weekly silver cleaning day, with the added inducement that the silver is constantly bright.

Wash silver, pots and kettles separately and with another cloth. Pots and kettles should be washed inside and outside and thoroughly wiped before being set away. The coffee pot and teakettle should be boiled out at least once a week with soda and water to keep them tastelessly clean.

Why Silence Reigned.
"Darling," he cried in tones of deep emotion, "at last you are safely in my arms and nothing shall part us more."

"The object of my touching words and passionate embrace, unable to respond, but remained cold and silent. Tears welled into his eyes."

"Dearest," he continued, "how can I prove my love? Is there no sacrifice I can make for your sweet sake, no suffering I can endure?"

"This final appeal was irresistible. 'The best thing you can do, my man,' said a gruff voice, 'is to come along with me.' And a brutal policeman unfastened him from the lamp-post and led him silently away."—London Mail.

As the Twig Is Bent.

"I hope you were a good little boy while at your aunt's and didn't tell any stories," said his mother.

"Only the one you put me up to, ma," replied the young hopeful.

"Why, what do you mean, child?"

"When she asked me if I'd like to have a second piece of cake I said, 'No, thank you. I've had enough.'"

THEATRICAL

If you want to meet Sammy Lane and know all about her sweet love, her thrilling life among those good and bad folk of the Ozarks; if you want to know about the man who would not fight for her and also about the man who risked his life for her dear soul; if you want to know about Sammy's father, Jim Lane; the old Bald Knobber; Uncle Ike, the postmaster at the Forks, with his "Ba Thundas;" "Preachin' Bill;" "a-sayin' things as good as David Harum;" Wash' Gibbs; the old "shepherd, and all the rest of the people who lived among the hills—you can find it all in "The Shepherd of the Hills," the dramatization of Harold Bell Wright's novel, which comes to the Charlevoix Theatre Friday, August 15th.

The dramatization was made by Mr. Wright with the assistance of Elsbey W. Reynolds. It is said to be even more interesting than the story in book form.

Little Audrie will be at the Majestic Theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. Most of the people of Charlevoix know little Audrie as she was born in Charlevoix and has appeared before the people here before. She has had a very marked success on the Vaudeville stage and has also appeared in the Movies.

The Western Michigan Pike Association pictures will be shown at the Majestic Theatre on Friday and Saturday of this week. These pictures were made during the tour of the association a few weeks ago.

We also show the Elk's Convention at Petoskey and the opening of the million dollar harbor at Ludington.

Official Call for County Convention.

A county convention of the Socialist party of Charlevoix is hereby called, to be held over Graham's furniture store in the city of Charlevoix, Michigan, on September 5th, 1914, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of electing one delegate to the state convention of the Socialist party, which will be held on Monday, September 28th, in the city of Lansing, Michigan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

Each township and each city ward in the county will be entitled to one delegate to the county convention and the village of Boyne Falls will be entitled to one delegate.

All delegates to the county convention to be elected at the primary election to be held on August 25th, 1914.

By order of county committee, Socialist party.

GOT OVER THE LINE

Candidate for Prosecuting Attorney Seeks Votes in Emmet County.

Residents of North Bay in Charlevoix county are telling a good story at the expense of Arthur Urquhart of Boyne City, who is out after the republican nomination for prosecuting attorney in that county. It seems that Mr. Urquhart is not overly well acquainted in Bay township especially along the Emmet county line between Resort and Bay townships and Friday, he was over in Resort township "drumming up" votes among the Emmet county farmers. He had spent quite a portion of the day visiting the various farms before being informed of his mistake. Resort township farmers are having a good laugh at Mr. Urquhart's expense, as are also Charlevoix county residents. Mr. Urquhart is one of four candidates for the republican nomination in that county. — Petoskey Evening News.

Banner Resort Season.

Word comes from every resort in this section of Michigan that the resort season is the best in the history of this section. In Charlevoix practically every hotel is filled, and in some instances they are unable to care for the people who apply for room and board. Cottages that had not been leased in previous years have been rented this year. Petoskey, Harbor Springs and Mackinac Island report a rushing business and indications are that the season will last well into September.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

I can give you a better answer," Patty replied, holding to gain time and shaking inwardly.

"Bill Merrill says his brother that works in New Hampshire reports you as riding through the streets of Allentown last Monday with a young man."

There seemed but one reply to this, so Patty answered truthfully: "He says what's true. I was there."

"What?" And it was plain from the deacon's voice that he had really disbelieved the rumor. A whirlwind of rage swept through him and shook him from head to foot.

"Do you mean to stand there and own up to me that you was thirty miles away from home with a young man?" he shouted.

"If you ask me a plain question I've got to tell you the truth, father. I was."

"How dare you carry on like that and drag my name into scandal, you worthless scoundrel, you? Who went along with you? I'll skin the hide off him, whoever it was!"

Patty remained mute at this threat, but Waitstill caught her hand and whispered: "Tell him all, dear. It's got to come out. Be brave, and I'll stand by you."

"Why are you interfering and putting in your meddling nose?" the deacon said, turning to Waitstill. "The girl would never 'a' been there if you'd attended to your business. She's nothing but a fool of a young filly, and you're an old cat horse. It was your job to look out for her, as your mother told you to. Anybody might 'a' guessed she needed watching!"

"You shall not call my sister an old cat horse! I'll not permit it!" cried Patty, plucking up courage in her sister's defense and, as usual, comparing herself a trifle more like a spitfire than a true heroine of tragedy.

"Hush, Patty! Let him call me anything that he likes. It makes no difference at such a time."

"Waitstill knew nothing of my going away till this afternoon," continued Patty. "I kept it secret from her on purpose, because I was afraid she would not approve. I went with Mark Wilson, and I married him in New Hampshire because we couldn't do it at home without everybody's knowledge. Now you know all!"

"Do you mean to tell me you've gone and married that reckless, wild, horse-froth, card-playing sneak of a Wilson boy, that's courted every girl in town? Married the son of a man that has quarreled with me and insulted me in public? By the Lord Harry, I'll crack this whip over your shoulders once before I'm done with you! If I'd used it years ago you might have been an honest woman today instead of—"

Exhausted by the whole lot of control of himself, and the temper, that "Put down that whip, father, or I'll take it from you."

had never been governed or held in check, lashed itself into a fury that made him for the moment unaccountable for his words or actions.

Waitstill took a step forward in front of Patty. "Put down that whip, father, or I'll take it from you and break it across my knee!" Her eyes flashed and she held her head high. "You've made me do the work of a man, and, thank God, I've got the muscle of one. Don't lift a finger to Patty, or I'll defend her, I promise you!" The dinner horn is in the side entry and two blasts will bring Uncle Bart up the hill, but he waits. He calls him unless you force me to."

"The deacon's cry on the whip relaxed, and he fell back a little in sheer astonishment at the bravado of the girl, ordinarily so quiet and self-contained. He was speechless for a second and then recovered breath enough to shout to the terrified Patty: "I won't use the whip till I hear whether you've got any excuse for your scandalous behavior. Hear me tell you one thing. This little pleasure trip of yours won't do you no good, for I'll break the marriage! I won't have a Wilson in my family if I have to empty a shotgun into him, but your lies and your low conduct are so beyond reason I can't believe my ears. What's your excuse, I say?"

"Stop a minute, Patty, before you answer, and let me say a few things that ought to have been said before now," interposed Waitstill. "If Patty has done wrong, father, you're no one but yourself to thank for it, and it's only by God's grace that nothing worse has happened to her. What could you expect from a young thing like that, with her merry heart turned into a lump in her breast every day by your cruelty? Did she deceive you? Well, you've made her afraid of you ever since she was a baby in the cradle, drawing the covers over her little head when she heard your step. What ever crop you sow is bound to come up, father: that's nature's law and God's as well."

"You hold your tongue, you, reading the law to your elders and betters," said the old man, choking with wrath. "My business is with this worthless sinner of yours, not with you! You've got your coat and hood on, miss, so you just clear out of the house, and if you're too slow about it I'll help you along. I've no kind of an idea you're rightly married, for that young Wilson sneak wouldn't pay so high for you as all that. But if it menses you to call him your husband go on and find him and stay with him. This is an honest house and no place for such as you!"

Patty had a good share of the Baxter temper, not under such control as Waitstill's, and the blood mounted into her face.

"You shall not speak to me so!" she said intrepidly, while keeping a discreet eye on the whip. "I'm not a caterpillar to be stepped on. I'm a married woman, as right as a New Hampshire justice can make me, with a wedding ring and a certificate to show if need be. And you shall not call my husband names. Time will tell what he is going to be, and that's a son-in-law any true father would be proud to own."

"Why are you set against this match, father?" argued Waitstill, striving to make him hear reason. "Patty has married into one of the best families in the village. Mark is gay and thoughtful, but never has he been seen the worse for liquor, and never has he done a thing for which a wife need hang her head. It is something for a young fellow of four and twenty to be able to provide for a wife and keep her in comfort, and when all is said and done it is a true love match."

Patty seized this opportune moment to forget her father's presence and the tragic nature of the occasion and, in her usual impetuous fashion, flung her arms around Waitstill's neck and gave her the hug of a young bride.

"My own dear sister," she said, "I don't mind anything so long as you stand up for us."

"Don't make her go tonight, father," pleaded Waitstill. "Don't send your own child out into the cold. Remember her husband is away from home."

"She can find another up at the Mills as good as her own better. Off with you, I say, you trouper little baggage, you!"

"Go, then, dear; it is better so. Uncle Bart will keep you overnight. Run up and get your things," and Waitstill sunk into a chair, realizing the hopelessness of the situation.

"She'll not take anything from my house. It's her husband's business to find her in clothes."

"They'll be better ones than ever you found me," was Patty's response. No heroics for her; no fainting fits at being allowed; no hysterics at being turned out of house and home; no prayers for mercy, but a quick retreat for every girl from her father, and her defiant attitude enraged the deacon the more.

"I won't speak again," he said, in a tone that could not be mistaken. "Into the street you go with the clothes you stand up in or I'll do what I said I'd do."

"Go, Patty! It's the only thing to be done. Don't tremble, for nobody shall touch a hair of your head. I can trust you to find shelter tonight, and Mark will take care of you tomorrow."

Patty touched her shabby coat and tied on her hood as she walked from the kitchen through the sitting room toward the side door, her heart leaping with shame and anger, and above all, with a child's sense of helplessness at being parted from her sister.

"Don't tell the neighbors any more lies than you can help," called her father after her retreating form. "And if any of you dare to come up here and give me any of their impudence they'll be treated same as you. Come back here, Waitstill, and don't go to slandering any goodfellow over her. She ain't likely to get out of the village for some time if she's expectin' Mark Wilson to take her away."

"I shall certainly go to the door with my sister," said Waitstill boldly, snatching the action to the wind, and following Patty out on the steps. "Shall you tell Uncle Bart everything, dear, and ask him to let you see her at his house?"

Both girls were trembling with excitement. Waitstill pale as a sheet, Patty flushed and fearful, with defiant eyes and lips that quivered rebelliously.

"I suppose so," she answered dolefully. "Though Aunt Abby hates me, on account of Ephie. I'd rather go to Dr. Perry's, but I don't like to meet Phil. There doesn't seem to be any good place for me, but it's only for a night. And you'll not let father prevent your seeing Mark and me tomorrow, will you? Are you afraid to stay alone? I'll sit on the steps all night if you say the word."

"No, no, run along. Father has vented his rage upon you, and I shall not have any more trouble. God bless and keep you, dear. Run along!"

"And you're not angry with me now, Waitstill? You still love me? And you'll forgive Mark and come to stay with us soon, soon, soon?"

"Well see, dear, when all this unhappy business is settled, and you are safe and happy in your own home. I shall have much to tell you when we meet tomorrow."

Patty had the most ardent love for her elder sister, and something that resembled reverence for her unselfishness, her loyalty and her strength of character, but if the truth were told, she had no great opinion of Waitstill's ability to feel righteous wrath, nor of her power to avenge herself in the face of such injustice. It was the conviction of her own superior fineness and audacity that had sustained Patty all through her late escapade. She felt herself a lucky girl, indeed, in achieving liberty and happiness for herself, but doubly lucky if she had chanced to open a way of escape for her more delicate and dutiful sister.

She would have been a trifle astonished had she surmised the existence of certain mysterious waves that had been sweeping along the coasts of Waitstill's mind that afternoon, breaking down all sorts of defenses and carrying her will along with them by sheer force, but it is a truism that two human beings can live beside each other for half a century and yet continue strangers.

Patty's eloquence with the youth of her choice, taking into account all its attendant risks, was indeed an exhibition of courage and initiative not common to girls of seventeen. But Waitstill was meditating a untidy more daring yet—untidy, too, involving a course of conduct most unusual in maidens of Puritan descent.

She walked back into the kitchen to find her father sitting placidly in the rocking chair by the window. He had lit his corn-cob pipe, in which he always smoked a mixture of dried sweet fern as being cheaper than tobacco, and his face wore something resembling a smile—a foxy smile—as he watched his youngest born plowing down the hill through the deep snow, while the more obedient Waitstill moved about the room setting supper on the table.

Conversation was not the deacon's forte, but it seemed proper for some one to break the ice that seemed suddenly to be very thick in the immediate vicinity.

"That little 'd' go-over-the-ground will give the night, as a pleasant evening, 'em 'bout me," he chuckled. "Aunt Abby Cole will run the streets of the three villages by snuff tomorrow. But nobody pays any 'tention to a woman whose tongue is hung in the middle and wags at both ends. I won't intend to use the whip on your sister, Waitstill," continued the deacon, with a crafty look at his silent daughter, "though a trounce would 'a' done her a sign of good. But I was only tryin' to frighten her a little mite an' pay her up for bringin' disgrace on us the way she does, markin' us the talk of the town. Well, she's gone, and good riddance to her rubbish! I'll be less likely to clothe. You'll miss her just at first on account of there bein' no other women folks on the hill, but I won't last long. I'll have Bill Merrill do some of your outside chores so 't you can take on your sister's work, if she ever done any."

This was a most astonishingly generous proposition on the deacon's part, and, to tell the truth, he did not himself fully understand his mental processes when he made it, but it seemed to be drawn from him by a kind of instinct that he was not standing well in his elder daughter's books.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE
BIBLE-STUDY-ON
BARREN FIG TREE—DEFILED TEMPLE.

Mark 11:12-25—Aug. 9.
By their fruits ye shall know them.—Matt. 7:20.

JESUS' triumphal entry into Jerusalem was past. After spending a portion of the day in the Holy City, He returned to Bethany. Going to the city the next morning, He noted a fig tree by the wayside, bearing plenty of leaves. He approached it, but found no figs. The good show of leaves was deceptive. Then He put a curse, a blight, upon the tree, declaring that it should not bear fruit forever, or to a completion. Bible students believe that they now see a deep significance in this incident. They believe that the fig tree was used as a type of the Jewish nation; and that the blight upon the tree because of unfruitfulness corresponded exactly to that pronounced the day before upon that nation because of its unfruitfulness.

On the day previous, Jesus had said to the Jewish nation, "Ye shall see Me no more until that Day." He declared that this tree would be blighted to the end of the abon, or Age. Again, when speaking to His disciples respecting the end of this Age, Jesus declared, "When ye shall see the fig tree putting forth leaves, then know that summer is nigh"—that is, the winter, the blight time of Israel and of the world, is at an end. In other words, one of the signs of a New Dispensation will be the indications of life, hope, promise, amongst the Jews.

Significance of Zionism.
These same Bible students point to the revival of hope amongst the Jewish people, as especially manifested by Zionism, and declare that this return of hope and faith to the Jews respecting their land and the Divine promises is exactly in line with prophecy. They point to Isaiah 40 as in process of fulfillment: "Comfort ye My people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her appointed time is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins."

These Bible students hold that Ezekiel's prophecy of the valley of dry bones does not refer to a literal resurrection, but to the revival of Israel's hopes in the Divine promises. This is in harmony with the Prophet's declaration, "These bones are the whole house of Israel; behold, they say, Our bones are dried, our hope is lost; we are cut off from our parts."—Ezekiel 37:1-14.

These Bible students declare that St. Paul teaches that the Jewish nation was typically represented by Ishmael, Isaac's son. (Galatians 4:22-31.) As Hagar and Ishmael were outcast for a time, so the Law Covenant and the Jews have been cut off from Divine favor only temporarily. Ishmael had almost fainted for thirst in the wilderness, but was revived by the angel of the Lord, who pointed out a spring of water. This also is typical. Jewish hopes of God's favor had almost died. Zionism is the wellspring which is rescuing Israel from death as a people. Under Messiah's Kingdom, soon to be established on the spirit plane, the Jews will receive a great blessing—on the earthly plane.

Cleansing the Temple.
Jesus and His disciples proceeded to Jerusalem and went directly to the Temple. There He assumed authority and began to cast out the traders without ceremony. Another account of this incident tells us that in this cleansing of the Temple Jesus used a scourge of small cords. All this was of double significance:

(1) Primarily, it had to do with that time: It typified a cleansing of the untypical Temple, due, we believe, in our day.

According to modern legal usage, it would be quite improper for one to enter a church edifice in order to interfere with the rights of conscience or the procedure sanctioned by the congregation owning that edifice. If wrong were being done, and he wished to rectify it, he should either swear out a warrant or call a policeman to witness the infraction of the law and correct matters. But under the Jewish Law it was different. Every Jew was privileged to enforce the Divine Law respecting blasphemy or sacrilege.

Jesus therefore did only what any Jew had a right to do. It will be noticed that as much as the Scribes and Pharisees desired to find occasion against Jesus, they made no objection to the procedure here described. Jesus was within His rights. He was championing the cause of God and His Temple.

Jesus intimated that responsibility for the prevailing condition rested upon those in authority—the Scribes and Pharisees. For craft and other considerations they had perverted God's House to become a place of merchandise, and whole religion a cloak. We feel that religion is still used to cover selfishness. The Master, who was especially indignant at such misuse of the House of God holds the same sentiments today.

Bohumir Kryl and Thirty of His Artists Coming Here Chautauqua Week

A LEADING feature of Chautauqua week in this city will be the appearance of Bohumir Kryl and his band. This band will comprise thirty or more artists. Mr. Kryl, in addition to leading the band, will appear in concert solo at each performance. He is acknowledged to be one of America's five greatest bandmasters, and as a cornet player, according to the Los Angeles Times and other great newspapers, he has no superior in America. For two seasons past Kryl and his band have appeared on all Redpath Chautauques in Tennessee, Kentucky, Michigan and Indiana. The demand was vigorous that he should return to these cities, and everywhere he is again creating great enthusiasm. With further reference to Bohumir Kryl, it will be recalled that he laid down the sculptor's chisel after completing the statue of General Lew Wallace at Crawfordsville, Ind., and made music his life work thereafter at the suggestion of Sousa and that he immediately sprang into great prominence.

BEN GREET PLAYERS COMING CHAUTAUQUA WEEK

ONE of the chief attractions of Chautauqua Week here will be the appearance of the Ben Greet Players in one of their well known plays. These players appeared on 110 Redpath Chautauquas last season, and everywhere there was the greatest enthusiasm. Their appearance this year in another play will therefore undoubtedly be greeted by larger audiences in all cities where they played last season. Last year in some of the towns of Michigan people began to arrive at the tent two hours before the program started in order to get a seat, and by the opening hour even standing room was at a premium. Percival Virian, Grace Halsey Mills, Charles Hanna, Leslie King and other well known Ben Greet Players appear in this company.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County.

Charlevoix, Mich., Aug. 3rd, 1914. I have lately learned of a report that I did not want the office of Register of Deeds and that I was a candidate simply to benefit someone else. Such rumor is malicious and harmful. It is unjust and, besides, is an absolute falsehood. I have made no combination with anyone and will make none.

I want the office. I have a fair education and a little horse sense.

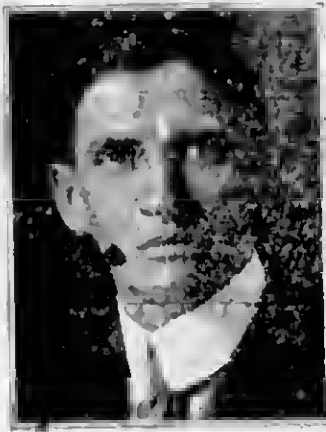

I have worked hard all my life and have tried to help others. I have never asked for public office or public favor. I have never held any office except village trustee, and that was forced on me.

I am not versed in political trickery. Have nothing to say about the other candidates. All I ask is a square deal.

Yours respectfully,

COMMITTS SUICIDE

Miss Winifred Kelly Drowns Herself at Bay View by Jumping from Dock.

Miss Winifred Kelly of Honor, Michigan, committed suicide at Bay View last Thursday, her body being found near the Bay View dock the next morning. The suicide was evidently accomplished late at night by jumping from the dock. The following morning the body was found near the dock and was identified later.

She was 17 years of age and was employed as maid at one of the cottages. From what can be learned, she was dependent over the refusal of her parents to allow her to immediately marry her lover. The parents had objected on the ground that she was too young to get married.

A very touching letter was found in her room the following day addressed to her parents.

TWO YOUNG MEN BADLY BURNED

Explosion of Gasoline in Launch Causes
Heavy Fire Loss.

Loren Hart and Lynn Thomas Badly Burned—
Loss About $3,500.

Saturday night proved exciting amid the clanging of fire alarms and the rush of people to the quickest succession of fires ever known in Charlevoix's history.

Shortly after the 9 o'clock bell rung, an alarm of fire was turned in from the fourth ward, which proved to be a small blaze at the home of Will Hartwell on West Huribut avenue. Mr. Hartwell had just finished storing a few boxes in a small building used as a storeroom in the rear of his home and was sitting on the porch when the fire was discovered by neighbors. It started from an unknown origin and was quickly extinguished when three streams of water from nearby garden hose were put into use. The roof was partly burned from the building, incurring a loss of about $25. No insurance was carried. Spontaneous combustion has been offered as the cause of the fire.

The second alarm of fire was turned in about 9:40 from the second ward, which resulted in the destruction of the Charlevoix Ice Cream Factory, owned by Charles H. Lamphear, and six boat-houses, three launches and one canoe. Loren Hart and Lynn Thomas went to a boat-house to get their new boat, intending to go for a ride on the lakes. Mr. Hart stepped into the hatch and lighted a match to see how much water was in the boat and then commenced pumping the water out. After completing this he lighted a second match to light the side lights, when the explosion occurred. The explosion instantly became a solid mass of flames, which completely enveloped Mr. Hart. He immediately got out of the boat and, bending over from the walk in the boat-house, forced his head into the water to extinguish the flames in his hair. Mr. Hart was severely burned about his face, hands and forearms.

Lynn Thomas, who was standing at the railing watching Hart get the boat ready, was blown off his feet by the terrific explosion and fell back into the boat. He received several severe burns about the face and hands. However, Mr. Thomas was able to be out Sunday.

The loss to A. L. Hart & Son was about $1,000. The two boat-houses and two launches owned by them were totally destroyed. The explosion was in the new boat, which was in the fifth slip. This boat was 22 feet long and when completed would have been one of the finest pleasure boats in the city. Five gallons of gasoline were in the tank. The estimated loss on this boat is $700. They had intended completing the work this week.

The older launch was in the sixth slip and was 24 feet long. It had twelve gallons of gasoline in its tank, having just been filled that day. The estimated loss on this boat is $200. The loss of the two boat-houses is about $150.

Monday the steamer Pierce raised the engines and hulls of the two boats and it is doubtful if the engines can be used again. No insurance was carried.

Horace Fowler's launch was in the fourth slip and was destroyed, together with the boat-house. Mr. Fowler estimates his loss at $150, with no insurance.

Earl Young's boat-houses, covering slips two and three, were totally destroyed. Mr. Young succeeded in getting his valuable canoe out, as well as the dinghy owned by Colonel M. Shoenberg. Mr. Young estimates his loss at $100, which is covered by insurance. The canoe owned by Miss Mildred Shockey was totally destroyed. It was chained to the floor of the boat-house and when the rescuers returned to take it out it was so hot in the boat-house that it was impossible to release it from the floor. The loss of the canoe is estimated to be $35, with no insurance.

The first slip was occupied by Fred G. Bellinger. Mr. Bellinger was able to get his boat out, but lost a great many supplies and equipment to the amount of $50. A valuable mackinaw, was among the many small articles lost. No insurance was carried. The boat-house was owned by M. J. Stockman.

Chas. Lamphear suffers the greatest loss by the fire, owing to the fact that his business is at a standstill for the present. Practically all the machinery was badly damaged. The ice cream cans and tubs were practically ruined. The terrific heat melted the solder in the cans, making them worthless. Many special cream molds were rendered useless by the heat. About one ton of salt was ruined by smoke and water, while the building is badly dilapidated and scorched.

About one-third of the ice in the icehouse was saved. The fire first started at the corner of the building next to the icehouse and in a short time the whole building was a roaring furnace. The icehouse and sawdust burned like tinder. Mr. Lamphear used a garden hose to hold the flames in check till the firemen arrived, but to no advantage. He was able to save his typewriter, sales ticket register and books.

Considerable butter and other staples stored in the cooler were not damaged owing to the thick partitions. A large gas tank of 1300 pounds pressure was stored in the cooler and it is lucky for all that it did not let go.

The loss to the Charlevoix Ice Cream Company is almost total, with only $400 insurance. Mr. Burnett, who owned the building, carried only $300 insurance.

The firemen are to be given universal credit for the excellent work they performed and for their untiring efforts to battle the flames and the protection of the other buildings. Had it not been for the icehouse, the machine shop of Theodore Erickson would have been destroyed. This, together with the light wind that was blowing from the south, averted a greater conflagration.

Several automobiles and all the tools that could be collected together were taken from the building. Mr. Erickson was out of the city, but his friends and bystanders assisted in the work. A large gasoline tank was in the ground between the buildings, but was not affected by the heat.

While the fire was at its height an alarm came to the department that the roof of Fred S. Meyers' cigar store was on fire. The firemen responded, but it was extinguished by the Pyrene extinguisher before they arrived. A small blaze started alongside the store occupied by C. Danto & Son and it was also extinguished by Pyrene extinguisher. Sparks flew all about the various buildings on Bridge street and caused considerable fear of a further conflagration.

All electric wires were cut to the burning buildings, thus reducing the hazards of the firemen. Fear of more explosions was continually expressed, but the firemen did not defer their work in fighting the fire at the closest range.

The total damage caused by the succession of fires Saturday will aggregate approximately $3,500, beside the necessary delay before business can be resumed.

FIRE BLIGHT HAS APPEARED

Orchards in This Section of State Are Becoming Affected.

Diseased Parts Must be Destroyed Immediately to Prevent Its Spread.

Fruit growers in this part of the state are facing a new orchard peril which will have to be immediately attended to in order to save the trees which have already been attacked. This is the dreaded fire blight which is now showing itself in the orchards from Williamsburg to Petoskey. Many trees are affected and unless immediate steps are taken to eradicate the disease the growers will suffer untold damage. The leaves of the trees affected have the appearance of having been singed with fire and hence the name. The only successful method of dealing with the trouble is to cut out the affected parts and destroy them. The cutting must be done with sterilized instruments and the wounds carefully cauterized after the cutting has been done. Unlike the tent caterpillar and army worm there is no parasite that will effect a cure, but the condition of the trees grow worse from day to day until they finally die. The remedy remains in the hands of the owners and nature cannot be expected to help them out of the difficulty. At present the trouble is not serious, but like any malignant disease it will become general in a short time if it is left to go uncurbed. Now is the time to go over the orchards and look for affected trees and cut out carefully all the diseased parts and destroy them so that the infection will not be spread over a larger area. With the prospect of the greatest apple crop in the history of the region no disease should be allowed to get a foothold. The orchards of the region are its greatest asset and will become more so as the younger trees come into bearing as they will during the next few years. Prompt action on the part of the growers will mean the difference between a large and a small crop. About one million dollars in the pockets of the people

$850.00 HAS BEEN PLEDGED

Charlevoix and Petoskey Parkway Soon To Be Completed.

Business Men and Summer Visitors of Both Cities to Donate Funds for Building.

Geo. H. VanPelt reports that increased interest is being shown every day in regard to completing the Charlevoix and Petoskey parkway. Up to the present time over $850.00 has been pledged and it is thought that within the next week the entire $1,500 necessary to complete the road will be raised.

In soliciting funds various business interests have been classified. Some are listed under the head of industries; others professional men, business men, doctors, and a miscellaneous list, including the summer visitors who each year bring their cars here. In this manner the amount subscribed by each individual in the different classes will be kept separate, which will enable every man in Charlevoix to know a dollar paid in. It is planned to have this list published at a later date, also an itemized statement of the amount of expenditures.

Tuesday he spent the day in Petoskey. In the afternoon the business men met and pledged themselves to do all in their power to help the good work along. About a hundred dollars was pledged at the meeting, and when the subscription list is circulated considerable money will be raised. Homer Sly was named as local chairman and the lists were placed in his hands. It seemed to be the opinion of all that the road will be of great benefit to both Charlevoix and Petoskey and that the two cities should work together in boosting good road propositions.

Those in charge state that it is safe to say before another week has passed the road will be in condition for traffic, though not entirely finished.

CHAUTAUQUA OPENS TO-DAY

Big Tent Up and Ready for the Seven Days of Entertainment.

Opening Number the Ounbar Bell Ringers and Male Quartette—Tickets Disposed Of.

At noon Wednesday everything was in readiness for the opening number of the seven-day Chautauqua. The big tent has been placed on the central school grounds and what gives promise of the best week of entertainment began with the afternoon performance.

The opening number was the Dunbar Bell Ringers, and Male Quartet, which is claimed to be one of the best on the road to-day.

Friday evening's entertainment will be one of the best during the seven days. The Ben Greet Players are known the world over as first-class entertainers and those who saw them at Bay View two years ago are anxious to again witness their performance.

Saturday and Sunday will both be musical days. Kellerman, who appears both afternoon and evening Saturday, is one of the greatest baritone singers in the world. Bohumir Kral and his famous band will entertain the large crowd sure to be present both afternoon and evening Sunday.

The business men who guarantee the sale of tickets have arranged matters so that tickets contracted for will be disposed of, and every indication points to the success of the Chautauqua.

TRAFFIC ON BRIDGE STREET

Results of Count Taken Last Week Are Most Astounding.

Over 20,000 People Afoot Cross Bridge, Besides
3,172 Autos and Other Conveyances.

The question has often been asked by both summer people and year-round residents if there was any way of knowing the amount of traffic passing over the swing bridge during twenty-four hours. Up to the present time one could make but a guess as to the matter and could but use their imagination as to the number.

On Thursday, August 6th, Street Commissioner E. B. Ward and other men in the employment of the city took an accurate count of the number of bicycles, horse-drawn vehicles, automobiles and people afoot passing to and fro across the bridge from 7:00 a. m. Thursday to 7:00 a. m. Friday, and the figures they produce are most astonishing.

During the hours above stated their figures show as follows:

Number of bicycles—846.
Number of horse-drawn vehicles—1075.

Number of automobiles—1251.
Number of people afoot—20,218.

These figures show the actual traffic on the bridge during a period of twenty-four hours. It does not mean in any sense of the word that this number of individuals crossed the bridge but once, but covers the actual number and times persons, rigs and automobiles made the trip across the bridge. It also gives one an idea of the wear not only to the bridge itself but the entire street running both ways from the bridge.

It has been known that the traffic on the streets of Charlevoix was heavy during the summer season, but the figures above show the volume of travel away beyond all estimates made.

There have been many days when the amount of travel on Bridge street went beyond these figures, while at other times it will fall short. At a later date the count will be again taken, showing the comparison between the two days.

READ THIS BEFORE YOU VOTE

Coming before the voters of Charlevoix County as candidate for the office of Representative on the Republican ticket on the following principles vital to all in County and State, without subterfuge, without deceit, unclouded by ambiguous declarations, with no insidious means employed as a self-seeker for the embezzlement of power, without fear or begging favor, to win if possible, to lose if I must. The expenses of the State Government are beyond the actual needs of the people and far beyond the ability of the ordinary man to pay, as they are assessed, defying an attempt to contradict either proposition. All State institutions should be self sustaining, except for the blind, the orphans, the old and destitute, feeble minded and asylums. The College course should be paid for by the one who takes it, not by those who can't take it. We need a court in every county to settle all criminal cases at once. All expenses of law suits should be paid by the men who bring the suit.

All tax payers should get full benefit for their money. There are sixty-five commissions and boards of control in the State, some of them fix their own salary and expense account. One-half that number is sufficient.

One engineering school in the State is enough. We have two now. In 1907 and 1908, two State schools cost the tax payers $1,600,000.00. In 1911 and 1912 the same schools cost the tax payers over $2,500,000.00 above their income.

In 1907 and 1908 the total cost of the State Government was $9,078,274.00. In 1913 and 1914, the levy on the tax payers for the same purpose was $11,650,000.00 and $16,753.20 went to Mackinac Island Park.

The State Board of Tax Commissioners is an imposition and insult to honesty and should be abolished. The laws on the whiskey traffic, and especially the law passed in 1913, which is simply a joke, should be repealed and fewer and better ones made. The cause of temperance is my cause and will have my support at all times. Lobbying in the legislature should not be allowed.

Colonization of Japanese in the State is dangerous and should be prohibited by law. Rates on Fire Insurance should be regulated by law. The brightest gem in Citizenship is woman suffrage, it is coming and should come. The farmer and the laboring men make the world a living and should have the first consideration.

Capital would be dead without labor, neither can succeed without the other. Neither should have any advantage over the other, but should go hand in hand.

On these principles I stand, and will stand on them. I am not trying to tide myself into office on a broken precedent, nor on a promise to do better next time.

Yours most respectfully,
James M. Felts,
Charlevoix, Michigan.

HELD A SUCCESSFUL MEETING

Regular Meeting of W. C. T. U. at the Congregational Church.

Program Rendered by Children Was a Fine One—Membership Increasing.

The W. C. T. U. met last Friday in the Congregational church. Rev. John G. Irvine led the devotional exercises, giving a good, helpful talk in connection with the Bible reading. The list of names of those signing the petition in the three wards of Charlevoix for our county to go wet were read at the meeting. It was something of a surprise, to say the least, to see the names of some we were not looking for to be on such a paper as that, and hope they have had time enough to think it over and if such a petition is ever presented to them again for their signature they will say "No! we want our county to be dry. No more saloons. Better all get on the 'water wagon.'"

The program in charge of Miss Annie Metcalf, furnished mostly by the children, was a good one, especially considering the little practice they had. The children taking part were: Clifford Humphrey, Pearl Durance, Oakley Crandall, Esther Powell, Gertrude Dixon, Teddy Powell, Earl Crandall, Chas. Usher, Thelma Crandall, Wilma Stevenson, Irma Carey and Wilma Polinsky. At the close of the program the temperance doxology was sung. Then followed ice cream and cake, which all seemed to enjoy to the utmost. One new member was secured.

Special Notice.

President A. E. Craig, Ph. D. D. D. of Sioux City, Iowa, will preach in the Methodist church Sunday morning.

Dr. Craig has no superior in the American pulpit. All should hear this great orator and preacher.

Mrs. Goetz of the Belvedere will sing. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

To Parents of Caddies.

Parents of the caddies, of the younger ones particularly, need have no fear regarding the safety of the boys who go on the proposed caddie excursion to Cross Village Sunday, August 16th. The affair has the sanction of the Golf Club officials, and all departments of pastime, particularly swimming and boating, will be closely and competently supervised. There will be no cost whatever attached to the trip so far as the boys are concerned, all expenses having been met by subscriptions from players.

In view of all this, parents are advised to allow the boys to take advantage of this excellent opportunity for a day's outing. It will be beneficial and one they will not soon forget.

Only boys who have caddied either in 1913 or 1914 are eligible to go, and these only upon condition that they are in good standing at the golf course at the time of the excursion.

The Benver will be used and will leave the dock at 7:00 o'clock Sunday morning. It will return before dark that evening.

The STORY of WALTSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waltstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), live in a small house in Boyne Falls, Me. Their father, Ivory, is a widower, and their mother, who died when they were young, was a Quaker. Ivory is a Quaker, and his wife was a Quaker. Ivory is a Quaker, and his wife was a Quaker.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is uneducated. Mark kisses her.

Waltstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his indignation he tells the molasses men all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waltstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waltstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waltstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilsons' house, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Having time to spare.

Waltstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waltstill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waltstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is foolish.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waltstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossips are busy with the names of Waltstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and sends Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waltstill volunteers her help in the Boynton household.

Departing of winning Patty, Cephas turns his affections elsewhere. Patty and Mark are now sweethearts.

Patty and Mark know Deacon Baxter will not consent to their marriage, so they plan no elopement to New Hampshire.

Deacon Baxter is more than usually "difficult." Patty runs off with Mark, is married and returns and tells Waltstill.

The deacon turns Patty out into the cold. She finds shelter with Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart.

CHAPTER XXV.

Waltstill Speaks Her Mind.

THOUGH the two girls had never made any demonstration of their affection in his presence, Deacon Baxter had a fair idea of their mutual dependence upon each other; not that he placed the slightest value on Waltstill's opinion of him or cared in the smallest degree what she or any one else in the universe thought of his conduct, but she certainly did appear to advantage when contrasted with the pert little hussy who had just left the premises; also Waltstill looked large in his household comforts and conveniences, having a clear head, a sure hand and being one of the steady going, reliable sort that can be counted on in emergencies, not like Patty, going off at half past six on the smallest provocation. Yes, Waltstill, as a product of his masterly training for the last seven years, had settled down, not without some trouble and friction, into a tolerably dependable Quaker horse, and he intended in the future to use some care in making permanent so valuable an aid and ally. She did not pursue nor attract the opposite sex, as his younger daughter apparently did; so by continuing his policy of keeping all young men rigidly at a distance he could count confidently on having Waltstill serve his purposes for the next fifteen or twenty years or as long as he himself should continue to ornament and enrich the earth.

He would go to Sued the very next day and out half out of his will, arranging his property so that Waltstill should be the chief legatee as long as she continued to live obediently under his roof. He intended to make the best point clear if he had to consult every lawyer in York county, for he wouldn't take risks on any woman alive. If he must leave his money anywhere and it was with a bitter pang that he faced the inexorable conviction that he could neither live forever nor take his savings with him to the realm of bliss prepared for members of the orthodox church in good and regular standing. If he must leave his money behind him, he would dig a note in the ground and bury it rather than let it go to any one who had angered him in his lifetime.

These were the thoughts that caused him to relax his iron grip and smile as he sat by the window smoking his corn-cob pipe and taking one of his very rare periods of rest.

Presently he glanced at the clock. "It's only quarter past 4," he said. "I thought 't was later, but the snow makes it so light you can't judge the time. The moon falls tonight, don't it? Yes; come to think of it, I know it does. Ain't you settin' out supper a little mite early, Waltstill?"

This was a longer and more amiable speech than he had made in years, but Waltstill never glanced at him as he said: "It is a little early, but I want to get it ready before I leave."

"Be you goin' out?" Mind, I won't have you follerin' Patience round. You'll only upset what I've done, an' anyhow I want you to keep away from the neighbors for a few days, till all this blows over."

He spoke firmly, though for him mildly, for he still had the uneasy feeling that he stood on the brink of a volcano, and, as a matter of fact, he tumbled into it the very next moment.

The meager supper was spread—a plate of cold soda biscuits, a dried apple pie and the usual brown tempt were in evidence, and as her father ceased speaking Waltstill opened the door of the back oven where the bean pot reposed, set a chair by the table, and turning, took up her coat (her mother's old riding cloak. It was, and calmly put it on, reaching then for her hood and her squirrel tipper.

"You are goin' out, then, spite of what I said?" the deacon inquired sternly.

"Did you really think, father, that I would sleep under your roof after you had turned my sister out into the snow to lodge with whoever might take her in—my seventeen-year-old sister that your wife left to my care; my little sister, the very light of my life?"

Waltstill's voice trembled a trifle, but otherwise she was quite calm and free from heroics of any sort.

The deacon looked up in surprise. "I guess you're kind of hysterical," he said. "Set down—set down an' talk things over. I ain't got nothin' ag'in you, an' I mean to treat you right. Set down."

The old man was decidedly nervous and intended to keep his temper until there was a safer chance to let it fly.

Waltstill sat down. "There's nothin' to talk over," she said. "I have done all that I promised my stepmother or the night she died, and now I am going. If there's a duty owed between daughter and father it ought to work both ways. I consider that I have done my share, and now I intend to seek happiness for myself. I have never had any, and I am starving for it."

"An' you'd leave me to git on the best I can after what I've done for you?" burst out the deacon, still trying to hold down his growing passion.

"You gave me my life, and I'm thankful to you for that, but you've given me little else, father."

"Hah! I fed an' clothed you?"

"No more than I have fed and clothed you. You've provided the raw food, and I've cooked and served it. You've bought cloth, and I have made shirts and overalls, and coats for you and kilted your socks and comforters and mittens. Not only have I toiled and saved and scrimped away my girlhood as you bide me, but I've earned for you. Who made the butter and took care of the hens and dried the apples and 'drew in' the rugs? Who raised and ground the peppers for sale and tended the geese that you might sell the feathers? No, father, I don't consider that I'm in your debt!"

Deacon Foxwell Baxter was completely nonplussed for the first time in his life. He had never allowed "ar gyfyn" in his household, and there had never been a clash of wills before this when he had not come off swiftly and beatly triumphant. This situation was complicated by the fact that he did not dare to apply the brakes as usual since there were more issues involved than ever before. He felt too stunned to deal properly with this daughter, having emptied all the vials of his wrath upon the other one and being, in consequence, somewhat enfeebled. It was always easy enough to cope with Patty. For her impertinence exhaled such rage that the argument took care of itself, and this grave young woman was a different matter. There she sat composedly on the edge of her wooden chair, her head tilted high, her color coming and going, her eyes shining steadily like fixed stars; there she sat, calmly announcing her intention of leaving her father to shift for himself. Yet the skies seemed to have no thought of falling! He felt that he must make another effort to assert his authority.

"Now, you take off your coat," he said, the pipe in his hand trembling as he stirred nervously in his chair. "You take your coat right off an' set down to the supper table same as usual, do you hear? But your victuals an' then go to your bed an' git over this crazy fit that Patience has started workin' in you. No more nonsense now! Do as I tell you!"

"I have made up my mind, father, and I'm no use arguing. All who try to live with you fall sooner or later. You have had four children, father. One boy ran away; the other did not mind being drowned. I fear, since life was so hard at home. You have just turned the third child out for a sin of deceit and disobedience she would never have committed—for her nature is as clear as crystal—you had ever loved her or considered her happiness. So I have done with you, unless in your old age God should bring you to such a pass that to one else will come to your assistance; then I'd see some how that you were cared for and nursed and made comfortable. You are not an old man; you are strong and healthy, and you have plenty of money to get a good housekeeper. I should decide differently perhaps if all this were not true."

"You lie! I haven't got plenty of money!" And the deacon struck the table a sudden blow that made the china in the cupboard rattle. "You've no notion what this house costs me, an' the food for the stock, an' you two girls, an' labor at the store, an' the bayfield, an' the taxes an' insurance! I've slaved from sunrise to sunset, but I ain't hardly been able to lay up a cent. I 'pose the neighbors have been fillin' you full o' tales about my mis'able little snivel an' makin' 'em into a fortune. Well, you won't git any of 'em, I promise you that!"

"You have plenty laid away. Everybody knows, so what's the use of denying it? Anyway, I don't want a penny of your money, father, so good-bye. There's enough cooked to keep you for a couple of days," and Waltstill rose from her chair and drew on her mittens.

Father and daughter confronted each other, the secret fury of the man met by the steady determination of the girl. The deacon was baffled, almost awed, by Waltstill's quiet self control, but at the very moment that he was half unconsciously glancing at her, it dawned upon him that he was bent on, and that she was mistress of the situation.

Where would she go? What were her plans? For definite plans she had, or she could not meet his eye with so resolute a gaze. If she did leave him how could he contrive to get her back again and so escape the scorn of the village, the averted look, the lessened trade?

"Where are you goin' now?" he asked, and though he tried his best, he could not for the life of him keep back one faint frown. "I 'spose, like your sister, you've got a man in your eye?" He chose this, to him, impossible suggestion as being the most insulting one that he could thrust at the moment.

"I have," replied Waltstill, "a man in my eye and in my heart. We should have been husband and wife before this had we not been kept apart by obstacles too stubborn for us to overcome. My way has chanced to open first, though it was none of my contriving."

Had the roof fallen in upon him the deacon could not have been more dumfounded. His tongue literally clung to the roof of his mouth. His face fell, and his mind, piercing eyes blinked under his slung brows as if seeking light.

Waltstill stirred the fire, closed the back oven and put the teapot on the back of the stove, hung up the long handled dipper on its accustomed nail over the sink and went to the door.

Her father collected his scattered wits and pulled himself to his feet by the arms of the high backed rocker. "You shan't step outside this room till you tell me where you're goin'!" he said when he found his voice.

"I have no wish to keep it secret. I am going to see if Mrs. Mason will keep me tonight. Tomorrow I shall walk down the river and get work at

"You might as well go to live on the poor farm!"

the mills, but on my way I shall stop at the Boyntons' to tell Ivory I am ready to marry him as soon as he's ready to take me."

This was enough to stir the blood of the deacon into one last fury.

been blind as a bat an' deaf as an adder!" And he gave the table another ringing blow before he leaned on it to gather strength.

"Of course it would be one of that crazy Boynton crew you'd take up with!" he roared. "Nothin' would suit either o' you girls but choosin' the biggest enemies I've got in the whole village!"

"You've never taken pains to make anything but enemies, so what could we do?"

"Ivory's a brave, strong, honorable man and a scholar too. I can work for him and help him earn and save. As I have you."

"How long's this been goin' on?" The deacon was choking, but he meant to get to the bottom of things while he had the chance.

"It hasn't gone on at all. He has never said a word to me, and I have always obeyed your will in those matters, but you can't hide love any more than you can hide hate. I know Ivory loves me, so I'm going to tell him that my duty is done here and I am ready to help him."

DEAD WHEN FOUND

William Heilman of Sheboygan, Wisconsin, loses Way on Beaver Island.

Friday evening Under-sheriff Fred Coon received a long distance call from Beaver Island, stating that a man had been lost on the island and to come over at once and bring the county's blood hound.

Coon left Saturday morning on the Beaver and immediately tried to find the trail of the unfortunate man. After several attempts to locate him he was found Monday.

The man who had become lost was William Heilman of Sheboygan, Wisconsin. Heilman had gone to the island on Thursday on a schooner. He had worked a part of the day and some time during the night disappeared. Friday a search was made for him, but he could not be found. When Under-sheriff Coon and the dog arrived he had been missing nearly twenty-four hours.

The trail was picked up but could not be followed on account of it being so dry that all scent had disappeared. The dog picked up the trail several times, following for a short distance, but as soon as it ran through the dry sand, it was impossible to follow it. Monday the search was again taken up and the body of Heilman was found about seven miles south of St. James, lying in a road in a swamp.

Heilman was engaged in the liquor business at Sheboygan, and leaves a wife. The remains were brought to this city Tuesday night and were shipped to Sheboygan Wednesday.

Ben Hur Tribe

Charlevoix the Beautiful, Court 135, Tribe of Ben Hur meet at the home of our Scribe Sister Iris Beattie Monday night, August 10, 1914. We were pleased to welcome two new members into our Court. A nice program was appreciated by all. After the business was over refreshments were served and a good time enjoyed by all. The next meeting will be held at the home of our teacher Sister Minerva Swails, August 24. All members are requested to be present.

Dr. Huget

Dr. J. Percival Huget of Detroit will preach at the Congregational church next Sunday morning. Dr. Huget is one of the most eloquent preachers in the Congregational denomination. No one of our summer preachers is more deservedly popular.

Slavers' Needle

Mrs. Ross Roberts, 33 years old, is in a serious condition at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Robinson, Petoskey, from a swelling on her arm. Physicians believe the swelling to be the result of the white slaver's hypodermic needle. Mrs. Roberts remembers that the pain in her arm started from an unexplainable pricking sensation while she sat next to a woman accompanied by a man in a G. R. & I. coach en route from Cadillac to Petoskey. Her arm has swollen steadily since that time.

Annual Picnic

Sixteen autos carrying sixty pioneer residents of Wolverine were in Petoskey last Thursday afternoon on an annual outing. The two oldest men of the party were John Ford and N. J. Hiller, each 82 years old. Some of the men who settled in that locality fifty years ago were in the gathering.

Mrs. Wilson Dead

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the first lady of the land, wife of President Wilson, died at the White House Thursday morning. Her death was caused by the result of a fall last spring, which injured her spine and caused a complication of nervous diseases. Her remains were taken to Rome, Georgia, for burial. But one other wife of a president has died in the White House in the history of the country.

BANNER CROP YEAR

Condition of Crops Throughout the State Best in Its History.

The time has come when it can be confidently asserted that this is to be a banner year for the farmers of Michigan. From all parts of the state reports of the crops have been received and the consensus of these reports show crops that make new records in quality and quantity. These reports are not altogether of crops in prospect which storm or pest may blight. They deal as well with the crops that are already accomplished facts, safely harvested and ready for market. Grains, root crops, vegetables, hay, beans, small fruits and tree fruits—the reports indicate that there is a bountiful yield in all of the great staples of Michigan. Weather conditions have been favorable throughout the state. Providence has been kind. In Michigan this will be a year of plenty and prosperity.

Secrets of Success.

Somewhat rules for success are wittily laid down by an anonymous writer in the following punning ways:

What is the secret of success?" asked the Sphinx.

Push, said the button.

Take pains, said the window.

Never be lead, said the pencil.

Always keep cool, said the ice.

Be up to date, said the calendar.

Never lose your head, said the barrel.

Make light of everything, said the fire.

Be sharp in all dealings, said the knife.

Do a driving business, said the hammer.

Aspire to great things, said the nutmeg.

Never do anything offhand, said the glove.

Spent much time in reflection, said the flute.

Find a good thing and stick to it, said the glue.

Make much of small things, said the microscope.

Strive to make a good impression, said the seal.—Exchange.

Notice.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

Lord, I don't know where you two girls got those loose ways of thinkin' an' actin'. Maybe he won't take you, an' then where'll you be? You won't get under my roof again when you've once left it, you can make up your mind to that."

"If you have any doubts about Ivory's being willing to take me you'd better drive along behind me and listen while I ask him."

Waitstill's tone had an exultant thrill of certainty in it. She threw up her head, glancing in what she was about to do. If she laid aside her usual reserve and voiced her thoughts openly it was not in the hope of convincing her father, but for the bliss of putting them into words and intoxicating herself by the sound of them.

"Come after me if you will, father, and watch the welcome I shall get. Oh, I have no fear of being turned out by Ivory Boynton. I can hardly wait to give him the joy I shall be bringing! It's selfish to rob him of the chance to speak first, but I'll do it!" And before Deacon Baxter could cross the room Waitstill was out of the kitchen door into the shed and flying down Town House hill like an arrow shot free from the bow.

The deacon followed close behind, hardly knowing why, but he was no match for the girl, and at last he stood helpless on the steps of the shed, shaking his fist and hurling terrible words after her, words that it was fortunate for her peace of mind she could not hear.

"A curse upon you both!" he cried savagely. "Not satisfied with disobeyin' an' defyin' me, you've put me to shame, an' now you'll be settin' the neighbors agin' me an' ruinin' my trade. If you was freezin' in the snow I wouldn't leave a blanket to you! If you was starvin' I wouldn't fling either of you a crust! Never shall you darken my doors again, an' never shall you get a penny of my money, not if I have to throw it into the river to spite you!"

Here his breath failed, and he stumbled out into the barn whinpering between his broken sentences like a whistled child.

"Here I am with nobody to milk, nor feed the hens; nobody to churn tomorrow, nor do the chores; a poor, miserable cropper, deserted by my children, with nobody to do a hand's turn! 'Thout bein' full for every step they take! I'll give 'em what they deserve, I don't know what, but I'll be even with 'em yet." And the deacon set his bony jaw in a way that meant his determination to stop at nothing.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Sentry Duty.

IVORY BOYNTON drove home from the woods that same afternoon by way of the bridge, in order to buy some provisions at the brick store. When he was still a long distance from the barn that divided the lane from the highway he espied a dark clad little speck he knew to be the deacon heading over the fence, waiting and longing as usual for his home coming, and his heart warmed at the thought of the boyish welcome that never failed.

The speck slipped quickly over the hard packed, shudding road, and the bells rang merrily in the clear, cold air, giving out a joyous sound that had no echo in Ivory's breast that day. He had just had a vision of happiness through another man's eyes. Was he always to stand outside the banqueting table, he wondered, and see others feasting while he hungered?

Now the little speck bounded from the fence, flew down the road to meet the speck and jumped in by the driver's side.

"I knew you'd come tonight," Rodman cried eagerly. "I told Aunt Boynton you'd come."

"How is she, well as common?" "No, not a bit well since yesterday morning, but Mrs. Mason says it's nothing worse than a cold. Mrs. Mason has just come home, and we've had a grand house-keeping today. She's washed and ironed and baked, and we've put Aunt Boynton in clean sheets and pillowcases, and her room's nice and warm, and I carried the cat in and put it on her bed to keep her company while I came to watch for you. Aunt Boynton let Mrs. Mason braid her hair and seemed to like her brushing it. It's been dreadful lonesome, and, oh, I am glad you came back, Ivory. Did you find any more spruce gum where you went this time?"

"Pounds and pounds, Rod; enough to bring me in nearly $100. I chanced on the greatest place I've found yet. I followed the wake of an old whirlwind that had left long furrows in the forest."

"I've told you how the thing works—and I tracked its course by the gum that had formed wherever the trees were wounded. It's hard, lonely work, Rod, but it pays well."

"If I could have been there maybe we could have got more. I'm good at climbing up trees."

"Yes, sometimes we'll go gum-picking together. We'll climb the trees like a couple of cats and take our knives and scrape off the precious lumps that are worth so much money to the drug-gists. You've let down the bars, I see."

"Course I knew you'd come tonight," said Rodman. "I felt it in my bones. We're going to have a splendid supper."

"Are we? That's good news," Ivory tried to make his face bright and interested, though his heart was like a lump of lead in his breast. "It's the least I can do for the poor little chap," he thought, "when he stays as caretaker in this lonesome spot. I wonder if I hadn't better drive into the barn, Rod, and leave the harness on Nick till I go in and see mother? Guess I will."

"She's hot, Aunt Boynton, hot and restless, but Mrs. Mason thinks that's all."

Ivory found his mother feverish, and her eyes were unattractively bright, but she was clear in mind and cheerful, too, sitting up in bed to breathe the better, while the Maltese rat sung-gled under her arm and purred peacefully.

"The cat is Rod's idea," she said smilingly, but in a very weak voice.

"He is a great nurse. I should never have thought of the cat myself, but she gives me more comfort than all the medicine."

Ivory and Rodman drew up to the supper table, already set in the kitchen, but before Ivory took his seat he softly closed the door that led into the living room. They ate their beans and brown bread and the mince pie that had been the "splendid" feature of the meal, as reported by the boy, and when they had finished and Rodman was clearing the table Ivory walked to the window, lighting his pipe the while, and stood soberly looking out on the snowy landscape. One could scarcely tell it was twilight, with such sweeps of whiteness to catch every gleam of the dying day.

"Drop work a minute and come here, Rod," he said at length. "Come you keep a secret?"

"Course I can! I'm chock full of 'em now, and nobody could dig one of 'em out of me with a pickaxe."

"Oh, well, if you're full you naturally couldn't hold another!"

"I could try to squeeze it in if it's a nice one," coaxed the boy.

"I don't know whether you'll think it's a nice one. Rod, for it breaks up one of your plans. I'm not sure myself how nice it is, but it's a very big, unexpected, startling one. What do you think—your favorite, Patty, has gone and got married!"

"Patty married?" cried Rod, then hastily putting his hand over his mouth to hush his too loud speaking.

"Yes. She and Mark Wilson ran away last Monday, drove over to Al-leghen, N. H., and were married without telling a soul. Deacon Baxter discovered everything this afternoon, like the old fox that he is, and turned Patty out of the house."

"Mean old skunk!" exclaimed Rod excitedly, all the impatient mischief rising in his ten-year-old breast. "Is she going to live with the Wilsons?"

"The Wilsons don't know yet that Mark is married to her, but I met him driving like mad, just after I had left Patty, and told him everything that had happened and did my best to cool him down and keep him from murdering his new father-in-law by showing him it would serve no real purpose now."

"Did he look married and all different?" asked Rod curiously.

"Yes, he did, and more like a man than ever he looked before in his life. We talked everything over together, and he went home at once to break the news to his family without even going to take a peep at Patty. I couldn't bear to have them meet till he had something cheerful to say to the poor little soul. When I met her by Uncle Bart's shop she was trudging along in the snow like a druggled but-terfly and crying like a baby."

Sympathetic tears dimmed Rodman's eyes. "I can't bear to see girls cry, Ivory. I just can't bear it, especially Patty."

"Neither can I, Rod. I came pretty near crying her eyes out, but pulled up, remembering she wasn't a child, but a married lady. Well, now we come to the point."

"Isn't Patty's being married the point?" "No, only part of it. Patty's being sent away from home leaves Waitstill alone with the deacon, do you see? And if Patty is your favorite, Waitstill is mine. I might as well own up to that."

"She's mine, too," cried Rod. "They are both my favorites, but I always thought Patty was the suitablest for me to marry if she'd wait for me. Waitstill is too grand for a boy."

"She's too grand for anybody, Rod. Well, she's too grand for anybody except"—and here Rod's shy, wistful voice trailed off into discreet silence.

"Now, I had some talk with Patty, and she thinks Waitstill will have no trouble with her father just at present. She says he lavished so much rage upon her that there'll be none left for anybody else for a day or two. And, moreover, that he will never dare to go too far with Waitstill because she's so useful to him. I'm not afraid of his beating or injuring her so long as he keeps his sober senses. If he's ever rightly had any. But I don't like to think of his upbraiding her and breaking her heart with his cruel talk just after she's lost the sister that's been her only companion. And Ivory's mind troubled as he tilted his pipe. He had no confidence in this quaint, ten-ner hearted, old-fashioned little lad, to whom he had grown to speak his mind as if he were a man of his own age, and Rod, in the same way, had gradually learned to understand and sympathize.

"It's dreadful lonesome on Town-House hill," said the boy in a moaned tone.

"Dreadful lonesome," echoed Ivory with a shiver. "And I don't dare leave mother until her fever dies down's bit and she sleeps. Now, do you remember the night that she was taken ill, and we shared the watch?"

Rodman held his breath. "Do you mean you're going to let me help just as if I was big?" he asked, speaking through a great lump in his throat.

"There are only two of us, Rod. You're rather young for this piece of work, but you're trusty—you're trusty."

"Am I to keep watch on the deacon?" "That's it, and this is my plan: Nick will have had his feed. You're to drive to the bridge when it gets a little darker and hitch in Uncle Bart's horse ahead, covering Nick well. You're to go into the brick store, and while you're getting some groceries wrapped up, listen to anything the men say, to see if they know what's happened. When you're hung about as long as you dare leave your bundle and say you'll call in again for it. Then see if Baxter's store is open. I don't believe it will be, and if it isn't look for a light in his kitchen window and prowl about till you know that Waitstill and the deacon have gone up to their bed rooms. Then go to Uncle Bart's and find out if Patty is there."

Rod's eyes grew bigger and bigger. "Shall I talk to her?" he asked, "and what'll I say?"

"No, just ask if she's there. If she's gone Mark has made it right with his family and taken her home. If she hasn't why, God knows how that matter will be straightened out. Anyway, she has a husband now, and he seems to value her, and Waitstill is alone on the top of that wind swept hill!"

"I'll go. I'll remember everything," cried Rodman, in the seventh heaven of delight at the responsibilities Ivory was heaping upon him.

"Don't stay beyond 8 o'clock, but come back and tell me everything you've learned. Then, if mother grows no worse, I'll walk back to Uncle Bart's shop and spend the night there—just to be near, that's all."

"You couldn't leave Waitstill, even if she called," Rod said.

"Couldn't I? A man's ears are very sharp under certain circumstances. I believe if Waitstill needed help I could hear her breathe! Besides, I shall be up and down the hill till I know all's well, and at sunrise I'll go up and hide behind some of Baxter's buildings till I see him get his breakfast and go to the store. Now wash your dishes. And Ivory caught up his rap from a hook behind the door.

"Are you going to the barn?" asked Rodman.

"No, only down to the gate for a minute. Mark said that if he had a good change he'd send a boy with a note and get him to put it under the stone gate post. It's too soon to expect it, perhaps, but I can't seem to keep still."

Rodman tied a gingham apron around his waist, carried the teakettle to the sink and poured the dishpan full of boiling water, then dipped the cups and plates in and out, wiped them and replaced them on the table, gave the bean platter a special polish and set the half mince pie and the butter dish in the cellarway.

"A boy has to do most everything in this family," he sighed to himself. "I don't mind washing dishes, except the nasty frying pan and the sticky bean pot, but what I'm going to do tonight is different! Here he glowed and tingled with anticipation. "I know what they call it in the story books—it's sentry duty, and that's heavier work for a boy than dish washing."

Which, however, depends a good deal upon circumstances and somewhat on the point of view.

BIBLE STUDY ON

WICKED VINE-DRESSERS.

Matthew 21:33-46—Aug. 16.

"The Stone that the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner."

Matthew 21:34.

NOT only did the Redeemer teach chiefly by parables, but nearly all of those parables related to the Kingdom. The reason for this is plain. The Divine Plan calls for the setting up of the Kingdom of Righteousness by Divine Power for the overthrowing of the Prince of Darkness, whose reign of six thousand years has been a Reign of Sin and Death. Today's lesson points indelibly to the Kingdom.

While the whole world lay in sin and under Divine sentence of death, God plucked in the world a root of Promise, a hope. This Promise, made to Abraham, foretold that his seed would eventually become very powerful and would cause God's blessing to fill the earth and roll away the curse. In due time this Promise came to the nation of Israel, Abraham's posterity and heirs of the Promise.

Thus God planted a vineyard in the world, the Jewish nation, bound to Him by their Law Covenant. He set a hedge about them—the Divine promise that as long as they were faithful and loyal to God, they would be thoroughly protected against their enemies. Jehovah Himself was their Watch tower. He placed as watchmen the Prophets, who warned the people in respect to every breaking down of the wall; for this protection could be broken down only by disloyalty, carelessness, sin, on Israel's part.

The Original Vine-Dressers. While the entire nation of Israel is represented by the vineyard, the husbandmen—were the religious leaders. These vine-dressers became so-called and acted as if they were the owners, and not merely the Owner's servants. Even in their speech they became accustomed to call the people "our people," "my people," etc. Thus they failed to glorify God properly, and felt themselves to be more than the servants of God, honored in being permitted to be vine-dressers in His vineyard.

In due time the Owner, Jehovah, sent His servants, the Prophets, to Israel. These servants and their messages became tests of the loyalty of the vine-dressers and of the character of the people. But alas! the vine-dressers' pride and desire to show off before the people prompted the mistreatment of the Prophets. Some of the servants they beat, others they stoned, others they killed.

Finally the Owner sent His Son. The Bible informs us that God foreknew that Israel's rulers would crucify the Son. But the parable states the matter as though the Owner had said, "They will reverence My Son." Surely the Jewish rulers should have recognized Him of whom people declared, "Never man spake like this Man." Surely they should have hearkened to His Message, should have repented of their sins and come back through Him into harmony with God.

However, the spirit of selfishness and self-conceit often leads his possessors to monstrous acts which afterward appal even themselves. The Jewish Doctors, clergy of that time, perceived that Jesus, the Son of God, Representative of the Owner of the vineyard, exerted a mighty influence over the people. They reasoned that to whatever extent His cause should prevail, their power, their influence, their titles, their honors of men, would fade.

In their exasperation against Jesus, the vine-dressers determined that His death was necessary for the success of their theories and plans. They did not realize that their course was the very one which would lead to the destruction of that typical kingdom of God, that typical vineyard. The parable was fulfilled, God's Judgment came upon the Jew.

The New Vine-Dressers. The Lord said that they were wicked vine-dressers. He appointed new ones—the twelve Apostles, St. Paul taking the place of Judas. Moreover, He started a new vineyard, putting into it only the true Vine. Of this vineyard our Lord said, "I am the Vine; ye are the branches." Centuries after century these true branches of the true Vine have been planted by baptism into death with their Master and have been bringing forth the precious fruits of righteousness. Ere long, we believe, this fruitage will all be gathered and, by the resurrection "change," be transplanted into Heavenly conditions.

The Scripture also represents the Church by a pyramid, which has five corner-stones, the chief one of which, the top stone, is itself a perfect pyramid. Jesus, rejected by the Jews, crucified, is the Chief Corner Stone of this great Temple of God, the Church. Already He is glorified, and His Church will soon be united to Him.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

Cathedral Choir, a Unique Musical Organization Which Will Be Here Chautauqua Week

On the first evening of the two day musical festival at our forthcoming Chautauqua the Cathedral Choir, which has traveled from east to west during the past year, will present a program which is bound to appeal to every listener. The repertoire of the Cathedral Choir includes short modern oratorios by such composers as Buck, Stahner and Schuecker; also a number of old hymns, secular solos, duets, quartets and choruses of a very high order, finally closing with a grand finale of an operatic nature. There are also in this choir—a ladies' quartet, a male quartet and a pianist. Following the appearance of this organization at Aberdeen, S. D., the local Lyceum committee man wrote to the Redpath as follows: "Your group of artists met a large and appreciative audience in the Normal auditorium last evening. People are loud in their praise of the work which the singers did." From Elkhart, Ind., a committee man writes: "Our people are very enthusiastic over the performance. I think you have struck in this combination more than entertainment—a moral force."

Noted Dramatic Baritone, Who Has Sung With World Famous Orchestras, Coming Chautauqua Week

MARCUS A. KELLERMAN

MARCUS A. KELLERMAN, who is to appear here during Chautauqua week, is one of the greatest dramatic baritones in America today. He has toured as vocal soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch, the Minneapolis Symphony under Emil Oberhoffer, the St. Paul Symphony under Walter Rothwell, and his appearances with the Boston, the Theodore Thomas and the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestras have gained for him universal commendation. Kellerman is a native American, but some of his greatest successes have been achieved in foreign countries. In Germany, for three years, he sang leading baritone roles at the Berlin Royal Opera. It was while achieving success as an organist that Kellerman discovered his ability as a vocalist, and, appreciating the increased opportunity offered by the field of song, he prepared himself for the task. After a few years Kellerman abandoned his brilliant, promising operatic career to engage in lieder and oratorio singing. The great success he has already attained indicates that concert patrons are quite fortunate, even though they have lost an artist of first rank.

SIX AND SIX PLAN

High School Course of Study is to be Revised in Many Places.

The high schools of Michigan are each year increasing in importance. The last five years have seen a remarkable movement of rural students to the high school. There has also been a marked effort on the part of the school authorities to make the high school teach the things that will be of most use to the boys and girls. For the purpose of aiding in this problem the Department of Public Instruction will publish this month a suggestive course of study for Michigan high schools. It will indicate work along four distinct lines: College preparatory, domestic arts, agriculture and commercial. The work will be so outlined that pupils may start to choose the line they wish to pursue in the seventh grade instead of the ninth, as at present. This will make the division between the elementary school and high school come with the seventh grade. It is believed the large number of children who now leave school in the seventh and eighth grades will be held in school by giving them work which meets especially with their needs. This organization will also enable schools to teach all grades above the sixth by the departmental plan, that is by having a special teacher for each subject. Moreover, the pupil will advance by passing subjects instead of grades.

Present conditions in the Michigan schools are such that the proposed plan can be adopted easily. Several cities of the state have already tried the plan. In other states also the plan is meeting with favor wherever tried. Because it divides the school course into two parts, each covering six years, the proposed organization is commonly called the Six and Six Plan.

HOW THE BRIDE CAN STORE HER LINGERIE.

The bride to be up to date should have a cupboard full of shelves as well as a bureau full of drawers to accommodate her lingerie. And these shelves must be fitted with an edging of ribbon and lace and chignon put on in the manner of pantry shelf paper.

This edging costs, according to the elaborateness of its pattern and the fineness of its material, a goodly price. But it can be made less expensive.

It consists of a strip of satin ribbon or a beaded strip of satin ribbon three inches wide. Over this lace is placed and the two are fastened together with chignon roses or little satin flowers. The edging is tacked on the edge of the shelves under the little flowers. Thumb tacks can be used for the tacking.

Dust collecting? Of course it is. And foolish and frivolous to boot. But it is duty and a little dash for the piles of filmy lingerie which are shoved away on the bride's shelves.

WITH THE COOK.

How to Make Deliciously Toothsome
Jams Without Sugar.

This is a fine way to make jam without sugar. Wash, dry and pick the fruit and boil it thoroughly cooked. Soft fruit, such as currants, etc., requires no water, but it is better to put a very little with stone fruit. Sweeten to taste with saccharin, and if the jam is a red one add a few drops of cochineal or carmine to color. Draw the jam to one side of the fire, allow the jam to keep hot, but do not let it boil again. Next prepare the jars most carefully, for the whole success of the jam depends on the thoroughness with which this is done. Unless every germ is exterminated the fruit will ferment.

Choose glass jars, as these are less likely to contain any flaw than the earthenware jars. Wash the jars with strong soda water, rinse them in hot fresh water, wipe them, being especially careful to dry the crevices. Soak the covering papers, use good parchment, dry them, and leave them till wanted on a clean cloth. Place a small table within reach of the preserving pan, and on it put a tray with a clean plate, containing a small bowl of water, a box of matches, two hotpans, a stick of sulphur and as many small bits of sulphur as there are jars.

Light the stick of sulphur over the coal shovel and hold it in the left hand. Take a jar and hold it upside down over the sulphur for a few minutes, and when it is full of the sulphur fumes set it on the tray, upside down, so as to drain the fumes. Put the shovel on the window sill outside and shut the window.

Stick a tiny piece of sulphur on the end of one of the hotpans. Take up the jar and fill it quickly with fruit in within half an inch of the top of the jar, using the soup-ladle to do this. If any jam spills on the edge of the jar wipe it quickly but thoroughly off. Light the small piece of sulphur at the end of the hotpan and let it fall burning on top of the preserve, using the second hotpan to push it off the point of the other.

Cover the jar quickly with the parchment and tie it down tightly with string. Proceed in this way till all the jars are filled. Let them stand for twenty-four hours, then store them away in a cool, dry, dark place. If exposed to light the jam loses color. On opening a jar for use, remove the piece of sulphur. It does not leave the slightest flavor. After opening, however, use the jam at once, as it will not keep.

DIET AND COLOR.

What Man Eats Seems to Determine the Shade of His Skin.

What you eat determines your color, according to Berthold, a German hygienist, not necessarily that you yourself could select any change of color, but your ancestors for thousands of years have unconsciously been influenced by the food they have eaten and the drinks they have drunk.

For instance, the original men were black, says Berthold. Their chief diet was of vegetables and fruits, he explains, and that are not unlike iron. Dark browns and blacks result from this combination. It is a scientific fact that negroes who drink milk and eat meat are never as dark as those who eat vegetables.

He goes on to add that the Indian is red because for hundreds and perhaps thousands of years he has taken into his system the haemoglobin or red material in the blood of animals which he has killed for their food.

Again, Mongols are yellow because they have descended from races that were fruit eating and who, making their way into the deepest nooks and widest plains of Asia, developed into shepherds and lived largely on milk. Of course it is known that milk contains a certain per cent of chlorine and has a decidedly bleaching effect. In the case of Caucasians they are said to have become white by adding salt to their foods, which common salt is a strong chloride and powerful in bleaching the skin. Chicago Tribune.

ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION.

How the Pulmotor is Used to Restore Normal Breathing.

The pulmotor is an automatic resuscitation apparatus which produces a flow of inhaled and exhaled air by a single nozzle, the rhythm of respiration adjusting itself automatically to the dimensions of the lungs, and thus the breathing is produced of a seemingly lifeless body beginning to breathe regularly as soon as the pulmotor is placed in connection with it. The pulmotor works directly on the respiratory organs and if the spark of life still exists will fan it into a flame and give the heart and lungs a chance to fight.

The pulmotor is used on persons overcome by gas, electric shock, apparently drowned or in other cases where the breathing of the patient has been seriously impaired or stopped entirely and where there still remains a slight heart action. Its motive power is an oxygen cylinder containing this gas, which will supply a 100 per cent mixture of air and oxygen to the patient for forty minutes. It has a great advantage over artificial respiration by hand in that it forces larger amounts of oxygenated air into the lungs than it is possible by ordinary methods of artificial respiration, and the work can be kept up longer.—Philadelphia Press.

Land Tilled.

The department of agriculture estimates that there are 1,140,000,000 acres of tillable land in the United States and that only 27 per cent of this immense area is under cultivation. It might add that of the 27 per cent actually cultivated comparatively few acres are handled in such a way as to show anything like their maximum production.

Here is food for the pessimist. The man who feels that the country is nearing actual exhaustion may find cheer in the thought that little more than a quarter of the available agricultural land is being made productive. Supply inevitably meets demand, and as the demand for agricultural products increases the supply will be enlarged by the development of regions which have not been touched by the plow. Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Literal.

William Chase, the painter, is a teacher whose criticisms are awaited with some trepidation by his pupils. One "criticism day" Mr. Chase came to the canvas of a pretensions and vain young man who was considering with obvious complacency a portrait which he had smeared thereon.

"It's coming out nicely," he told Mr. Chase. Chase said not a word but took his palette, paint knife and rag and worked industriously at the canvas until there was a clean surface there. "Ah, yes," he remarked, "it's coming out nicely."—New York Post.

Sawdust For Fruit Packing.

Packing Malaga grapes in California redwood sawdust instead of cork dust is now being seriously considered by Spanish shippers of Malaga fruit. The former product is a better preservative than cork dust and is now being adopted in preference to the latter by grape packers in California. The principal question involved in the spread of the use of redwood sawdust abroad is whether with duty added to the cost of freight it can be sold in Spain as cheaply as the Spanish cork dust. Spanish shippers have been satisfied with the preservative qualities of cork for many years, and it will be difficult to get them to adopt a substitute, no matter how good, if at a higher cost.—Consular Report.

Unsinkable Lifeboat.

Recently an English inventor, exhibited upon the Thames a lifeboat which is claimed to be unsinkable. It is a cylinder, pointed at both ends, with sliding doors, which may be tightly battened, and affords a refuge in emergency for eighty people. This strange-looking craft may be launched in a few seconds, according to the inventor, and is buoyant in the extreme, carrying its large load easily and safely in a heavy sea. Air is supplied to the interior by means of a small pump.

Removing Rust.

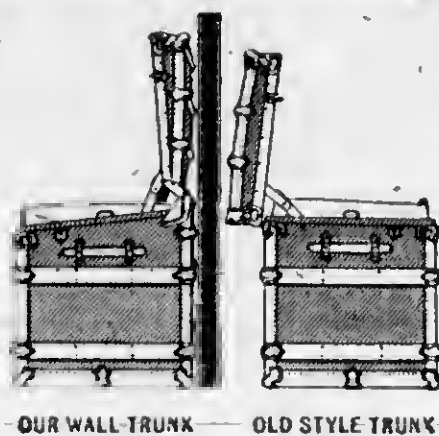

Rust on iron or steel may be easily removed if the metal is held in a hot caustic soda or hot caustic potash solution. This softens the rust so that it can be easily removed by the acid pickle. In pickling castings the best mixture has been found in one containing from 5 to 10 per cent of sulphuric acid. This mixture has much greater effect than one containing a larger percentage of the acid.—American Machinist.

THE CANDIDATE OF THE PEOPLE

Jos. E. Bayliss' Record Will Bear the Closest Scrutiny.

Has Always Championed Cause of People and Will Be Their Choice for Congressman.

An important primary election is to be held next Tuesday. Under this system of nominating candidates it becomes not only the privilege, but the duty of every patriotic citizen to consider carefully the qualifications of each candidate for office in his political party and vote for candidates who are clean men, and men whose experience and training have best fitted them for the office they seek. Voters! study carefully, for yourselves, the qualifications of the men who have announced themselves for your suffrage. Do not let some politician dictate to you the candidate you are to support. Think for yourselves, and in thus carrying out the spirit of the primary law the nominees of your party will best represent you and a government by the people for the people be most nearly obtained.

Possibly no nominee at the coming primary is more vital to your interests as well as your state's interests than the nominee for congress. You have two men to choose from. Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo is one of these candidates. Mr. Bayliss is not depending upon the politicians of the district nor upon hired political support to further his campaign. He is distinctly a candidate of the people—your candidate. His first entrance into politics was when as a young man he was chosen as sheriff of Chippewa county, the county in which he has lived all his life. He was elected with an overwhelming majority and displayed his ability as an officer to a marked degree. He was again elected to the same office and filled it to the satisfaction of all. In 1912 he made the run for the state legislature and at the election received 2000 out of 3000 votes cast.

Mr. Bayliss' record while serving these two years in the state legislature will bear the closest scrutiny. He always stood for what he thought was right without fear and at no time can it be found where he tried to evade an issue. He is not a wobbler—never wavered in favor of a measure and when it came to a vote cast his vote against what he had worked for. Mr. Bayliss has ALWAYS stood for the right, fearless in speech, dauntless in act, regardless of personal sacrifice, if principle was at stake.

His public life is an open book, and his close attention to duty, his untiring industry and his practical wisdom will make him a safe, wise and conservative legislator. He has the interest and welfare of the people at heart and under all circumstances has the courage of his convictions. He is a man of affairs and a successful business man, and the example of his life can be held up as a model for worthy emulation. He is possessed of that homely and invaluable quality called common sense. His training in business affairs and his careful and thorough study of the needs of the country give him a grasp of the public questions which few possess. Although not a wealthy man, he has traveled extensively from coast to coast several times. He has also traveled from the Arctic circle to Mexico. He has a large acquaintance among many of the prominent men in the country, especially the members of the present Michigan delegation to congress. At the time of the Titanic disaster he was appointed sergeant-at-arms of the United States senate and had charge under Senator William Alden Smith of the investigations held both at the Waldorf hotel in New York and in the senate at Washington. Here he came in contact with a good many of our prominent men, who are his friends.

During the legislative session he was chairman of the Federal Relations committee of the house, having been chosen for this position because of his acquaintance and the further fact that he had served in four different departments of the government service, having resided on the border, and had made a study of international law, the knowledge of which was required in his work on the border, and which knowledge might be useful in the next congress in straightening out the difficulty with the foreign nations now at war.

It is our opinion he will best serve the interests of his constituents and in a careful, able and conservative manner. His record as a law maker shows that he has been prominently identified with every really beneficial progressive measure passed while he has been in the legislature. Politically Mr. Bayliss is a strong Republican, but not partisanly offensive. No able or better man could be found to represent the 11th congressional district.

Of late some of the enemies of Mr. Bayliss have accused him of being "dry" in dry counties and "wet" in wet counties, also other insolent and slanderous charges as to the fitness of some of the measures he championed. It is scarcely conceivable that Mr. Bayliss' opponents would resort to such a low style of politics. The substitution of base, bold assertion for truth, and insinuation for proof, is characteristic of repudiated ward heelers, not honest men. It is no secret that in the strenuous fight Joseph E. Bayliss has made all his life for the uprooting of crookedness in official position, the elimination of graft, the overthrow of boss rule, he has incurred the ill will of men who have profited through them. But neither hope of political success nor any other inducement has been able to turn him aside from the ambition of his life, that he might be the instrument by which the people might regain their rights and political hucksters and charlatans be relegated to private life. And he has always won. Both in his home county and in the state he has stood for the rule of the many as against the dictation of the few. He has trusted the people and they have triumphed with him.

The day when the people are to be deceived by lying insinuations, in the form of paid editorials in unscrupulous newspapers, is past. The people have learned to know Bayliss. They know that he has never voted or spoken for a single law that he did not believe would be for their interest. He has always championed the cause of the people, and will continue to do so if chosen as their representative in congress.

We believe he is possessed of every qualification necessary to successfully serve the people of the eleventh congressional district, and heartily urge his nomination. He has conducted a clean, honest campaign and will receive a big majority of the votes cast at the primary next Tuesday.

LAUNCH GUTTED BY GAS EXPLOSION

Another Fine Boat Destroyed by Fire Tuesday Afternoon.

Marshall Weaver Burned About the Face and Neck While Fighting Flames.

An explosion of gasoline was the cause of the destruction by fire of another fine launch about two o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

The fire occurred in the boathouse of A. L. Pfau of Terre Haute, Indiana, located adjoining the building occupied by Hamilton & Son on the south shore of Round Lake. Marshall Weaver, who had charge of the launch, the A. L. P., was getting it ready for an afternoon's cruise. He started the engine in the boathouse and was about to shut it down when an explosion occurred. It was thought it was caused by the engine back-firing or an explosion in the base. In a second the launch was a mass of flames. Weaver tried to put out the flames with a Pyrene extinguisher, but they had gained too much headway.

The fire department responded promptly to the alarm sent in and soon had the flames under control. The launch was badly burned, practically everything being destroyed with the exception of the hull. The roof of the boathouse was burned and adjoining buildings scorched.

Weaver was burned about the face, neck and hands while trying to extinguish the fire. The boat was valued at $1000 and carried some insurance.

Hamilton & Son's loss was small. The A. L. P. was a 25-foot gasoline runabout built by Louis Mercier some four years ago. It was one of the best and speediest boats owned by our summer people.

Myrtle Young & Son wrote the insurance on the boat and boathouse just burned. Did they write yours? 331

LOOKS AS IF FRANK D. SCOTT REPEATEDLY FAVORED CORPORATIONS

Was Very Active in His Efforts to Defeat the Yeo Bill, Which if Passed, Would Have Made Lumbermen Pay Taxes on Forest Products in Transit—Sympathies Not With the People.

To the Electors of the Eleventh Congressional District of Michigan:

Before deciding upon the man who will receive your vote for the Republican nomination to congress you should carefully read the following and investigate. It is another illustration of the attitude and leaning of Frank D. Scott in matters of legislation.

During the 1911 session of the Michigan legislature Representative Yeo of West Branch introduced in the house what was known as house bill number 433. This was a bill to repeal section 3838 of the compiled laws of 1897, relative to the taxation of forest products. This old law prevented supervisors of townships from assessing forest products such as logs, ties, posts, telephone poles, wood, etc., when piled or banked on the bank of any stream, lake, pond or other water of the state, but made them assessable only at the home office of the owner or agent in charge. It will readily be seen that this law was the means of taking a large amount of taxes away from the townships and giving the taxes to the cities and villages. It enabled the cities and villages to tax personal property located miles away in the townships. In most cases the city assessor never knew of the existence of the property and the same escaped taxation entirely. Supervisors of townships all over the state had fought the law, but were powerless.

The Yeo bill would have made this class of property assessable in the place where it actually was situated on the second Monday in April, no matter whether in transit or not. The bill was passed in the house by an unanimous vote and given immediate effect. See House Journal 1911, page 949.

The corporations were opposed to the measure. Having no chance to kill it in the house, they directed their efforts to the senate. Senator Cartier, the Ludington millionaire lumberman, was active against the bill. Senator FRANK D. SCOTT of Alpena, now a candidate for congress against Joseph E. Bayliss, took charge of the opposition and through his efforts defeated the measure by a close vote. He worked steadily against it, spoke against the bill on the floor of the senate and voted against it. But for his opposition the bill would have passed easily. If he had simply voted in favor of the bill it would have become law. But Mr. Scott voted with the corporations. See Senate Journal 1911, page 1225.

This conduct of Frank D. Scott deserves the severest censure and condemnation. It can be accounted for in no other way than as an unanswerable proof of his natural tendency and leaning toward special interests and away from the people. Because of his vote on this one measure alone the people should be convinced that he cannot be relied upon, and HE SHOULD NOT RECEIVE THE VOTE OF A SINGLE FARMER, WORKINGMAN OR ANY OTHER MAN IN THE ENTIRE ELEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

If you doubt this statement and wish to investigate you can find the house and senate journals in the office of your county clerk.

This is not the only instance of Mr. Scott's leaning toward the corporations. In the 1913 session he voted against the bill to compel railroads to provide sanitary drinking cups on all trains. (See Senate Journal, page 1372.) In 1911 he declined to vote on a bill to provide better sanitary conditions on railroad trains. (Senate Journal, page 1219.) His sympathies were not with the people where the railroads were interested.

In the 1912 session Mr. Scott voted in favor of the iniquitous "Callaghan bill," which if passed would have cost the state $30,000 and taken the work provided for therein outside the state and given it to a "foreign" corporation. For this vote he has been censured by labor organizations all over the state. The bill passed the senate, but, fortunately for the people, it was killed in the house by Mr. Bayliss' influence and vote.

To sum it up, Mr. Scott has shown by his conduct and his record that he is a friend of the corporations. Mr. Bayliss has on every occasion proven himself to be a firm and consistent representative of the people. The people now have an opportunity to choose between the two. If they vote for Frank Scott they will make a mistake which may cost them dear. May the wisdom of our fathers guide each and every man afloat when he enters the booth to cast his ballot on August 25th.

THE PEOPLE WILL DECIDE

As to the Fitness of the Two Congressional Candidates.

Scott's Effort to Dodge Alliance With Liquor Interest Proves Futile.

It is amusing as well as instructive to watch the efforts of the friends of Frank D. Scott to prevent circulation of the report of the secret session of the Delta County Liquor Dealers Association endorsing his candidacy for the congressional nomination. Why should they deny any knowledge of the endorsement? Or, does Mr. Scott really deny knowledge when he says: "It seems strange that I would not know of it if the endorsement was made." We venture the assertion that it would be strange indeed if he did not know about it, as he was in close consultation with John J. Cleary several days before the meeting and Cleary is the active spirit of the liquor dealers association as well as the Democratic boss of Delta county. If the people ask you, Mr. Scott, whether you gave John Cleary to understand that you wanted his support, what will your answer be? Did you know what the nature of that support would be?

Your friends say "Show us the proof." We reply that we owe no duty to the supporters and partisans of Mr. Scott to submit to them the evidence of their own doings. In the first place it would do no good because "There are none so blind as those who will not see." In the second place, they do not constitute the jury in this matter. The people of the eleventh congressional district are the jury men. They will decide whether a candidate for office who makes repeated visits to the leader of a liquor dealers association, or any other organization, does so for the purpose of securing political support. If these visits were not satisfactory to Cleary, why did he endorse Mr. Scott and why did the Morning Press—a newspaper owned and controlled by Cleary and the recognized organ of the liquor interests—immediately begin to boost Mr. Scott and attack Mr. Bayliss? The answer is easy and plain. The verdict of the people who are opposed to such transactions will be against Mr. Scott. Equivocation and feigned ignorance will not satisfy the jury. Actions speak louder than words and it is not necessary to produce proof of the inside workings of secret meetings.

We recognize the right of any organization to support any man it sees fit for congress or any other office. We also recognize the right of any man to refuse to support a candidate for office endorsed by such organization. There are many men who vote against local option for business or other reasons of their own, but these same men will go no farther. They will refuse to suffer the domination of a liquor dealers organization in the matter of selecting candidates for office. The time is past for such methods in politics. The proofs show Mr. Scott to be a politician of the old type. He has evidently failed to learn the lessons taught by the events of the past few years.

In striking contrast are the methods of Mr. Bayliss. Always a champion of the rights of the people, opposed to bossism and the control of the many by a few, he is going on his way manfully, straightforward and frankly, to the voters with nothing to conceal or deny. He is proud of his record, as he has a right to be, and stands squarely upon it, win or lose, and when nominated and elected, as he will be, he will go congress untrammelled and unfettered by promises or alliances of any kind except the promise to the people, as a whole, to be true and faithful to the last.

DIED AT GRAND RAPIDS

Frank P. Brown, Well Known in This City, Passed Away Sunday Night.

Frank P. Brown, son of P. S. Brown, died at his home in Grand Rapids Sunday evening after a few days' illness. His father received a dispatch Sunday stating that his condition was serious and was preparing to go to his home when a later message came that he was dead.

At the time of his death Mr. Brown was 70 years of age. He was born in this city and lived here until he was about 22 years old. At the time of his death he held the responsible position of manager of the Grand Rapids branch of the Huron Cement Company.

Frank Brown will be missed by a large circle of acquaintance, not only in Charlevoix but everywhere he was known. His remains were brought to this city Thursday and taken to the home of his father, where services were held at 2:00 o'clock. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

He leaves a wife, father, brother and sisters, who have the sympathy of the entire community.

Lost.

August 17th, about 6 p.m., on Bridge street, small black purse, blue moiré lining, containing about $14.75. Reward if returned to 708 South Bridge street. 331—pd

FALLS HEIR TO MILLIONS

Peter Smith of Charlevoix One of the Heirs to Vast Estate.

Estate Consists of $500,000,000 in Cash Besides Valuable Coal Lands and Real Estate.

Peter Smith of this city, who for the past two or three years has conducted a bakery on Bridge street, is one of the heirs to an estate valued at something like a quarter of a billion dollars.

The origin of this vast estate dates back for something like a hundred years and reminds one of a fairy tale. Way back in the early days Mr. Smith's great grandfather, one Mr. Hilt, settled in the Mohawk Valley in Pennsylvania, and acquired considerable property. Among his holdings were some 800 hundred acres of land along the Delaware river. Upon this land deposits of coal were discovered and it was leased for 99 years to promoters, who proceeded to develop the land and which proved to be the richest deposits in the east.

The terms of the lease were such that royalties were paid, which during the life of the lease have accumulated until they have reached the vast sum of over $500,000,000. Advertisements were placed in many of the leading papers, and last week Mr. Smith left for the east to claim his share.

From what we can learn, Mr. Smith's mother was the granddaughter of Hilt, thus being his great grand father making him one of the heirs of nearest kin. Search among the existing relatives reveal that there are but thirty-five now living, all of whom are to meet in the next few days for the settlement of the estate. Mrs. Smith stated to the Courier, that their interest in the accumulated money would amount to something like $14,000,000, besides their equity in the 800 acres of coal lands, about two miles of valuable frontage on the Delaware river, and valuable real estate at various places.

The effect of their good fortune seems to have little effect upon Mrs. Smith. She says if all turns out regarding the legacy as anticipated they will make an effort to do as much good with the money as possible. She also stated they would always be the same every-day common people as they have been in the past and that it would take more than being heirs to vast fortune to make them forget their friends.

SLANDEROUS STATEMENTS REFUTED

Opponents of Joe Bayliss Adopt Desperate Tactics as a Last Resort.

Voters, What Do You Think of This Kind of Campaign Methods? Is It Decent? Is It Square?

The Charlevoix Sentinel of August 13th printed an extract, or an alleged extract, from the Escanaba Mirror in which it was asserted that Joseph E. Bayliss was in Escanaba on Sunday; that he was claiming that he was the candidate of the "wet" forces for congress, as his opponent was "dry;" that Bayliss was claiming to be "dry" in dry counties and "wet" in wet counties; and that he attended a ball game on Sunday afternoon and "freely confided the same information to fans at the game."

The only truth in the whole article was the statement that Mr. Bayliss was in Escanaba on Sunday. He was there, but he did NOT attend the ball game; he did NOT make any of the statements claimed; he NEVER has made any such statements.

The supporters of Frank Scott, of the stripe of the editors of the papers that have printed the slanderous article referred to, are in despair. They see the handwriting on the wall. They know that, unless a miracle happens, Scott is defeated. Driven to the last ditch, they are adopting the tactics of the thug, the blackmailer and the "Devil"—they are trying to blacken the reputation of a clean and square man as ever stood before his fellowmen and asked for their votes.

Mr. Bayliss has demanded a retraction from every paper that has printed this slanderous article, including the Charlevoix Sentinel. He has instructed his attorneys to start a suit for libel against the paper that originated the lie. But a lie travels on wings, while the truth plods along on foot. Many people who saw the lie will never see the retraction.

Voters, will you countenance such methods? Will you as true Americans lend your aid to those who are using them? Will you help to make such methods popular in future by voting for the man whose supporters deliberately blacken a man's character in order that his opponent may win?

It was Frank D. Scott who was at that Sunday ball game; he made a speech to the "fans." He knew Joe Bayliss was not there. He had ample opportunity to correct the false and slanderous statements in the papers that are supporting him. He did not do so. He is a party to the crime. He would benefit by the lies.

Voters, what do you think of such methods? There is one way to express your thoughts, and that is at the polls on August 25th. And unless we misjudge the American people, Scott will be buried so deep beneath an avalanche of Bayliss votes that no man in this district will ever again attempt to win by lies and slander.

LATER.

Since the above was put in type we have learned by wire that the editor of the Escanaba Mirror has made an affidavit that the article the Charlevoix Sentinel claimed appeared in the Mirror was never printed in that paper. This makes the situation all the blacker for those who have used this slanderous attack. Where did they get it?

Raising Prize Winners.

Judge R. V. Otto of this city, who holds the reputation of being the best poultry judge in Michigan, is to be the judge at the poultry show at the Western Michigan state fair in Grand Rapids early in September. There will no doubt be at least 150 Potosky birds shown there and they should have little trouble in bringing home a large number of the prizes. Ryeaft & Otto will have fully 100 birds at this show. Other poultry fanciers will also have birds there and, in all, Potosky, will be the best represented city for its size of any in Michigan.—Evening News.

Hits the Housewife.

With the advance in the price of sugar there is sure to come a falling off in the amount of fruit that will be preserved for winter use by the average woman. Just what effect this will have on the price of various kinds of fruit remains to be seen. Perhaps the price of sugar will have dropped again by the time peaches, pears, apples, etc., are ready for canning.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness caused by Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Tells Where He Stands.

To the People of Charlevoix County:

It has come to my notice that certain statements are being made evidently with a view of injuring my candidacy for the Republican nomination for State Senator from the 29th Senatorial District. The statement is to the effect that the Brewers' Association are back of my campaign. This is so foolish I hardly think it worthy of mention, but wish the people of your county to know that such statements are absolutely false. I wish the people to know that I am not tied up to any faction or corporation, nor have I made any promises to any one. If nominated and elected, as I trust I will be, I shall go to the Senate perfectly free to vote for what is to the best interests of the entire district. I will say further that I believe the people are being overburdened with taxes and that there should be more economy in State affairs.

I shall earnestly work for a lessening of the burden of taxation, and a more conservative and economical administration of public affairs.

Very truly yours,

FREDERICK C. MARTINDALE

Candidate for Nomination for Governor on the Republican Ticket

To the Voters of Michigan

Fellow Citizens:

I am glad to address in this direct way a greeting to the voters of Michigan and say a word regarding my candidacy for the Republican nomination for Governor.

You have at different times honored me with your confidence and entrusted me with important political duties. It has always been my highest endeavor to faithfully discharge every trust.

I feel that you will look upon my past record of service as a better guarantee of my future actions than any promises I might make. The best guarantee any man can give that he will do well the larger things entrusted to his care is that he has done well the smaller things.

I am willing at all times and upon all questions to trust the judgment of the people. If my official conduct in the past has met with your approval, then I ask for your vote for Republican nomination for Governor.

I urge every voter to attend the primary on August 25th and any support that you may give me at that time, I assure will be appreciated.

Sincerely yours,

The STORY of
WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father. Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his drift mother.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Haytime arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waitstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is fickle.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossips are busy with the names of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and sends Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waitstill volunteers her help in the Boynton housekeeping.

Despairing of winning Patty, Cephas turns his affections elsewhere. Patty and Mark are now sweethearts.

Patty and Mark know Deacon Baxter will not consent to their marriage, so they plan an elopement to New Hampshire.

Deacon Baxter is more than usually "difficult." Patty runs off with Mark, is married and returns and tells Waitstill.

The deacon turns Patty out into the cold. She finds shelter with Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart.

Waitstill rises against her father and tells him she will marry Ivory as soon as he is ready to have her.

CHAPTER XXVII.
The House of Aaron.

A FEELING that the day was to bring great things had dawned upon Waitstill when she woke that morning, and now it was coming true.

Climbing Sycamore hill was like climbing the hill of her dreams; life and love beckoned to her across the snowy slopes.

At rest about Patty's future, though troubled as to her sorry plight at the moment, she was conscious chiefly of her newborn freedom. She reveled in the keen air that tingled against her cheek and drew in fresh hope with every breath. As she trod the shining pathway she was full of expectancy, her eyes dancing, her heart as buoyant as her step. Not a vestige of confusion or uncertainty vexed her mind. She knew Ivory for her true mate, and if the way to him took her through dark places it was lighted by a steadfast beacon of love.

At the top of the hill she turned the corner breathlessly and faced the length of road that led to the Boynton farm. Mrs. Boynton's house was beyond, and, oh, how she hoped that Ivory would be at home and that she need not wait another day to tell him all and claim the gift she knew was hers before she asked it! She might not have the same exaltation tomorrow, for now there were no levels in her heart and soul. She had a sense of mounting from height to height and lighting fires at every peak of her being. She took to heart of the road she was traveling. She was conscious only of a wonderful inward glow.

The house was now in sight, and a tall figure was issuing from the side door, putting on a fur cap as it came out on the steps and down the lane. Ivory was at home, then, and, best of all, he was unconsciously coming to meet her, although their hearts had been coming to meet each other, she thought, ever since they first began to beat.

As she neared the bars she called Ivory's name. His hands were in the pockets of his great coat, and his eyes were fixed on the ground. Sombre he was, distinctly somber, in mien and gait. Could she make him smile and flush and glow as she was smiling and flushing and glowing? As he heard her voice he raised his head quickly and unconsciously.

"Don't come any nearer," she said, "until I have told you something."

His mind had been so full of her that the sight of her in the flesh, standing twenty feet away, bewildered him.

She took a few steps nearer the gate, near enough now for him to see her rosy face framed in a blue hood and to catch the brightness of her eyes under their lovely lashes. Ordinarily they were cool and limpid and grave. Waitstill's eyes. Now a sunbeam danced in each of them. And her lips, almost always tightly closed, as if she were holding back her natural speech—her lips were red and parted, and the soul of her, free at last, shone through her face, making it luminous with a new beauty.

How Glorious to Feel Ivory's Arms About Her.

"I have left home for good and all," she said. "I'll tell you more of this later on, but I have left my father's house with nothing to my name but the clothes I stand in. I am going to look for work in the mills tomorrow, but I stopped here to say that I'm ready to marry you whenever you want me—if you do want me."

Ivory was bewildered, indeed, but not so much so that he failed to apprehend and instantly, too, the real significance of this speech. He took a couple of long strides, and before Waitstill had any idea of his intentions he vaulted over the bars and gathered her in his arms.

"Never shall you go to the mills. Never shall you leave my sight for a single hour again, my one woman in all the world. Come to me to be loved and treasured all your life long. I've worshipped you ever since I was a boy. I've kept my heart sweet and guarded for you and no other, hoping I might win you at last."

How glorious to hear all this delightful poetry of love and to feel Ivory's arms about her, making the dream seem sure!

"Oh, how like you to shorten the time of my waiting?" he went on, his words fairly chasing one another, in their eagerness to be spoken. "How like you in count on me, to guess my hunger for your love, to realize the chains that held me back and break them yourself with your own dear, womanly hands! How like you, oh, wonderful Waitstill!"

Ivory went on murmuring phrases that had been lying in his heart unsaid for years, scarcely conscious of what he was saying, realizing only that the miracle of adjectives had happened.

Waitstill, for her part, was almost dumb with joy to be lying so close to his heart that she could hear it beating, to feel the passionate tenderness of his embrace and his kiss falling upon her hair.

"You took me fairly on my feet, dear-est," he said, "and I forgot everything but the one supreme fact you were telling me. Had I been on guard I should have told you that I am no worthy husband for you, Waitstill. I haven't enough to offer such a girl as you."

"You're too late, Ivory! You showed me your heart first, and now you are searching your mind for big words to frighten me."

"I am a poor man."

"No girl could be poorer than I am."

"After what you've endured you ought to have rest and comfort."

"I shall have both—in you! This with eyes, all wet, lifted to Ivory's."

"My mother is a great burden—a very dear and precious but a grievous one."

"She needs a daughter. It is in such things that I shall be your helpmate."

"Will not the boy trouble you and add to your cares?"

"Rod? I love him; he shall be my little brother."

"What if my father were not really dead? I think of this sometimes in the night! What if he should wander back, broken in spirit, feeble in body, empty in purse?"

"I do not come to you free of burdens. If my father is desirous by all I must see that he is made comfortable. He never treated me like a daughter, but I acknowledge his claim."

"Alone is such a gloomy house!"

"Will it be gloomy when I am in it?" and Waitstill, usually so grave, laughed at last like a care-free child.

Ivory felt himself hidden in the beautiful shelter of the girl's love.

It was dark now, or as dark as the night ever is that has moonlight and snow. He took Waitstill in his arms again reverently and laid his cheek against her hair. "I worship God as well as I know how," he whispered, "worship him as the maker of this big heaven and earth that surrounds us. But I worship you as the maker of my little heaven and earth, and my heart is saying its prayers to you at this very moment!"

"Hush, my dear! Hush! And don't value me too much or I shall lose my head—I that have never known a sweet word in all my life save those that my sister has given me. I must tell you all about Patty now."

"I happen to know more than you, dear. I met her at the bridge when I was coming home from the woods and I saw her safely to Uncle Bart's door. I don't know why we speak of it as Uncle Bart's when it is really Aunt Abby's! I next met Mark, who had fairly flown from Bridgeton on the wings of love, arriving hours ahead of time. I managed to keep him from avenging the insults heaped upon his bride, and he has driven to the Mills to confide in his father and mother. By this time Patty is probably the center of the family group, charming them all, as is her custom."

"Oh, I am so glad Mark is at home! Now I can be at rest about Patty. And I must not linger another moment, for I am going to ask Mrs. Mason to keep me overnight!" cried Waitstill, bethinking herself suddenly of time and place.

"I will take you there myself and explain everything. And the moment I've lighted a fire in Mrs. Mason's best bedroom and settled you there, what do you think I am going to do? I shall drive to the town clerk's house, and if he is in bed, rouse him out and have the notice of our intended marriage posted in a public place, according to law. Perhaps I shall save a day out of the fourteen I've got to wait for my wife. 'Mills,' indeed! I wonder at you, Waitstill! As if Mrs. Mason's house was not far enough away, without your speaking of 'mills.'"

"I only suggested mills in case you did not want to marry me," said Waitstill.

"Walk up to the door with me," begged Ivory. "The horse is all harnessed, and Rod will slip him into the sleigh in a jiffy."

"Oh, Ivory, do you realize what this means?" and Waitstill clung to his arm as they went up the lane together.

"That whatever sorrow, whatever hardship comes to us neither of us will ever have to bear it alone again?"

"I believe I do realize it as few men could, for never in my five and twenty years have I had a human creature to whom I could pour myself out, in whom I could really confide, with whom I could take counsel. You can guess what it will be to have a comprehending woman at my side. Shall we tell my mother? Do say 'yes!' I believe she will understand. Rod, Rod, come and see who's stepping in the door this very minute!"

Rodman was up in his bedroom, attiring himself elaborately for sentry duty. His delight at seeing Waitstill was perhaps slightly tempered by the thought that dashed at once through his mind—that if she was safe he would not be required to stand guard in the snow for hours as he had hoped. But this grief passed when he fully realized Waitstill's presence at the farm at this unaccustomed hour really meant. After he had been told he hung about her like the child that he was—though he had a bit of the hero in him, at bottom, too—embracing her waist fondly and breathing with wondering questions.

"Is she really going to stay with us for always, Ivory?" he asked.

"Every day and all the days, every night and all the nights. 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow!'" said Ivory, taking off his fur cap and opening the door of the living room. "But we've got to wait for her a while tonight. Rod, Rod, isn't that a ridiculous snail of a law?"

"Patty didn't wait a fortnight."

"Patty never waited for anything," Ivory responded, with a smile. "But she had a good reason, and, alas, we haven't, or they'll say that we haven't. And I am very grateful to the same

Can You Succeed On a Salary?

It will take more than your salary, however large, to insure your financial success for the simple reason that, as an almost invariable rule, the scale of living a person maintains is in direct proportion to his income.

Earn much; spend much is the way it goes. In order to get ahead EVERYBODY must save a portion of his income. There's no getting around this fact, and a strong bank like the Charlevoix County Bank is the logical place for you to build up your reserve fund.

dear little Ivory, for when she got herself a husband she found me a wife!"

Rodman did not wholly understand this, but felt that there were many mysteries attending the love affairs of grown-up people that were too complicated for him to grasp, and it did not seem to be just the right moment for questions.

Waitstill and Ivory went into Mrs. Boynton's room quietly, hand in hand, and when she saw Waitstill she raised herself from her pillow and held out her arms with a soft cry of delight.

"I haven't had you for so long, so long!" she said, laughing the girl's cheek with her frail hand.

"You are going to have me every day now, dear," whispered Waitstill, with a sob in her voice, for she saw a change in the face, a new transparency, a still more ethereal look than had been there before.

"Every day?" she repeated longingly. Waitstill took off her hood and knelt on the floor beside the bed, hiding her face in the counterpane to conceal the tears.

"She is coming to live with us, dear. Come in, Rod, and hear me tell her. Waitstill is coming to live with us. Isn't that a beautiful thing to happen to this dreary house?" asked Ivory, bending to take his mother's hand.

"Don't you remember what you thought the first time I ever came

TEAM RAN AWAY

Bridge Street Scene of Exciting Runaway Last Wednesday Afternoon.

Leaving his team standing in the street for a few minutes while he did some shopping, John Macey returned to find that during his absence they had become frightened and ran away. They plunged down the street, and run into an automobile belonging to Wesley Dilworth of Horton Bay.

Mr. Macey's little son, who had been left to hold the horses, was thrown from the wagon and received a number of painful bruises. The car was a sorry sight, the lights, windshield, radiator and fenders being almost completely demolished.

Leaves England This Week.

Word received from Mrs. Geo. Taylor, who has been visiting relatives in England for some time, stated that she had booked passage for home on the steamer Aquatina, which was due to sail August 15th. Later advices from her stated that this ship had been taken over by the government and would be converted into an armed scout ship, and that she had, through the efforts of the American embassy, booked passage on the S. S. Mauretania, due to sail August 22nd.

Maple Grove Picnic.

Saturday, August 22, is the date set aside by the grangers of Hages township for the annual grange picnic to be held at Maple Grove grange hall. Athletic sports and base ball games will be pulled off and music will be furnished throughout the day by the Bay Shore band. A chicken pie dinner will be served and all are invited to attend and spend the day.

Candidate for Representative in Congress, Eleventh Congressional District, and the only man left in the race who will be safe to send to Washington to represent this district.

FRANK D. SCOTT, candidate for the Republican nomination for congressman from the eleventh district, was in town the latter part of the week. The Hon. Frank does not wear a very optimistic look these days. He looks like the fellow who had seen the handwriting on the wall. He has a worried look on his face that leads one to believe that matters are not looking just right for him in this vicinity. Four years ago he received a big majority from Charlevoix county; two years ago it was considerably less, and this year it looks very much as if a big majority of the voters will cast their ballot in favor of the man from the South.

Information gathered from various sections of the 20th senatorial district lead one to believe that the chances for the election of the pet of Charlevoix county in the senatorial race are growing less every day. How many years does the "Hon. John" expect the people to keep him in office, anyway? He never did look like a "white hope" to us at any stage of the game.

J. LEE MORFORD

Candidate for Senator from Gaylord in the City last Week.

J. Lee Morford of Gaylord, candidate on the Republican ticket for the nomination as state senator from the 20th district, was in the city last week.

Mr. Morford has served two terms in the state legislature and is a man well qualified to fill the position he seeks. He says he believes he will be elected and that his past record while serving the people will bear the closest scrutiny. Localities hitherto lukewarm are now lining up for him, and in those where unreasonable opposition existed a few weeks ago the sentiment is gradually changing in his favor.

Mr. Morford has many friends throughout the district who are working effectively in his behalf and he states that the outlook is very encouraging.

How to Use the Casserole.

An American housewife who is not acquainted with this little brown friend, the casserole, feels a certain amount of fright at the French name.
So called plain cooks feel themselves too lowly to dabble in French cookery.
Yet the casserole has no hidden mysteries to appall the simplest housewife.
It is a covered dish, made of brown tropical pottery, which can be used in the oven or on top of the stove. It comes in large sizes and small individual dishes. The food cooked in these dishes is called a casserole of rice, chicken, spaghetti or whatever it may chance to be.

The beauty of these little brown pots is that the cheapest meats and all the most unwholesome leftovers will issue forth after the cooking as the most delicious of dishes.

Into a casserole may be put all the odds and ends of the week, so the housewife is enabled to save the smallest amount of food. Such a mixture as the following is very common: A little cold meat or fish, a spoonful of macaroni or spaghetti, one carrot, a tablespoonful of peas or corn, a little soup stock and seasoning, and the whole comes out a most delicious mixture. The next time you have food left over try a casserole dish and see if it isn't voted a success by the entire family.

How to Use Muslin Sugar Sacks.

A practical housewife states that she has carefully cared for all muslin sugar sacks, and has found them very useful during the summer to slip over dishes of cooked food when they could not be put in the cellar or a refrigerator and it was necessary to protect the food from flies or possible insects.
This is useful for the country housewife, who does not always have the modern improvements.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SEASONABLE PUDDINGS.

PUDDINGS to suit all tastes are represented below. They are compounded with fruits and nuts and range from the comparatively simple everyday pudding to the elaborate kind for special occasions. They are suitable for dinner or luncheon.

Pineapple and Tapioca Pudding.—
Take one-half cupful tapioca; wash and put in double boiler, with a scant quart cold water and a pinch of salt.
Cook until as clear as starch. Stir often to prevent lumping. Remove from the fire, put into the dish in which you intend to serve it, add one-half cupful sugar and a can of shredded pineapple. When cold whip cream and spread on top.

Nut and Fruit Dessert.

Walnut and Banana Pudding.—Shell and peel three ounces walnuts; cut them into fine shreds. Peel also three to four ripe bananas and rub them through a fine sieve. Chop finely four ounces of beef suet free from skin.
Put this into a mixing basin and add four ounces breadcrumbs, two ounces moist sugar, a pinch of salt, the juice and finely grated rind of half a lemon.
Stir all well together and lastly mix with the walnuts and banana pulp;
then stir in two well beaten eggs.
Have ready a well buttered pudding mold, sprinkle the inside with finely crushed dried macaroons and breadcrumbs and fill up with the above preparation. Stand the mold in a pan containing a little hot water and bake the pudding in a moderately heated oven.

A Steamed Pudding.

Banana and Rhubarb Pudding.—
Cream in a basin two ounces of butter with two ounces of powdered sugar;
then spread the inside of a pudding dish or mold thickly with it. Now make a suet paste with half a pound of flour, quarter of a pound of finely chopped beef suet, half a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of baking powder and sufficient cold water to make a stiff crust. Roll the paste out and line the prepared pudding dish, keeping a piece of paste to cover it.
Fill the mold with the fruit and cut into slices; also with rhubarb, cleaved and cut into inch lengths.
Add about two tablespoonfuls of moist sugar and half a teaspoonful of ground ginger. Moisten with about half a cupful of water. Wet the edges of the paste and lay on the lid, pressing the ends firmly together. Tie a piece of greased white paper on a wetted pudding cloth on the top; then steam the pudding for two hours or bake in the oven for one and three-quarter hours.
Turn out and serve hot.

here, mother?" and Waitstill lifted her head and looked at Mrs. Boynton with swimming eyes and lips that trembled. "Ivory is making it all come true, and I shall be your daughter!" Mrs. Boynton sank farther back into her pillows and, closing her eyes, gave a long sigh of infinite content. Her voice was so faint that they had to stoop to catch the words, and Ivory, feeling the strange benediction that seemed to be passing from his mother's spirit to theirs, took hold of her hand and knelt beside Waitstill.

The verse of a favorite psalm was running through Lois Boynton's mind, and in a moment the words came clearly as she opened her eyes, lifted her hands and touched the bowed heads. "Let the house of Aaron now say that his mercy endureth forever!" she said slowly and reverently. And Ivory, with all his heart, responded, "Amen!"

Political Announcement.

I wish to announce to the voters of Charlevoix county that I will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for the office of county treasurer to succeed myself.

IN THE POLITICAL FIELD

What the Newspapers Say.

Presque Isle county, Onaway Outlook: "Joe E. Bayliss, or 'Joe' Bayliss as he is best known, candidate for congress from our district, was in our city last week, meeting a number of people. He impressed people generally as one of those clean-cut, square-toed men; one who is honor and integrity through and through. His campaign will be clean and open, free from bunkum promises and fourflush hot air. Mr. Bayliss is every inch a man and commands respect. He's straight before and after election, as his record shows."

What They Say in Lansing.

Evening Press: "Bayliss was sincere in his dealings and actions and was one of the best-liked men in the legislature."

State Journal:

"If the legislative records of the two men (Scott and Bayliss) are carefully measured by the voters of the eleventh congressional district Representative Bayliss should have little difficulty in winning the nomination by a handsome plurality."

Kalkaska county, Rapid-Citizen:

"The Citizen has carefully investigated the merits of the several aspirants for the office and we feel that a great majority of our readers will agree with us when we say 'Joe Bayliss is the man.' Bayliss is the real man—a man's man. He has a clean record of public service and is not rushing around making promises he can't fulfill."

Mackinac county, Saint Ignace Enterprise:

"Comments of the press in the 11th district would indicate that Joseph E. Bayliss, Republican candidate for congress, is gaining strength and has the lead for the nomination at the primaries."

Manistique Pioneer Tribune:

"We believe that Schoecraft county will give Joe Bayliss a big majority at the August primaries for the congressional nomination."

Luce county, Newberry News:

"Bayliss is gaining strength every day. He will carry every county in the Upper Peninsula and all indications are that he will be elected."

Chippewa county, Soo Evening News:

"15,000 Chippewa county registered Republican voters have expressed their confidence in Joe Bayliss for congressman and pledged their support."

Rapid River News:

"Each development of the congressional battle makes it more apparent that the Soo man will win."

Delta county, Delta County Reporter:

"Summing up the entire situation, it looks like a Bayliss victory on August 25th."

Delta county, Escanaba Journal:

"Bayliss will get 75 per cent. of the Republican vote of Delta county at the primaries."

Labor Unions Endorse Bayliss.

Michigan Federation of Typographical Unions on June 23, 1913, passed a resolution endorsing Jos. E. Bayliss for his vote on the Callaghan bill. C. D. Anderson, secretary, signed the resolutions. Typographical Union No. 359 at a recent meeting passed strong resolutions endorsing Jos. E. Bayliss for opposing the Callaghan bill, and scoring Frank D. Scott for voting for it.

All laboring men should know whom to support for congress.

Bayliss Strong with Gangsters.

"Joe Bayliss will receive practically every grange vote in Chippewa county. During his entire legislative career he has shown himself to be in line with grange principles, is a granger himself, and because of his record, character and all-around general fitness is deserving of the support of all those seeking the best things in government." Thus spoke Samuel C. Cuthbert, organizer and lecturer for the Chippewa Pomona Grange.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

THE WEDDING FEAST.

Matthew 22:1-14—Aug. 23.
"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the Prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not!" —Luke 13:34.

HERE we have another parable of the Kingdom. Today's lesson shows that God's promises and providences toward Israel under the Law Covenant were to prepare that nation to be God's holy nation and especially to provide at Christ's coming a sufficient number to constitute the elect Church, Messiah's joint-heirs in the Kingdom—His Bride. The parable shows that only a few were "Israelites indeed," in whom was no guile—not enough to constitute the Kingdom class. Hence the call of this Gospel Age, selecting from the Gentiles sufficient of suitably character to be joint-heirs with the Jewish remnant in the Messianic Kingdom.

The Marriage of the Lamb.

Jehovah Himself is the King who made a marriage for His Son—arranging before the foundation of the world that there should be joint-heirs with Christ in His Kingdom. This marriage, of course, could not take place until the King's Son had come into the world, and by His obedience unto death, had made the way for His followers and for His Kingdom. At the appropriate time God sent His servants to call them that were hidden to the wedding. But they would not come. John the Baptist and his disciples did this work of calling to the attention of Israel the fact that the King's Son was in their midst.—John 1:26, 32, 33.

Again, other servants were sent forth. Jesus sent His disciples to the Jews, saying to them that were bidden, "All things are ready. Come to the marriage." But the people, under the guidance of the scribes and the Pharisees, the theologians of that day, made light of the Message and went—one to his farm and another to his merchandise—saying, "We do not believe this Kingdom Message. Some did even worse than this. They treated these servants shamefully and slew them."

Then, as seen in another parable, Jehovah was wrath with Israel. He sent forth armies and destroyed those murderers and burned their city. The fact that it was the Roman army under Titus which destroyed Jerusalem, A. D. 70, did not make it any less Jehovah's army; for He is able to make the wrath of man praise Him and able to use whom He may please as His messengers for good or evil.

Gentiles Called to the Wedding.

Meanwhile God said to His servants, the Apostles, and others through them, The wedding is provided for; but the Jewish nation, which was especially invited, has not proved worthy of the honor. Go ye, therefore, into the highways; and as many as ye shall find, bring to the marriage feast. The servants did so, and the wedding was furnished with guests.

The highways represent public concourse. The Lord's ambassadors were no longer to restrict themselves to Jews, but were to make known everywhere the fact that God is now calling out of the world a little company, lovers of righteousness, to become eventually Christ's joint-heirs in His Kingdom. Be it noted that these ambassadors were not to intercept all in the highways, but merely to urge upon all they met in the concourse the great privilege of the open door to the wedding feast.

Inspecting the Guests.

The man found without a wedding garment in the presence of the King represents a class, not merely one individual. Today we might find just such a class, professing to be Christ's followers, but declaring that they no longer trust in the merit of His sacrifice for sin. They have rejected Jesus as their Savior, their Redeemer, and retain Him merely as their Teacher, apparently accepting only a part of His teachings. The parable shows that this class will be rejected from the Kingdom privileges.

When our minds were filled with hallucinations of the Dark Ages, we assumed that this class, represented by the man without a wedding garment, would be cast into eternal torment. But now we perceive that as the guests were called out of the darkness of the world into the light of the wedding chamber, so the casting of one into the outer darkness would mean merely the taking from him the knowledge and joy represented by the light.

Our Lord's statement, "Many are called, but few chosen," does not mean that only an elect few will receive God's favor in the future. For eight hundred years the Gospel Call has sounded. Yet comparatively few have accepted and come into the elect condition—the Church, the Bride of Christ.

Thus again the Master explained the matter saying, "Fear not, Little Flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." The Little Flock, composed of Jews and Gentiles, will through faithfulness become God's chosen people, the Bride of Christ.

Keep in touch with what is going on. Read the Courier; that's the best way.

Mister Voter, Your Attention for Just a Moment.

I had expected to visit all parts of the county before the primary, but at the present time I have no help in the office that I feel that I can safely leave the work in care of, and can only take this means to say a few words to you.

Those of you who have transacted business with the Register of Deeds of your county are familiar with the duties of that office; are aware of his responsibilities and know what that office means to the county and the owners of homes. But there may be some of you who have not had the occasion to consider these things. I, therefore, desire to submit to the voters the following:

The Register of Deeds is not a salaried official, neither does the county pay for an assistant. The county merely furnishes the office with the records and the necessary material for doing the work. The Register's compensation is derived entirely from the people who have occasion to use the office, and in accordance with the amount of work that is required. In order that these he properly served it is necessary that the Register not only be thoroughly familiar with the thousands of property descriptions, but that he possess the knowledge of where to locate each of them. Several cases have come to light in this office where, in the making of new abstracts, transfers have been omitted in old abstracts, making them worthless.

If you should call at this office and see the number of records necessary to be kept, you would wonder what an inexperienced man could possibly do should he be called upon to furnish a record or abstract of title.

During my first two years as Register I was fortunate indeed, to be able to get the services of one who had handled the business of the office for several years. I am now thoroughly familiar with every detail of the work, as everyone who has had business with the office will tell you. Every record in the vault I understand perfectly. I appreciate the strong support I am receiving from those who have had work done in the office and from my many friends. It makes me feel proud and stimulates me to further exertions in the line of my duty. To all others let me say that if you are not already the proud possessor of a home, you hope to be, and it stands you well in hand to keep a competent official in this office, that the records may be perfectly kept. Experience is of especial value here and is an item that the business man is willing to pay for. The business man raises the salary of the competent employee from year to year because he is worth more to the business. I do not ask this, and could not if I would, as mine is not a salaried position. I merely ask that my candidacy be considered as a strictly business matter.

Respectfully,

Romeo A. Emrey,
Pol. Adv. 331f Register of Deeds.

Statement from D. H. Fitch.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

It is the duty of every man who is a candidate for public office to give to the voters before the primary and the election a clear, concise and truthful statement of his position on public matters, what he stands for, and if he has held office, a report of his record. I am glad to do this. I have been Prosecuting Attorney of our county four years. I promised the people at the beginning that I would discharge the duties of the office carefully, diligently and fearlessly. That I would be economical so that our taxes would not be increased because of my office. Being a taxpayer myself, I have an equal interest with you in this. I promised that I would enforce the law as the people wished it enforced.

The salary of this office is not large. It has been the opinion of many that on this account, taking into consideration the public welfare and the more efficient service, a lawyer of experience and training should not be limited to one or two terms in this office, but that a re-election should be given him, provided he makes good.

I believe I have made good. I have endeavored to be impartial and fair. I have been aggressive against law-breakers, but at the same time, I have not been harsh to the unfortunate and the friendless. This is my idea of the duties of the office. I have responded with the best in me, when called upon to advise the county and township officials.

The records will show, if you look them up, that the expenses of my administration have been less than those of any predecessors in the past ten years, with as much if not more work to do. These matters are of public record. I invite your inspection. The Committee on Claims of the Board of Supervisors have repeatedly commented upon the reasonableness, fairness and consistency of my expense accounts.

I desire another nomination on the Republican ticket. If I did not feel that I deserved it, I would not ask it.

The primary election comes just before a session of the Circuit Court of this county, and I have, therefore, been unable to make a personal canvass and meet the people, because that would be neglecting the duties of my office. I, therefore, take this method of presenting the matter to you and I promise that if nominated and elected, profiting by my experience, I shall continue to give the office my best efforts and endeavor.

Very truly yours,
Pol. Adv. 331f Dwight H. Fitch.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County.

I believe the time has come when the people of this county consider that the two important considerations in the selection of a county officer are efficiency and economy—that the taxpayer has grown to realize that the man who will do the county the greatest amount of good with expenditure of the smallest amount of the county's money is the man—and in consideration of the same I desire to submit the following, which will show the cost of the two last county sheriff administrations, together with the number of state prison commitments.

I was sheriff of this county for the years 1907-8-9-10 and during the four years of my administration there was sentenced from the city of Charlevoix and the circuit court thirty-three men to the state prisons and Detroit house of correction. During the three years and five months of the present administration there have been only sixteen men sentenced from the city of Charlevoix and the circuit court to the prisons and to Detroit.

I find from an examination of the records of the bills allowed by the county board of supervisors that my four years' administration as sheriff cost the county less than fifteen thousand dollars, which includes one thousand dollars that was appropriated for a previous administration for detective work, but not used, and which the supervisors instructed me to use for detective services, as the proceedings will show.

I find that the three years and five months of the present administration have cost the county the sum of approximately $17,413.75, and at this rate for the balance of the year it will be an increase of 47 per cent. My under-sheriff, W. J. Weikel, cost the county for the four years of my administration $1169.74. The present under-sheriff, Mr. Novak, my present opponent, cost the county during three years and five months the sum of $1723.88, or $554.14 more, being 50 per cent. more expensive, both men residing in Charlevoix.

So it can be readily seen that since my administration as sheriff, with less than half as many men sent to prison, the sheriff's expense has increased 47 per cent, and the under-sheriff's (Mr. Novak's) expense has increased 50 per cent.

I believe if elected sheriff again that I can reduce the expense of that office and that of the under-sheriff to equal that of my former administration, and thus save the taxpayers in the neighborhood of $2500 during the next two years.

Respectfully submitted,
Frank McWain,
Candidate for Sheriff on the Republican Ticket. Pol. Adv. 331f

Payton Says Things Look Good.

County Treasurer Payton, who is a candidate for re-nomination in the coming primaries, was in the city Monday and tells us that his chances for the customary second term looked mighty good in every section of the county from which he has received reports, and we can readily see why this is. D. S. Payton has been more actively interested in the welfare of Charlevoix county than any other citizen we know of. He has worked hard and consistently for the development of the county, having spent days and days of his time, not time that belonged to the county, that we might live in a better and more advanced community, and he has spent his good money in as many cases for the same reason. That he has been an efficient officer cannot be denied; that he has taken care of the wants of every person who has had business with the office in a kindly and yet business like manner is acknowledged by everyone, and he has been strictly loyal to the party that put him in office; and we contend that without the latter virtue no man could be of value to any community. The whole situation is summed up in this manner: Mr. Payton is a real Republican and has always had the backbone to say so, whether it was to his interest at the particular time or not; he has been thoroughly unselfish in his efforts to make a better Charlevoix county; he is the most competent man for this office of whom we have knowledge. His is one case where the people have received more than they paid for—that he held a county office for several terms means nothing. This is a business matter. That he can hold the office but one more term is the only thing we have to regret. Payton wouldn't say so for the world, but instead of Payton being indebted to the county, the county is indebted to Payton.—Boyne City Journal, Pol. Adv. -331f.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County.

I hereby announce my candidacy for nomination for the office of County Clerk on the Republican ticket, subject to the August primaries.

Please look up my past record and if my work has been satisfactory I will greatly appreciate your support.

SHERIFF'S EXPENSES

McWain's Personal Account Exceeds Robbins' by $908.49.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

The following is a true statement of the expenses of the sheriff's office, including bills of the under-sheriff and deputies, for the years named:

McWain's Term.	Robbins' Term.
1907 $ 3,377.93	1911 $ 3,419.49
1908 4,510.93	1912 5,697.84
1909 4,015.92	1913 4,679.13
1910 4,282.17	1914 3,410.23
Totals $16,186.94	$17,206.53

The above statement includes janitor's salary of $300 per year for care of court house and, as it does not affect the issue,

I submit it should not be charged in either statement.

Also another item should not be charged against either administration, viz: "BOARD OF PRISONERS." During Mr. McWain's term of office there was paid for prisoners' board $974.00. Under Robbins' term of office for the same item $1936.52, or practically twice as much. This item also shows the proportionate amount of work done during the two terms. Deducting the extra amount paid for prisoners during Robbins' term, you will find that the difference in cost is only $57.07 for the two terms. In McWain's article (Evening Journal, August 13th) he omitted to state that under the law prisoners cannot now be sentenced to the Detroit House of Correction, while under his term of office nearly all short-term offenders were so sentenced. Of course he wanted to be fair by suppressing this fact. This is one reason why more prisoners were sentenced during his term. Another reason is, the circuit judge is each year placing more prisoners upon probation.

Mr. McWain also wished to be fair, of course, when he suppressed the following fact: McWain's Personal Bills for his term exceeded Robbins' personal bills for his term to date $908.49. Why did he not so state in comparing the expense account of these two administrations? It should be remembered that our county is increasing in population and the work of the sheriff's office increases correspondingly.

One other fact must be remembered: New laws have largely added to the duties of the sheriff's office and expenses have necessarily increased with the work of the office.

The article by Mr. McWain was intended to discredit my administration of the office of sheriff. Inasmuch as all my bills were itemized and verified and examined by the Committee on Claims of the Board of Supervisors, reported favorably and later passed by the entire Board, I feel that the voters of Charlevoix county will have confidence in their integrity.

My bills are right and are open to the public and I stand back of them with nothing to conceal.

I only ask a square deal and no concealment by my critic in his accounts and no misrepresentation as to mine. I stand ready to prove the above statements. Asking your fair consideration, I am

Respectfully yours,

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by
Kate Douglas Wiggin

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, mean father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter's mother.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochran, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Hayling times arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling the girl she believes Rodman is not her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waitstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is likely.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochran, with which, Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossip is busy with the names of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and sends Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waitstill volunteers her help in the Boynton housekeeping.

Despairing of winning Patty, Cephas turns his affections elsewhere. Patty and Mark are now sweethearts.

Patty and Mark know Deacon Baxter will not consent to their marriage, so they plan an elopement to New Hampshire.

Deacon Baxter is more than usually "difficult." Patty runs off with Mark, leaving Waitstill to her fate.

The deacon turns Patty out into the cold. She finds shelter with Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart.

Waitstill rises against her father and tells him she will marry Ivory as soon as he is ready to marry her.

Left by his daughter, the deacon cannot manage his household. Waitstill visits the Boyntons.

CHAPTER XXVIII

Aaron's Rod.

"IVORY! Ivory!"

Ivory stirred in a sleep that had been troubled by too great happiness. To travel a dreary path alone, a path leading seemingly nowhere, and then suddenly to have a companion by one's side, the very sight of whom enchanted the eye, the very touch of whom delighted the senses—what joy unspeakable! Who could sleep soundly when wakefulness brought a train of such blissful thoughts?

"Ivory! Ivory!"

"How fully awake now, for he knew his mother's voice. In all the years, ever thoughtful of his comfort and of the constant strain upon his strength, Lobs had never wakened her son at night.

"Come, mother, coming!" he said when he realized she was calling him. And, hastily drawing on some clothing, for the night was bitterly cold, he came out of his room and saw his mother standing at the foot of the stairway with a lighted candle in her hand.

"Can you come down, Ivory? It is a strange hour to call you, but I have something to tell you—something I have been piecing together for weeks, something I have just clearly remembered."

"If it's something that won't keep till morning, mother, you creep back into bed and we'll hear it comfortably," he said, coming downstairs and leading her to her room. "I'll smooth the covers, so; lean up the pillows—there; and throw another log on the sitting room fire. Now, what's the matter? Couldn't you sleep?"

"All summer long I have been trying to remember something—something—something that you have been believing some falsehood for which I was responsible. I have pursued and pursued it, but I haven't been able to get it. But it has now escaped me. Once it was, but it's daylight, for I feel there was no happiness for either of us. He had a conscience—not much of a one, but just enough to keep him miserable. At last I felt he was not believing the doctrines he preached, and I caught him trying to get news of you and your boy just because you were out of reach, and neglecting my boy and me, who had given up everything to wander with him and live on whatever the brethren and sisters chose to give us."

"So there was a child, a boy?" Ivory gasped. "Did—did he live?" "He's in the next room," she answered, "and it's him I brought you here for. Aaron Boynton has served us both the same. He left you for me and me for heaven knows who. If I could live I wouldn't ask any favors, of you least of all, but I haven't a penny in the world, though I shan't need one very long. My friend that's nursing me hasn't a roof to her head, and she wouldn't share it with the boy if she had—she's a bigoted orthodox."

"But what do you expect me to do?" Ivory asked angrily, for she was stammering with every word.

"The boy is your husband's child, and he always represented you as a saint upon earth. I expect you to take him home and provide for him. He doesn't mean very much to me—just enough so that I don't relish his going to the poorhouse, that's all."

"He'll go to something very like that if he comes to mine," Ivory said.

"Don't worry me with talk, for I can't stand it," she wailed, clutching at her nightgown and flinging back her hair. "Either you take the child or I send somebody to Edgewood with him, somebody to tell the whole story."

"My poor, poor Rod!"

Some of the Cochranites can support him if you won't, or, at the worst, Aaron Boynton's town can take care of his son. The doctor has given me two days to live. If it's a minute longer I've warned him and I warn you that I'll end it myself, and if you don't take the boy I'll do the same for him. He's a good sight better off dead than knocking about the world alone. He's innocent, and there's no sense in his being punished for the sins of other folks."

"I see it all. Why did I never think of it before, my poor, poor Rod!" said Ivory, clutching his hands and burying his head in them.

"Don't grieve, Ivory. It has all turned out so much better than we could have hoped. Just listen to the end. She was frightful to hear and to look at, the girl was, though all the time I could feel that she must have had a gypsy beauty and vigor that answered to something in your father."

"Go along out now," she cried suddenly. "I can't stand anybody near. The doctor never gives me half enough medicine, and for the hour before he comes I fairly die for lack of it, though little he cares. Go upstairs and have your sleep, and tomorrow you can make up your mind."

"You don't leave me much freedom to do that," Ivory tried to answer, but she interrupted him, rocking her body to and fro. "Neither of us will ever see Aaron Boynton again—you no more than I. He's in the west, and a man with two families and no means of providing for them doesn't come back where he's known. Come and take her away, Eliza! Take her away, quick!" she called.

"I stumbled out of the room, and the woman waved me upstairs. 'You must not mind, Hetty,' she apologized. 'She never had a good disposition at the best, but she's frantic with the pain now, and good reason, too. It's about over, and I'll be thankful when it is. You'd better swallow the shame and take the child. I can't and won't have him, and I'll be easy enough for you to say he belongs to some of your own folks.'

"By this time I was mentally well-armed. When the iron first entered my soul, when I first heard the truth about my father, at that moment my mind gave way—I know it now."

"Poor, poor mother! My poor, gentle little mother!" murmured Ivory brokenly as he stroked her hand.

"Don't cry, my son; it is all past—the sorrow and the bitterness and the struggle. I will just finish the story, and then we'll close the book forever. The woman gave me some bread and butter, and I flung myself on the bed without undressing. I don't know how long afterward it was, but the door opened and a little boy stole in, a sad, strange, dark-eyed little boy who said, 'Can't sleep up there? Mother's screaming and the old maid. He climbed on to the couch and covered him with a thin

Can You Succeed On a Salary?

It will take more than your salary, however large, to insure your financial success for the simple reason that, as an almost invariable rule, the scale of living a person maintains is in direct proportion to his income.

Earn much, spend much is the way it goes. In order to get ahead EVERYBODY must save a portion of his income. There's no getting around this fact, and a strong bank like the Charlevoix County Bank is the logical place for you to build up your reserve fund.

EVERY DAY AT FAIR PLANNED AS A SPECIAL DAY

There have been so many requests from various bodies interested in the Fair for special days that it has been somewhat difficult to arrange these days on account of the great number of organizations who will make special efforts to attend the Fair. The program arranged is now as follows:

A Prize Winner at the Fair

Wednesday, September 2 Opening Day.
Thursday, September 3, Michigan
Grange Day.
Friday, September 4, Gleaners' Day.
Saturday, September 5, Commercial Travelers and Children's Day.
Sunday, September 6, Everybody's
Day.

Monday, September 7, Labor and Fraternal Day.

At large expense the management has made great improvements of the grounds, the Grand Rapids Railway Co., recognizing the importance of the Fair, has put in a loop at the fair grounds by which all congestion will be eliminated and the crowds easily handled in and out at the rate of more than 200 persons per minute.

These improvements will add materially to the pleasure of the people attending the Fair and will do much to contribute towards its success.

A NOVEL CONVEYANCE.

Air Propelled Unicycle That is Capable of Making High Speed.

A new machine which upon the boulevards of St. Louis has attained a speed of sixty-seven miles an hour is built after a novel design, says Popular Mechanics. It is a huge wheel or rlog of aluminum eighty-one inches in diameter, with a two lock solid rubber tire. Within this outer rim is a curious framework of steel tubing so arranged that it remains stationary while the outer wheel or rim revolves. In front of the wheel and projecting from this framework is an air propeller nearly five feet long, its two blades having a four foot pitch and a tractive force of some 150 pounds. Just behind the propeller is the three cylinder engine.
Along the principal rib of the framework and within the wheel are grouped the batteries, the magneto and the gasoline and oil supplies. The saddle is affixed to the same support, the ri-

UNICYCLE OF NOVEL DESIGN.

der's hands grasping a wheel upon which are mounted the controls, while his feet rest upon a little platform bolted to the lower part of the frame.

In either side and projecting some little distance from the main line of the wheel are steel prongs, or skids, which, when the unicycle is at rest, support it and keep it from falling.
While the rearward projection of the frame ends in a small wheel, or roller, of aid in starting the machine by giving it stability until enough momentum has been gained to enable the rider, by inclining his body forward, to bring the main rib into a horizontal position, which lifts the roller clear of the ground.

The connection between the outer wheel and the frame is found in three jaws supplied with five inch fiber rollers and inch thick, which contact the inside rim of the wheel and are kept from slipping by smaller side rollers of the same material. All rollers have ball bearings, and lubrication is carefully planned. There is no steering device, the inclination of the body of the rider being sufficient, as in bicycle riding.

Coating Iron With Solder.

While putting up some galvanized pipe to serve as a rose trellis for a person who insisted on all parts being galvanized, I found that no fittings could be purchased in the city but the ordinary black metal kind, writes a correspondent of Popular Mechanics.
As the customer was in a hurry, I planned to coat the toes and elbows necessary to complete the job. A strong solution of sal ammoniac was made up and the fittings placed in it and left there overnight. The next morning I removed and dried them, and then they were dipped in a strong solution of muriatic acid, after which I plated them in a pot of melted solder.
The kind galvanized half and half. When taken out, the fittings would pass any where for galvanized.

Motocars—Maintenance.

Consider the investment in your motor car. It is not only less than a thousand dollars. It may be several times a thousand. The heart of your car is the motor. The car is only as good as the motor. No matter how much you pay for a car, if the motor deranges, it is of little constant trouble, the greatest part of the value of your car has depreciated. Lubrication is the big thing in motorcar maintenance. Correct lubrication to a motor is like proper food to the body. Lack of lubrication is responsible for millions of dollars worth of motorcar depreciation every year. Good oil means low cost of maintenance. It means your car's maximum resale value.

Coal Cheaper Than Sun Heat.

The cost of an equipment to absorb energy from the sun would be about $152 per horsepower, says Frank Shuman in Power. An excellent steam plant could be put down for $40, and standard charges on the hundred odd in excess of this would pay for coal enough to operate such a plant ten hours a day with coal at $2 per long ton. It would appear that for the present the sun motor is in the same category as the wave motor. Energy which is not being dissipated can be conserved with other, but at a cost for investment which makes the yearly outlay greater than it would be at the present price of fuel.

Increasing Engine Power.

Water in small quantities injected into the cylinder with the mixture of gasoline and air will increase the power of the engine, says the Auto Dealer.
The great heat will convert the moisture into steam, creating steam, increasing the volume of power giving material.
It is not due to chemical changes of water into the component gases, as has been suggested.

Keep in touch with what is going on.
Read the Courier, that's the best way.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WHEN SHAD IS PLENTIFUL.

SHAD is one of our most popular food fishes, and now that it is in season those who are fond of it are enjoying it in every style.

Shad Timbales.—Free the fish from the skin and bones, chop as fine as possible and pound to a pulp. Press this pulp through a fine sieve. To each cupful add half a teaspoonful of salt, a little cayenne, the raw white of one egg and a little thick cream. Beat until blended and smooth, putting in the cream at the last. Have ready thin-baked molds, well buttered; fill even full with the mixture, place in a deep pan, pour around the molds some boiling water, cover molds with buttered paper and bake in a moderate oven.

Cooked in Salted Water.

Boiled Shad.—For this purpose the fish need not be scaled, but simply cleaned and washed. Put into boiling salted water and boil slowly for three-quarters of an hour. Drain and serve on a napkin garnished with sliced lemon and parsley.

Splendid Shad.—When the shad has been washed and de-boned place it in a large baking pan with pepper, salt and butter and bake slowly for twenty minutes. Then sprinkle with one teaspoonful of cayenne, cinnamon and allspice and a dash of cognac and pour over this one cupful of shiner and bake half an hour more.

With a Ham Dressing.

Baked Shad.—Lay on the head and fins. Make a dressing of equal parts of cranberries, and boiled ham or bacon minced fine, sweet marjoram, red pepper and a little powdered mace or cloves. Moisten it with beaten yolks of eggs. Spread the inside of the fish with it, reserving a little to rub over the outside, having first rubbed the fish all over with yolk of egg.

Planked Shad.—Select a firm, good sized fish and cut off the head and tail and detach the spinal bone. Season inside and out with salt and pepper and roll in flour. Now fry in butter or olive oil for five minutes. The plank, which is preferable when made of oak, should be well oiled with olive oil. Place the fish on the plank skin side down and bake in an oven for twenty minutes. Garnish the fish with lemon and parsley and serve on the plank.

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

tor was here about 10 o'clock, and I've never seen her so bad. He gave her a big dose of sleeping powder and put another in the table drawer for me to mix for her toward morning. She was helpless to move, we thought, but all the same she must have got out of bed when my back was turned and taken the powder dry on her tongue, for it didn't hasten things much, and I don't blame her. If ever there was a wild, reckless creature it was Hetty Rodman. But I, who am just the opposite, would have done the same if I'd been her."

"She hurriedly gave me a cup of coffee and, putting a coat and a cap on the boy, literally pushed me out of the house. 'I've got to report things to the doctor,' she said, 'and you're better out of the way. Go down that side street to the station, and mind you say the boy belonged to your sister, who died and left him to you. You're a Cockeranite, ain't you? So was Hetty, and they're all sisters, so you'll be telling no lies. Goodby, Rodman. Be a good boy and don't be any trouble to the lady.'"

"How I found the station, I do not know, nor how I made the journey, nor where I took the stagecoach. The snow began to fall, and by noon there was a drifting storm. I could not remember where I was going, nor who the boy was, for just as the snow was whirling outside so it was whirling in my brain."

"Mother, I can hardly bear to hear any more. It is too terrible!" cried Ivory, rising from his chair and pacing the floor.

"I can recall nothing of any account till I awoke in my own bed weeks afterwards. The strange little boy was there, but Mrs. Day and Dr. Perry told me what I must have told them—that he was the child of my dead sister. Those were the last words uttered by the woman in front of me. I carried them straight through my illness and brought them out on the other side more fully imprinted than ever."

"If only the truth had come back to you sooner," sighed Ivory, coming back to her bedside. "I could have helped you to bear it all these years. Sorrow is so much lighter when you can share it with some one else. And the girl who died was called Hetty Rodman, then, and she simply gave the child her last name?"

"Yes, poor, suffering creature, I feel no anger against her now—it has burned itself all away—nor do I feel any bitterness against your father. I forgot all this miserable story for so long, loving and watching for him all the time, that it is as if it did not belong to my own life, but had to do with some unhappy stranger. Can you forgive me, Ivory?"

"I can try," he answered. "God knows I ought to be able to if you can."

"And will it turn you away from Rod?"

"No. It draws me nearer to him than ever. He shall never know the truth. Why should he? Just as he crept close to you that night, all unconscious of the reason you had for shrinking from him, so he has crept close to me in these years of trial when your mind has been wandering."

"Life is so strange. To think that this child, of all others, should have been a comfort to you! The Lord's hand is in it!" whispered Mrs. Boynton feebly.

"His boyish belief in me, his companionship, have kept the breath of hope alive in me. That's all I can say."

"The Bible story is happening over again in our lives, then. Don't you remember that Aaron's rod budded and blossomed and bore fruit and that the miracle kept the rebels from murmuring?"

"This rebel never will murmur again, mother," and Ivory rose to leave the room. "Now that you have shed your burden you will grow stronger and life will be all joy, for Waitstill will come to us soon, and we can shake off these miseries and be a happy family once more."

"It is she who has helped me most to find the thread, pouring sympathy and strength into me, nursing me, loving me, because she loved my wonderful son. Oh, how best among women I am to have lived long enough to see you happy!"

And as Ivory kissed his mother and blew out the candle she whispered to herself, "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

CHAPTER XXIX.

The Deacon's Waterloo.

MRS. MASON'S welcome to Waitstill was unexpected, much heartier than it would have been six months before, when she regarded Mrs. Boynton as little less than a harmless lunatic, of no use as a neighbor, and who she knew nothing more of Ivory than she could gather by his occasional drive or walk past her door with a civil greeting.

Ivory made himself quickly at home and helped the old lady to get a room ready for Waitstill before he drove back for a look at his mother and then on to carry out his impetuous and romantic scheme of running out the town clerk and announcing his intended marriage.

Waitstill slept like the shepherd boy in "The Pilgrim's Progress," with the "herb called heart's ease" in her bosom. She opened her eyes next morning from the depths of Mrs. Mason's best feather bed and looked wonderingly about the room, with all its unaccustomed surroundings. She heard the rattle of fire irons and the clatter of dishes below, the first time in all her woman's life that preparations for breakfast had ever greeted her ears when she had not been an active participant in them.

She lay quite still for a quarter of an hour, tired in body and mind, but incredibly happy in spirit, marveling at the changes wrought in her during the day preceding, the most eventful one in her history.

The image of Ivory had been all through the night in the foreground of her dreams and in her moments of wakefulness, both made blissful by the heaven of anticipation that dawned upon her. Was ever man so wise, so tender and gentle, so strong, so comprehending? What mattered the absence of worldly goods, the presence of cure and anxiety, when a woman had a steady hand to hold, a steadfast heart to trust, a man who would love her and stand by her, whatever befell?

Then the face of Ivory's mother would swim into the mental picture; the pale face, as white as the pillow it lay upon; the face with its aureole of ashen hair, and the wistful blue eyes that begged of God and her children some peace before they closed on life.

"The vision of her sister was a joyful one, and her heart was at peace about her, the plucky little princess who had blazed the way out of the ogre's castle."

She saw Patty clearly as a future day lady, in velvets and satins and furs, bowing everybody by her gay splendor, her pliant vivacity, and the loving heart that lay underneath all the nonsense and gave it warmth and color.

The remembrance of her father alone on the hilltop did indeed trouble Waitstill. Self reproach, in the true sense of the word, she did not, could not, feel.

When she was thoughtfully eating her breakfast with Mrs. Mason a little later and waiting for Ivory to call for them both and take them to the Boynton farm, she little knew what was going on at her old home in these very hours, when to tell the truth, she would have liked to slip in, had it been possible, wash the morning dishes, skin the cream, do the week's churning, make her father's bed and slip out again into the dear shelter of love that awaited her.

The deacon had passed a good part of the night in scheming and contriving, and when he drank his self-made cup of muddy coffee at 7 o'clock next morning he had formed several plans that were to be immediately frustrated, and he knew it, by the exasperating and suspicious nature of the ladies involved in them.

At 8 he had left the house, started Bill Morrill at the store and was on the road in search of vengeance and a housekeeper. Old Mrs. Atkins of Deerwader sniffed at the wages offered. Miss Peters of Fenton Falls, an aged spinster with weak lungs, and the husband of a tell him that she feared she could not stand the cold in his house; she had heard he was very particular about the amount of wood that was burned. There was not another free woman within eight miles, and the deacon was chafing under the mortification of being continually obliged to state the reasons of his needing a housekeeper. The only hope, it seemed, lay in going to Saco and hiring a stranger, a plan not at all to his liking, as it was sure to involve him in extra expense.

Muttering threats against the universe in general, he drove home by way of Milliken's mills, thinking of the unfed hens, the mud-died cow, the unwashed dishes, the unburned cream and, above all, of his unshowered daughters, his race increasing with every step until it was nearly at the white heat of the night before.

"Do you want to come and housekeep for me?"

A long stretch of hill brought the tired old mare to a slow walk and enabled the deacon to see the Widow Tillman clipping the grass.

kitchen window.

Now, Foxwell Baxter had never been a village Lathrop at any age nor frequented the society of such. Of late years, indeed, he had frequented no society of any kind, so that he had misad, for instance, Abel Day's description of the Widow Tillman as a "regimental syren," though he vaguely remembered that some of the Baptist sisters had questioned the authenticity of her conversion by their young and attractive minister. She was a free woman. She was a comparative newcomer to the village, and her maid had not been poisoned with feminine gossip—in a word, she was a distinctly hopeful subject, and, noting on a blind and sudden impulse, he turned into the yard, flung the reins over the mare's neck and knocked at the back door.

"Her character's no worse than mine by now if Aunt Abby Cole's on the road," he thought grimly, "and if the Wilsons see my sleigh inside of a wilder's fence so much the better. I'll give 'em a jog. Good mornin', Mrs. Tillman," he said to the smiling lady. "I'll come to the point at once. My youngest daughter has married Mark Wilson against my will and gone away from town, and the older one's chosen a husband still less to my liking. Do you want to come and housekeep for me?"

"I surmised something was going on," returned Mrs. Tillman. "I saw Patty and Mark drive away early this morning, with Mr. and Mrs. Wilson wrapping the girl up and putting a hot stone in the sleigh and considerable kissing and hugging thrown in."

This knowledge added fuel to the flame that was burning fiercely in the deacon's breast.

"Well, how about the housekeeping?" he asked, trying not to show his eagerness and not recognizing himself at all in the enterprise in which he found himself indulging.

"I'm very comfortable here," the lady responded artfully, "and I don't know I care to make any change, thank you. I didn't like the village much at first, after living in larger places, but now I'm acquainted it kind of grows on me."

Her reply was carefully framed, for her mind worked with great rapidity, and she was mistress of the situation almost as soon as she saw the deacon alighting from his sleigh. He was not the sort of a man to be a casual caller, and his manner bespoke an urgent errand. She had a notion of $6 a month, but over and above that sum her living was precarious. She made coats, and she had never known want, for she was a master hand at dealing with the opposite sex. Deacon Baxter, according to common report, had ten or fifteen thousand dollars stowed away in the banks, so the situation would be as simple as possible under ordinary circumstances. It was as easy to turn out one man's pockets as another's when he was a normal human being, but Deacon Baxter was a different proposition.

"I wonder how long he's likely to live," she thought, glancing at him covertly out of the tail of her eye. "His evil temper must have driven more than one nail in his coffin. I wonder if I refuse to housekeep whether I'll get a better offer. I wonder if I could manage him if I got him. I'd rather like to set in the Baxter pew at the orthodox meeting house after the way some of the Baptist sisters have snubbed me since I come here."

Not a vestige of these incendiary thoughts showed in her comely countenance.

"I'd make the wages fair," urged the deacon, looking round the clean kitchen, with the breakfast table sitting near the sunny window and the odor of corned beef and cabbage issuing temptingly from a boiling pot on the fire. "I hope she ain't a great meat eater," he thought, "but it's too soon to cross that bridge yet awhile."

"I've no doubt of it," said the widow, wondering if her voice rang true, "but I've got a pension, and why should I leave this cozy little home? Would I better myself any—that's the question? I'm kind of homesick here. That's the only reason I'd consider a move."

"No need of help! Lonesome down to the Falls," said the deacon. "And I'm in an' out all day, between the barn and the store."

This, indeed, was not a pleasant prospect, but Jane Tillman had faced worse ones in her time.

"I'm no hand at any work outside the house," she observed, as if reflecting—"I can truthfully say I'm a good cook and have a great facility for making a little go a long way."

(She considered this a master stroke, and, in fact, it was, for the deacon's mouth absolutely watered at this apparently unconscious comprehension of his disposition.) "But I'm no hand at any chores in the barn or shed," she continued. "My husband would never allow me to do that kind of work."

"Perhaps I could get a boy to help out. We've been kind of 'thin' of that lately. What wages would you expect if I paid a boy for the rough work?" asked the deacon tremulously.

"Well, to tell the truth, I don't quite fancy the idea of taking wages. Judge Dickinson wants me to go to Alfred and housekeep for him and named $12 a month. It's good pay, and I haven't said 'No.' But my rent is small here, I'm my own mistress, and I don't feel like giving up my privileges."

"Twelve dollars a month!" he had never thought of approaching that sum, and he saw the heap of unwashed dishes growing day by day and the cream souring on the milk pans. Suddenly an idea sprang full blown into the deacon's mind. "That Morrill's 'Old Doctor' must have been close at hand! Would Jane Tillman marry him? No woman, in the three villages, would be more obnoxious to his daughters than in itself was a distant gally. She was a one, almost a queen, in our early forties, and he thought after all, that the hollow, bearded, shaggy-shanked kind were more expensive to feed on the whole than their better padded sisters. He had never had any difficulty in managing wives and thought himself quite equal to one more boat, even at sixty-five, though he had just the faintest suspicion that the high color on Mrs. Tillman's prominent cheek bones, the vigor shown in the coarse black hair and handsome eyebrows, might make this task a little more difficult than his previous ones.

"If you'd like to have a home of your own 'thout payin' rent, you've only got to say the word an' I'll make you Mrs. Baxter," said the deacon. "There'll be nobody to interfere with you, an' a handsome legacy if I die first, for none o' my few savin's is going to my daughters, I can promise you that."

The deacon threw out this tempting bait advisedly, for at this moment he would have poured his board into the lap of any woman who would help him to avenge his fancied wrongs.

This was information indeed! The "few savin's" alluded to amounted to some thousands, Jane Tillman knew. Had she not better turn her ships behind her, take the risks and have faith in her own powers? She was getting along in years, and her charms of person were lessening with every day that passed over her head. If the deacon's queer ways grew too queer, she thought, an appeal to the doctor and the minister might provide a way of escape and a neat little income to boot. So, on the whole, the marriage, though much against her natural inclinations, seemed to be providentially arranged.

If Jane Tillman became Mrs. Baxter she intended to get the whip hand and keep it, but nothing was further from her intention than to make the deacon miserable. If she could help it, that was not her disposition, and so, when the deluded man left her house, he had made many concessions in a single hour than in all the former years of his life.

His future spouse was to write out a little paper for his signature: just a friendly little paper to be kept quite private and confidential between themselves, stating that she was to do no work outside of the house; that her pension was to be her own; that she was to have $5 in cash on the first of every month in lieu of wages, and that in case of his death occurring first she was to have a third of his estate, and the whole of it if at the time of his decease he was still pleased with his bargain. The only points in this contract that the deacon really understood were that he was paying only $5 a month for a housekeeper to whom a Judge had offered $12; that, as he had expected to pay at least $8, he could get a boy for the remaining $3, and so be none the worse in pocket; also that if he could keep his daughter from getting his money, he didn't care a hang who had it, as he hated the whole human race with entire impartiality. If Jane Tillman didn't believe herself to be pleasing visions of converting most of his fortune into cash and having it dropped off the bridge some dark night, when the doctor had given him up and proved to his satisfaction that death would occur in the near future.

All this being harmoniously settled, the deacon drove away and caused the announcement of his immediate marriage to be posted directly below that of Waitstill and Ivory Boynton.

A "spite match," the community in general called the deacon's marriage, and many a man and many a woman, too, regarding the amazing publishing notice in the frame up at the meeting house, felt that in Jane Tillman Deacon Baxter had met his Waterloo.

(To be continued next week.)

Cutting Glass Disks.

The small shop not equipped with a circular glass cutter can cut disks for steam and pressure gauges in the following manner: Fasten a wood disk to the face plate of the lathe, the disk having a diameter larger than the glass to be cut. Apply a thin coat of glue to both the surface of the wood and of the glass. Place a piece of paper on the glued surface of the glass, and then apply both to the glued surface of the wood disk. Rotate the lathe spindle by hand and at the same time hold a common glass cutter on the glass at such distance from the center as to make a disk of the proper size. The glass disk can be removed easily before the glue has time to harden. Popular Mechanics.

Utah's Lory Mountains.

Utah has six mountain peaks which rise more than 13,000 feet above sea level and nearly sixty peaks which are more than 12,000 feet above sea level, according to the United States geological survey. The highest mountain in the state is Kings Peak, with an elevation of 13,438 feet, but Mount Emmons and Gilbert Peak are also lofty mountains, 13,428 and 13,422 feet, respectively. The other peaks rising above 12,000 feet are, Mount Lovell, 12,550 feet; Tokewanna peak, 13,200 feet; and Wilson peak, 13,005 feet.

Life of Auto Chains.

The life of the steel chain under automobile conditions is largely dependent on the wear at the joints. On account of the high speed and the whiplash of the chain, it is important that the joints be well oiled. Efficient lubrication is the secret of efficient chain service.

A LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

At Charlevoix Theatre, Sunday, August 22, 1914.

BY JACOB S. SHIELD, C. S. B.

Member of The Christian Science
Board of Lectureship of the First Church of Christ Scientist,
Boston, Mass.

Jacob S. Shield, C. S. B., of Chicago, Ill., a member of the Christian Science board of lectureship, delivered a lecture Sunday afternoon on Christian Science under the auspices of the Christian Science Society of this city in the Charlevoix Theatre.

Fred A. Smith introduced the lecturer. Mr. Smith said:

FRIENDS:—In behalf of the Christian Science Society of Charlevoix, permit me to extend to you all a most cordial and hearty welcome. It has been the custom of this Society to give annually a free lecture on Christian Science, a subject which is today the most vital to all mankind, and which is enjoying a more favorable consideration, thought and study of the thinking people of the whole world. The means by which Christian Science has come to your attention, by which it has engaged the foremost thinkers of our day is not to be found in any claims Christian Science makes for itself, but is to be found in the good results it has brought about in the lives of relatives, friends and acquaintances. Their health, their morals, their business, their very aims have undergone a reformation.

Science and Theology have been at work since time began in an attempt to correct the errors of human existence. Until the advent of Christian Science these forces, so-called, were regarded in the main as antagonistic. Now on every hand we hear testimony from rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, bond and free to the effect that through Christian Science these two, Science and Theology have been successfully united on a working basis. It is not our desire or purpose to extol Christian Science, but rather to explain it, its motive, operation and beneficial influence. This scientific healing, saving, regenerating process or message of divine Love is awakening, educating, elevating all mankind into better, purer, holier habits of thought and living through a clearer apprehension of Truth and its revealing a practical theodicy, and present day possibility of understanding God, Principle, the creator, preserver and giver of every good and perfect gift.

Christian Science is growing very rapidly and is occupying the thought and attention of people more and more. It does not create or establish a Truth, it simply and consistently proclaims it, and projects into human consciousness that which always was and always will be true. It is God's unfoldment of the Truth in a way never before known.

We have with us this afternoon one of the members of the board of lectureship of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., who is well and thoroughly qualified to elucidate the subject of Christian Science, and with great pleasure I now present to you, Mr. Jacob S. Shield, of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Shield said:

The message which I bear you is one of love. The Bible says "love is the fulfilling of the law," and it is of this fulfillment, an understanding and practice in Christian Science, that I would speak to you.

The civil law, under which we hold citizenship, changes from time to time, but every right-minded man and woman observes this law, for no other reason than the protection it affords in the orderly conduct of their lives and the peaceful possession of property.

The divine law, under which we claim sonship, is "the same yesterday, and today, and forever." It declares that "all men are created equal," and endows them with "inalienable rights," such as "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." We have only to be law-abiding to enjoy this heritage. Strength, abundance, joy are spiritual facts. Whoever will may have them, whether he be Greek, Scythian or Jew, for they are of God, who is Himself all inclusive Life, Truth and Love.

THE UNIVERSE GOVERNED THROUGH DIVINE LAW

The whole universe is governed through divine law. Every blade of grass which springs from the ground, every flower that unfolds, every tree that spreads its branches every ray of sunshine, every movement or fluctuation of the stars, planets and constellations is governed through the same infinite law. So accurate and perfect is the operation of this law that an eclipse—100 years hence—between the sun, the earth and the moon, may be calculated today, to the very second of its occurrence. According to astronomical calculations some of the planets travel many miles every second. Is it not evident that only infinite wisdom and power could establish such marvelous order and perfection?

The same divine wisdom and power which governs and maintains the universe in its orderly operation also governs and sustains man.

THE LAW OF MOSES AND CHRIST JESUS THE SAME AS TAUGHT BY CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

The Mosaic law, revealed to all men for all time from Mount Sinai, was the first exposition of the divine law which should govern man in his relationship to God, as well as to his fellow man. From it spring all human laws and moral codes. The First Commandment is supreme and all inclusive, in its declaration of God, and its warning against the recognition of any power or law as originating in anything but physical or material. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me" is the origin and basis of all true religion. Upon it was founded the ancient confession of faith of the Jewish people: "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord," and "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." (Deut. vi, 4-5.)

Christ Jesus taught this same law, saying, "Thou shalt not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." (Matt. v, 17.) It is written that a lawyer asked of him, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus said unto him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and greatest commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." (Matt. xxii, 36-40.)

Christian Science accepts the law in all its completeness, as expounded by both Moses and Christ Jesus. On page 467 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook, we read:—"The first demand of this Science is, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me.' The second is like unto it, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.' And again, on page 9, we find—"Dost thou love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind? This command includes much, even the surrender of all the material senses, affection and worship. This is the El Dorado of Christianity."

Resting under divine promise, confident that God would provide for and sustain them, the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—as well as the later prophets—manifested the power of God, through faith, attained unusual length of years, and through spiritual intuition imparted the Messianic prophecy, foreseeing the fulfillment of the promises in Christ Jesus. It is not probable that any man ever lived so close to the word of God. He it was who first discerned the basic rule of divine law that there must be a separation or division, in consciousness, of evil from good. He realized that man cannot serve two masters. Therefore he fought with the evil suggestions within himself, not letting go the angel—the thought of God—until he had won the struggle. Then it was that his name was changed from Jacob to Israel, or "soldier of God."

The state of consciousness which is the result of the overcoming of evil propensities was the promised seed to be blessed throughout the entire world. Some time every man will wrestle with the error within himself even to the point of "overcoming every thought at variance with God. Then will he have earned the name "Israel"—"soldier of God"—and become one of the "children of Israel." He will be of the "chosen people" because he has chosen God. The promise of the Revelation is "he that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

In the Old Testament narratives we can find a long list of works wrought by the power of God, through the faith of those who confidently relied upon Him. Moses' transformation of the rod into a serpent; the leprous hand and its healing; the passage through the Red Sea; the sweetening of the waters of Marah; the falling of manna from the skies; the production of water from the rock; the healing of Miriam's leprosy; Elijah's increase of the widow's meal and oil; the raising of the widow's son from death; the rain which fell in answer to prayer; the translation of Elijah; the delivery of the Israelite boys from the fiery furnace and the preservation of Daniel from the lions, are all important records of God's power, and the direct result of the operation of divine law—the eternal.

These Old Testament wonders are greatly intensified in their significance to humanity by the works of the man Jesus and his apostles in their adherence to the same law. The thousands who were healed, and the power he exerted over all material conditions, and forces, give living evidence that not only did he have the unbounded faith in God evinced by the Patriarchs, but that he understood the operation of divine law and its practical use in earthly life.

By adhering strictly to the original divine law and turning away from all false gods in matter, by giving to God the "glory, honor, dominion and power everlasting due His only name" following as closely as they can the commands of the Master Messiah, Christian Scientists are today healing the sick and reforming the sinner—in a measure repeating the works of the Patriarchs and Christ Jesus.

HUMANITY SEEKING PRACTICAL RELIGION

Thoughtful men are beginning to realize that religion must mean more than a mere belief. They are looking for that which cannot be inherited, transferred nor adopted; that it is not the chattel of any particular organization or church, and that it is not acquired by fasting or fasting. They are seeking for a more practical religion, for less dogma and more love; less ritualism and more spirituality; less creed and more works; less scholasticism and more truth.

Humanity wants to know God—the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—the God of the prophets and of Christ Jesus. They want a God whom they may know as a Father, kind, merciful, just, true—who, as the Psalmist says, "forgiveth all thine iniquities," who healeth all thy diseases, and who hideth himself from His children but doalms that they should know Him; a God who is a very present help in time of trouble.

The religions of the world have failed to answer the heart's appeal. The searcher for Truth has been made to believe that nothing definite can be known until the portals of human existence close behind him. The man who is hungry and thirsty will seek food and drink wherever he can find it, and the same is true of him who is hungry and thirsty for spiritual food and drink. Christian Science is doing much to satisfy this craving by giving men a scientific, demonstrable religion, a religion not so much of preaching as of works. Thousands upon thousands have been touched by this ministry of redemption, wisdom, kindness, gratitude and good fellowship. Every sorrow comforted, every pain relieved, every sin overcome, every misfortune reduced, every prejudice annihilated, every disease healed by the power of God proves the efficacy of divine law, makes man more reverent toward God, and more gentle and tolerant toward his fellow man.

GOD AS MIND
Christian Scientists know God, not as a magnified personality, but as Mind; the Mind which is infinite Good, Love, Life, Truth. All that is good, all that is true, all that is real, all that is divine, all that is spiritual, all that is immortal, all that is eternal, all that is God, God, God, is also the mind of man, and divine law demands that man shall have no other god, hence, no other mind.

GOD AS LOVE
The favorite appellation of Christian Scientists for God is Love. The Mind expresses the divine nature, and the tender relation between God and His creation. Moved with God's great compassion, filled with an unswerving flood of gratitude for the conscious sense of immortality, or "God with us," men in all ages have tried to image forth in the depth of God's love for His children; but no human thought can conceive it, nor human tongue express it, even when most aware of His brooding tenderness and watchful care.

For the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind; and the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind. The unwavering affection of a mother for her little ones (perhaps the most perfect love human beings can know) is but a reflection of the divine love, and a faint glimpse of the loving affection, the boundless provision of God for His own. David sang of Him as a shepherd guarding His flock; guiding them to green pastures and beside still waters, while Jesus laid His hand on the head of the poor and the sorrowing, and the power and the glory forever.

Christian Scientists accept God as their creator, as their guide and shepherd, as their provider, as their friend, as their physician. Indeed as the very substance of their existence, for in Him we live, and move, and have our being.

GOD AS PRINCIPLE
Another of the descriptive synonyms for God, as we know Him in Christian Science, is divine Principle, which signifies that God, divine Mind, operates within Himself, all wisdom, truth, law, order and perfection of being. Principle must always have these unchanging qualities. We say the same in referring to the principle of mathematics, for it also binds within itself all truth, law, order and perfection of being. And as all universes have a perfect and inseparable co-existence with the principle of mathematics, just so man and all the universe are co-existent with the divine Principle of being.

DIVINE LAW ALWAYS PRESENT
The perfect Mind, Love and Principle which govern man and the universe have never been absent for a moment, but mortal man has excluded them from his realization by dwelling in the mists of materiality and error.

If one stands in the bright sunlight, with 20 veils over his eyes, the light will seem to be darkness, but as these veils are removed the light becomes clearer. Mortal man has had more than 20 veils over his mental vision, which have excluded the divine light. These veils consisted of belief in idolatry, bigotry, fanaticism, superstition, hate, jealousy, envy, fear, laws of disease and the like. One by one these veils are falling away, and as they go from us the light of truth becomes clearer.

When all the darkening veils shall have been taken away man's immortal being will be realized. This will bring the kingdom of heaven. St. Paul writes in First Corinthians (15:53-54):

"For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

Men must separate wrong from right thinking, even as one separates dross from gold, tarcs from wheat, impurities from water. This process leaves the pure, the good, the true, the immortal, and the immortal.

Only one man has lived upon this earth who can be referred to as a perfect or ideal thinker, the man Christ Jesus. He understood and demonstrated the omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence of God, and permitted no compromise of this all-inclusive truth to enter his consciousness. God was all-in-all to him. He instructed others to accept God in the same spirit, especially those who were blinded by ceremonial, ritualistic and material worship, but his teaching, works and mission were greatly misunderstood and remain so, in a large degree, even to this day.

Many honest Christian people believe Jesus to be God, and address him as such, and pray and worship to him. There is nothing in this entirely and use every possible argument to discredit his Messiahship, his works, and his narratives relating to him. Christian Science corrects these wide-spread delusions. I will read from the following:

"Christ, as the true spiritual life is the ideal of God now and forever, here and everywhere. The Jew who believes in the First Commandment is a monotheist, he has one omniscient God, and the law unites with the Christian's doctrine that God is come and is present now and forever. The Christian who believes in the First Commandment is a monotheist. Thus he virtually unites with the Jew's belief in one God, and recognizes that Jesus Christ is not God, as Jesus himself declared, but is the Son of God" (p. 361).

The Christian Science interpretation of the teaching and mission of Jesus conform in every detail to his own statements and to the teachings of the Apostles and the Scriptures in general—both the Old and New Testaments.

The Jewish people had expected a Messiah long before the birth of Jesus. Prophecy foretold his coming, but the coming was not in the manner expected. They anticipated the coming of a mighty king who could overthrow the power of their oppressors and restore their material kingdom. They could see no likeness in their conception of the Messiah, the humble babe born in a manger. They disappointed and frustrated the hopes of a mighty king who could overthrow the power of their oppressors and restore their material kingdom. They could see no likeness in their conception of the Messiah, the humble babe born in a manger. They disappointed and frustrated the hopes of a mighty king who could overthrow the power of their oppressors and restore their material kingdom.

Notwithstanding the false accusations against him, and the indignities and assaults to which he was subjected, Jesus fulfilled the mission for which he came. What he thought regarding those who opposed him can be summed up in the words uttered in the moment of his greatest trial, when he said "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." He knew that the time would come when his words and his deeds would be understood and justified.

When the first positive conviction dawned upon me that Jesus came to present to the world a Godly wisdom by which sin, disease and death could be eliminated, and when I realized how patient, meek, loving, kind and happy he was, through all his suffering, I was touched first with a deep sense of shame and remorse, and then by a sense of love and gratitude. In that moment of awakening I found the real Christ, the true Son of God.

The divine law is a divine law, wisdom and power which was a secret from the world, is evident by the marvelous demonstrations of Jesus. Such wisdom is referred to in the Scriptures as the wisdom of God, against which worldly wisdom is vainly puffed up. The entire Bible teems with references pertaining to such wisdom, such as the Proverbs—"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding." "She is a tree of life to them that lay hold thereof, and her fruit is every one that retaineth her," and "Get wisdom, and with all thy getting get understanding."

Christian Science shows that Jesus comprehended the Godly wisdom, with it he was enabled to prove the vast difference between the mortal mind and immortal Mind. His mission was, first, to demonstrate his own understanding of divine power and law, and second, to teach all men that the same power and law was available. He understood the law which leads him to the realization of eternal life. The world only knew the erroneous mortal mind law which leads to death. These laws are contrary to the one to which St. Paul relates in his letter to the Romans:

"For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

JESUS OVERCAME ALL MATERIAL LAWS

Jesus overcame the so-called law of material force by calming a raging sea and stilling a violent storm. He overcame the laws of physiology, anatomy, pathology, and material media by healing the sick, the lame, the blind, the deaf and by raising the dead. He overcame the laws of production by turning water into wine, and feeding the thousands with a few loaves and fishes—concluding with more than the original supply.

He overcame the law of gravity by walking on the water. He overcame the law of mortality by overcoming death for himself and others. Finally, he overcame the law of material or physical existence by his ascension.

It is not an overwhelming evidence that his mission was to demonstrate the superiority of divine power and law over the mortal and material law.

The same law which Jesus used centuries ago is operative and available today. Divine law is always present and universal, because it is infinite. That it is not circumscribed to personal possession is verified by Jesus' own words:

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." (John xiv, 12.)

He chose showing the way, the truth, and the life. He came to bring to light the ideas, laws, and laws with wisdom and power, the man whom God creates, and the only kind of man God ever created. Jesus desired that humanity should know the true status of being, and sought to teach them how to reject the evil and the erroneous conditions which hide the real man. Paul gives a similar admonition in his epistle to the Ephesians:

"Put off concerning the former conversation the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."

the reverse is true, as is evident from the statement:

"I can of mine own self do nothing." "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

His saying, "I and my Father are one," referred to in man's co-existence with God, the union of cause and effect. If a ray of light could express its relation to the sun it would say, "I and the sun are one." "One and the same, but at one, linked together, the reflection of the sun."

Jesus' further statement, "He that hath seen me hath seen my Father," evidently referred to the quality of cause and effect as identical. The context shows that he had no intention of conveying the idea that those who saw his physical structure had seen God. What he clearly conveyed was that those who discerned the quality of Godliness, the good, the Life, the Truth, the Love, the power which he had shown forth had seen the same quality which comprises the aliveness of God. From the same reasoning one who has seen the smallest measure of water has really seen the quality of the mightiest ocean.

God can only be known and seen in unity, never in respect to quantity. God is infinite, and no man can ever comprehend or include infinity, but may continue to understand infinity more and more, forever.

Jesus came to bring "Good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." On earth peace, good will toward men, and that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," were his words.

HEALING BY THE EARLY CHRISTIANS

Jesus taught his disciples how to heal the sick and reform sinners, and they in turn taught others, so that, as history records, the healing was practiced nearly three centuries after the crucifixion, and then it became so densely overshadowed by the evil in mortal mind that the human consciousness could not longer contain it. By departing from the law of Moses and his trust in God, and failing to heed the fulfillment of the law, as expounded by Jesus Christ, mankind perverted spirituality to materialism; true religion to superstition; religious zeal to fanaticism; and black art, divine science to occultism; divine influence to animal magnetism and hypnotism; spiritual joys to physical pleasures; spiritual desires to lust for material things; the help of God in time of sickness to witchcraft and other material means.

Nevertheless, Truth has always remained, and was again brought to light by Mary Baker Eddy. We know that the kingdom has not suffered by the lapse, and now in these latter days all can find the way by which to know themselves as Christ Jesus knew himself. Paul writes in Romans, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

The Son of God is the Image and Likeness of God. God is Spirit. All men eventually learn that man is spiritual. In reality, man has but one nature, the divine. The human or material is fictitious and unrighteous. The universal belief that man has two natures is the cause of all our troubles, and the original sin, and will hold humanity in bondage until one nature, one God, is universally acknowledged.

In Romans we read, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Man is divinely endowed with the ability to overcome the material or carnal mind, and thereby work out his perfect, harmonious at-one-ment with God.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE
When I first took up the study of Christian Science, it seemed impossible that my thought could ever become spiritualized, for I had always been very material. Business and pleasure occupied my entire attention. I was not accustomed to seeking my help through prayer, therefore I could see no probability of regenerating such a mind. One evening, while thus contemplating the seriousness of my situation, I opened the Bible and verses five and six of the third chapter of Proverbs came to my notice. "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

I pondered over these declarations long and earnestly, and finally concluded to do as they directed, that is, acknowledge God in all my ways. Thus, whenever I rode or walked, I declared God as the power which permitted it. I affirmed His wisdom in every transaction, and accredited every supply to Him, with gratitude. I did not go to sleep without acknowledging Him to be the giver of all rest and peace; and so, whatever I did, wherever I went, I had God in my thought continually.

To my surprise, in a comparatively short time I found this kind of thinking quite natural, desirable and extremely satisfying. I found myself rejecting sin. I was learning to think in a spiritual way, and yet such thinking was practical. I had evidence of this from a better state of health, and from desires which came to me. I felt an increasing inclination to help others, to forgive my enemies, and to be more kind, just, true and honest. I had a great wish to pray and to heal the sick—all things which I had never known before. I am thankful to say that I have made progress from the very hour when I first determined to have God with me in all my thoughts. Many of my acquaintances have had, and are having, similar experiences. For Truth not only has the quality of being believed, but the faculty of being done as well.

HEALTH THE RESULT OF GOOD THINKING

If you were the only person in the world and you had been thinking good and evil as the world generally does, you should conclude to discontinue this way and decide to think exactly as the Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount direct, and you should carry this out to the very letter, that is, think and do only that which is good, pure and upright, then where would evil be? Evil has no principle, law or government to uphold it. It is only what you permit it to be, in your thought. Hate, jealousy, anger and revenge are evils and they are our worst enemies to health and happiness.

Good thoughts, such as the child-like trust in God, kindness, gentleness, purity, honesty, uprightness, respect health, harmony and beauty upon the body, while their opposites—trust to material help, hate, jealousy, dishonesty, immorality, etc., express discord and sickness in the body.

MEDICAL AUTHORITIES RECOGNIZING MENTAL CAUSATION OF DISEASE

This Chicago Record Herald of March 29, 1914, contains a very interesting article relative to the experiments and observations of Dr. George Crile, the eminent surgeon of the Lakeside hospital in Cleveland, Ohio, as to the effect of fear, anger and malice upon the human system of the individual who indulges in them. After elaborate experiments with rabbits and dogs, the extensive observation of acquaintances, friends and patients, he announces that under disturbed mental conditions the normal bodily secretions become poisonous, and are thrown into the blood in excessive quantities by the skeletal organs subjected to abnormal emotional strain.

Another and similar statement comes from the American Press from a specialist in the medical department of the Johns Hopkins University, saying that appendicitis and certain serious diseases of the stomach had, to his judgment, a purely mental origin. He advised, before any other treatment was attempted, that inquiry be made into the condition of the patient's mind—the possible strain on the nervous system arising from business or domestic worries, apprehension or fear. The cause once fairly located, it was easy, in his opinion, to deal with the effect. Mental disturbances being nated, all the ugly physical symptoms would disappear.

All this Mrs. Eddy brought to light almost half a century ago, and it will eventually be found that not only the diseases enumerated by these distinguished physicians are the result of evil mental conditions, but that all diseases have their origin in abnormal thinking.

During the 14 years of my study and investigation of Christian Science I have seen nearly every kind of chronic and acute disease healed by the power of divine Mind, after medical practitioners had given up all hope, and when there were cases of insanity, acute pneumonia, tuberculosis, cancer, tumor, acute appendicitis, gall stones, chronic constipation, neuritis and many others. A number of these healings were among my own relatives. What I know of Christian Science, and what I have seen it accomplish, have given me the positive and absolute conviction that every disease known to humanity can be healed by the understanding and practice of God's law, as set forth in Christian Science.

Much is said in these days about hardening of the arteries, and high blood pressure. They too are the result of disturbed mental conditions. COMMERCIAL PANICS THE RESULT OF FEAR
What is true of the human body is also true of the body politic. A panic produces a rigid state in the arteries of trade, in the manufacturing and commercial centers, so that nothing seems to move without extreme pressure. The dictionaries define panic as "a sudden, unaccountable, unreasonable fright." To cure such a condition, confidence must be restored. It was the great cry during the panic of 1907 that everything would be righted if only the fear of the people would relax.

If all people were Christians, there would be no more panics, because they have confidence in the protecting and sustaining care of the heavenly Father, and thus lose the anxiety in regard to their supply. They believe in the reality of the statement of our Master, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his rightness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

IDOLATRY WIDESPREAD
Breaching the law of the First Commandment, having other gods, indulging in idolatry, is the greatest of all evils, and yet nearly every one of us is involved in this error. Idolatry does not consist solely in the worship of material images. Parents often make idols of their children; men worship persons of profession; artists worship their art; students worship earthly wisdom; pet animals and physical adornments absorb the affections; wealth, fame worldly ambitions and pleasures often fill the consciousness and exclude the needed spiritual help. These are idolatrous and harmful. Humanity curses them by calling them "hobbies," and the peculiar results they produce "eccentricities of the professional."

MAN IS AS HE THINKS

The Scriptures declare, as man thinketh in his heart, so he is, and no truer statement was ever made. This does not mean, however, that man is what he thinks himself to be, for one might think himself very righteous when he was quite the opposite. It signifies that man's being is mental, and the quality of his thoughts, entertained represent his inclination—whether to the human or the divine, the mortal or the immortal.

Nearly every one in the world thinks more on the mortal than the immortal plane. We learn to do so in our earliest training. Parents often impress fear of disease and sin upon their children before they are old enough to think for themselves, and these impressions remain and grow unless uprooted by spiritual understanding.

Mrs. Eddy has urged the annihilation of all wrong thought mortal mind. All that pertains to evil, sin, sorrow, sickness, pain and death originate in the so-called mortal mind. On the other hand, all that relates to life, health, peace, harmony and perfection have their origin and eternal existence in divine Mind.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS BELIEVE IN PRAYER

Christian Scientists are sometimes said to be a prayerless people. No apostle could be farther from the truth than this. Christian Scientists believe in prayer "without ceasing,"

They believe in keeping thought active in the right direction, in order to expel all the errors of false training, and to separate the mental chaff from the wheat, as did Jacob of old in his conflict with evil. We believe we should never cease to acknowledge God's supremacy over all, and His loving and merciful kindness to His children.

Our prayer is not so much in supplication to God for help as in acknowledgment of the good which He already has given. If one had a gold mine, filled with precious metal, he would not think it consistent to pray for gold, but would expect to find himself to that which was already his. Christian Scientists do ask God for guidance, wisdom and help. They know that He has given them all things, and that their need is only to awake from their dreamy mortal mind, and to avail themselves of His infinite goodness. Christian Scientists try to become wholly submersed in the divine will, and to be ever alert to resist thoughts which are unlike good. This is their prayer, which conforms to the Scriptural admonition, "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil [evil] and he will flee from you."

When a Christian Scientist is tempted to think of pain or sickness, he immediately turns against it and declares for the allness, completeness and absolute perfection of God's creation, which is expressed in man. He refuses to believe that pain or disease is any part of perfection. This resistance of ungodly thought, if correctly understood, prevents the error from entering the consciousness, hence it cannot exist. When in this way good results obtain it proves that God, divine Mind, is the healer of all our diseases.

You who can see through the density of mortal mind, and can realize for an instant the eternal perfection which the Heavenly Father has bestowed upon you (though you may seem to have been afflicted from the day of your birth) may go forth from this place free from disease and pain, for such is the law of good over evil. It is that kind of prayer which healed the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, and it is that kind of prayer which heals the sick today. The Saviour said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

It is in the quiet sanctuary of our mental home, the secret place of the most High, where Christian Scientists affirm God's allness, mercy and justice. There they find the power of Truth to overcome the beliefs of mortal error, and to suffer the "still small voice," and respond in freedom from disease and live to bless and praise the Giver of all good.

GREAT POSSIBILITIES IN CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

When Christian Scientists understand enough of Christian Science they will not only heal all cases of disease, but will do so instantaneously. At present we are glad even to touch the hem of the Christ garment. We are still like the children who demonstrate the simpler degrees of mathematics.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS AND THE BIBLE

Christian Scientists love the Bible. They declare it to be the book of all books, as it is the book of life. Its inspired pages contain the secrets of all being. All that pertains to Christian Science Mrs. Eddy gleaned from divine inspiration and the Bible. She found that the Bible has a two-fold meaning, one the literal or material, and the other the spiritual. This discovery cleared up the seeming contradictions and revealed the divine order of being.

With the help which Christian Scientists receive from their textbook the study of the Bible becomes an inspiration. The seemingly dark and hidden sayings, which have puzzled the ages, become clear and luminous under the searchlight of Christian Science, and Christian Scientists hunt for the new and priceless gems in the stimulating pages of that dear old book, even as the miner expectantly and eagerly digs for treasure.

MRS. EDDY'S HEALING AND DISCOVERY OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Mrs. Eddy's first awakening to the divine healing power came to her when, from the effects of an accident, her recovery seemed hopeless. Her early spiritual training tended to inspire confidence in the power of God to heal the sick, when man reached his extremity and failed, she turned to God to verify that early confidence. Her healing was instantaneous. From that moment the new light of Truth dawned upon her, which, in the Preface of Science and Health, she describes as "the first steps of a child in the newly discovered world of Spirit."

Mrs. Eddy had discovered the law of spiritual healing and brought the blessed message to the world that there is a comforter for every sorrow, however despairing; that there is a law of restoration for every fear and disease; a purification for every sin and a panacea for every ill. Because it is the same law known to and taught by Christ Jesus, and because its operation is governed by scientific principle, Mrs. Eddy named it Christian Science. It is undoubtedly the "Comforter" and the "Spirit of Truth" which the Master promised would come again—and it has come to remain forever. "Let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

GREAT WORKS ACCOMPLISHED BY MRS. EDDY

Mrs. Eddy brought the most important message that has come to humanity since Jesus preached the Sermon on the Mount. Think of the battlefields of history and the issues at stake; think of your own personal struggles—business, political, moral—recall your defeats, your intrigues, your triumphs and failures; survey the work accomplished by Mrs. Eddy and ask yourselves, and answer honestly, the question, Could she have stood, save as God stood with her? Think of the sublime courage of this woman who bravely met the opposition of the whole world, struggling without thought of pleasure—against false human opinion, criticism, accusation and denunciation which amounted to persecution.

She realized it was her mission to establish an organization which was to be universal in spreading the new-old healing and saving Gospel, and went about it with an unswerving devotion to the cause to which she was called. The influence of her teaching has been felt throughout the world. It has changed the lives of hundreds of thousands of sinful, sick and despairing men, women and children, making them holier, healthier, happier, and its tender ministry goes on in ever widening channel.

The seed of her sowing bore fruit in a small organization which has grown to magnificent proportions. There is a beautiful Mother Church edifice in Boston, with many thousands of communicants, and hundreds of branch churches, located in every civilized country on the globe. New churches and societies are being formed at the rate of one for every three and a half to four days.

When Mrs. Eddy first discovered Christian Science, she put it to every possible test, to make sure she had a demonstrable truth. After practicing it for some years, and healing disease in every stage, she began to teach it to others, establishing the Metaphysical College, wherein she taught several thousand students. Mrs. Eddy is the authoress of several books upon Christian Science, chief among them that which is known as the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

This book is the Christian Scientist's authority for all that pertains to Christian Science. It is a commentary on the Bible. It explains the Science of Being. It sets forth the cause and cure of all diseases, and death, and unveils the hitherto unexplained mysteries of life. Those who have been healed by reading this precious book. You may inquire how this can be. Because every sentence is a declaration of Divine Truth, and the Truth makes free, as the Master declared.

There are four Christian Science publications. The Christian Science Bible Lessons, issued quarterly, are prepared from the Bible, with correlative passages from Science and Health. They furnish weekly lessons and sermons for the churches and societies and Christian Scientists find much help from the daily study of them. The Christian Science Journal and Der Herold, issued monthly, and the Christian Science Sentinel, issued weekly, each contain lessons of healing, contributed by the field. The Christian Science Monitor, issued by the Christian Science Publishing Society, is a daily newspaper. It is an impersonal messenger, as it were.

The exponent of clean journalism. It is not a sectarian paper. It is a wide-awake, interesting, instructive news bearer to every home, office and place of business. You will find one article upon Christian Science in it each day. That article is food and inspiration for all who care to read it. The rest of its pages are filled with the best, most accurate, most helpful news that can be gathered throughout the world. Bankers, brokers, men in various lines of business, travelers and diplomats in foreign lands; farmers, mechanics, professional men, politicians, sportsmen, literary men and women interested in either fashion or economics—irrespective of race or religion—regard it as the best newspaper ever published, and are glad to say so.

It is freely accepted by the authorities in charge of jails and penitentiaries where other newspapers are rejected and is passed along to the inmates because of the good influence it has with them. Think of all this as the work of one woman, and the growth of only 19 years. Then approximate, if you can, what it will be in the next 40 years. Does it not give you Christian Scientists courage, renewed inspiration and added zeal to have part in such a glorious spreading of the gospel of salvation?

Christian Scientists are truly grateful for the healing of disease and sin, and the many blessings which they have experienced through the truth as revealed by Mrs. Eddy, but even these fade into insignificance compared to the better understanding of God and man's true relation to Him, which Christian Science unfolds.

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS DO NOT WORSHIP MRS. EDDY

Christian Scientists worship God only. The imputation that they worship otherwise is wholly false. It is our greatest concern to live in strict obedience to the law, as given in the First Commandment. The success of every Christian Scientist depends upon it. Indeed, to have absolutely no other gods than the one Infinite Mind is the rule with which all healing is accomplished.

Because of the numberless blessings which have come to them through Christian Science, Christian Scientists revere the name of Mary Baker Eddy, and love her with true sincerity and tenderness. Through her discovery of Christian Science, God has made "his face to shine" upon enslaved humanity. Because Mrs. Eddy was obedient in the command to love God above all things, she loved humanity also, and lived a life of constant, prayerful devotion to God, in order to save the fallen and heal the sick. She sought an earthly glory or fame. All she asked was that men should hear the divine message which makes free.

On Bedloe's Island in New York harbor stands a colossal bronze statue of a woman holding aloft a lighted torch, symbolizing "Liberty enlightening the world." It is an inspiring and noble idea—a figure full of meaning, seeming to assure in the alien the liberty, well being and happiness of which he has dreamed and making light the harbor in a glad "Welcome Home" for every returning wanderer.

Even so there is another harbor, at the entrance whereof every storm tossed man who has sailed the uncharted sea of error will find Christian Science. The spiritual under-standing of woman holds aloft this light of Truth and liberty by which the wanderer may know and find the way to enter the "Promised Land"—the peace of God poseth all un-dermining.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BIBLE STUDY

A DAY OF QUESTIONS. Matthew 22:15-22—Aug. 30.

"Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."—Verse 21.

TODAY'S Study shows that the wicked vine-dressers, the unready guests, were so enamored of their own methods and theories as to be really blinded to the beauty of the Divine Plan as expressed by Jesus. Perceiving that His teachings were influencing the masses, the worldly-wise (and spirit-blind) Scribes and Pharisees, who knew the lucubrations of their own teachings, thought that they could show up as inconsistent the teachings of Jesus. To this end they sent amongst the multitude some of their followers, to ask questions and to seek to entrap Jesus, and thus to discredit Him with the people.

The first of these was to entrap Jesus into saying something that would lead to His arrest as a seditious person, teaching contrary to Caesar's law. On the other hand, if He advocated Caesar's law, they thought that thus He would antagonize the public sentiment.

Jesus had a wisdom from Above. In answer to their query, "Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar or not?" He replied, "Why do ye tempt Me, ye hypocrites? Show Me the tribute money." And they brought Him a penny. And He saith unto them, "Whose is this image and super-scription?" They said, Caesar's. Then saith He unto them, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." No wonder they marvelled at such an answer!

Showing the Tribute Money.

"The Things That Are Caesar's." Nor can we say that the Master dodged the question shrewdly. His answer was the truth, in every sense of the word fully in harmony with all His teachings. His followers were instructed not to be seditious, not to be quarrelsome, fault-finding, but to be thankful, holy, happy, subject to "the powers that be." They were to recognize that these powers are ordained of God, and not merely of men.

True, indeed, earthly kingdoms are not God's kingdoms, as sometimes they claim. True, indeed, they sometimes foster sin, iniquity, unrighteousness, and are largely, from outward appearance, the result of human scheming and wickedness. Nevertheless, God's people are to recognize that Jehovah is the great Over-Lord; and that He exercises such a supervision of human affairs as justifies the statement that He ordains, authorizes, permits, these kingdoms. Whatever, therefore, the Heavenly Father has authorized, none of His obedient children should think for even a moment of resisting or over-throwing.

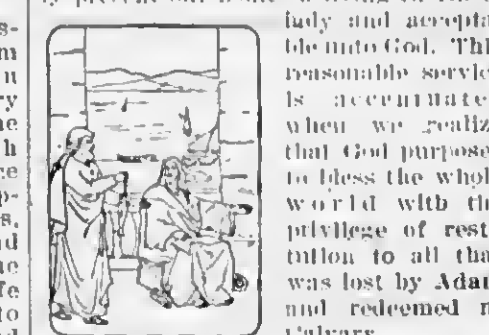

In the case of the Roman Empire, of which Caesar was head, centuries before God had foretold through the prophecy of Daniel its rise to universal dominion. It was not, therefore, for Jesus or any of His disciples to speak against representatives of that Roman power. If Rome ruled, Rome should be supported; and the method of support was, properly enough, through taxation. How just, then, were Jesus' words! We remember that the Master Himself paid tribute, instructing St. Peter, when they had no money, to catch a fish, and from its mouth obtain the coin necessary for his taxation and that of Jesus.

Render Unto God His Due.

Had the questioners been intent upon rendering to God their obligation due Him, they would have been in no different frame of mind that, instead of seeking to entrap Jesus in His words, they would have been glad to be His disciples. What things, then, are God's? We answer that as His creatures we are His. Every talent and power we possess ought to be used in the service of our Creator and for His praise.

Additionally, we recognize the fact that by nature we are sinners, and that God's mercy has provided a redemption through Christ, should glad-ly present our bodies a living sacrifice.

Let us not forget that God's purpose is to bless the whole world with the privilege of restoration to all that was lost by Adam and redeemed at Calvary.

Jesus Providing The Money.

When we learn that the call of this Gospel Age is with a view to per-sonalizing Jesus' followers to be His associates in His Messianic Kingdom, we should be filled with reverence and astonishment. Realizing the possibilities of such a change of nature and attainment of glory, honor and immortality, we should render to God our little all, and realize that it is unworthy of Divine acceptance, save for the merit of Jesus' sacrifice.

But we must not render unto Caesar the things that are God's. "No man can serve two masters." Hence to serve the Lord with all our mind, soul and strength, to render Him His dues, means to put ourselves crosswise with the current of the world. This is the real test of Christian character—"God first."

The Leading Newspaper and Best Job Office in Charlevoix County Board of Education.

Charlevoix, Michigan, July 13, 1914.
To the Annual School Meeting, District No. 1, Charlevoix:

Attached hereto will be found complete report covering all moneys received by the Treasurer and all items of disbursements made during the school year ending July 13, 1914. The vouchers covering all disbursements are exhibited in compliance with the General School Laws; in fact, all books and papers in connection with the Treasurer's office are here submitted and made part of this report.

It is not only the privilege, but I think it is more or less the duty of everyone interested to fully satisfy himself as to the manner in which the affairs of the Board are being conducted, and I wish to assure everyone that the Treasurer will not feel in the least embarrassed to have his books and records examined and in fact would invite and urge your attention along this line.

While this report contains several pages of typewritten matter in detail according to law, I shall read to you the substance of it in condensed form, as the Secretary's report gives more or less details along the same lines.

Respectfully submitted,
Oluf Nordrum,
Treasurer.

UPPER PENINSULA TIMBER HOLDERS GRANT PRIVILEGES TO SPORTSMEN

The timber holders of the Upper Peninsula, through the Northern Forest Protective Association, have inaugurated a plan of leasing camps, leases covering limited territory to sportsmen who desire uninterrupted privileges of hunting and fishing.

This plan is organized largely as a matter of protection to timber interests and provides that for a nominal fee the exclusive sporting privileges of the description leased may be had. In this way many sportsmen are taking advantage of the opportunity to lease particularly desirable descriptions and to erect thereon such habitation as they see fit, knowing that the privileges granted them also protect the property covered by the lease.

The wardens of the Northern Forest Protective Association, on their constant trips of inspection, visit and inspect these locations and report to the head office at Munising, Mich., any destruction which has been wrought or any violations of the terms of the lease. Through them the lessor and the lessee are both protected.

The usual charge which the timber owners make for each lease is but $1.00, and sportsmen find it a most desirable way of obtaining exclusive privileges and at the same time creating a woods habitation at small cost.

The form of lease is as follows:

CAMPING LEASE.

of ———, Michigan, party of the first part, in consideration of the rents and covenants herein specified, and on the terms and conditions herein contained, hereby leases to ——— of ———, Michigan, party of the second part, a site for a fishing and hunting camp, the following described premises situated in the Township of ———, County, Michigan, viz:

— for the term of ——— from and after the ——— day of ———, 19—.

Said first party reserves the right to enter upon said land at any time and for any purpose, and to use and occupy such portions of said land as it may deem necessary.

Said first party hereby leases said premises upon the terms and conditions herein mentioned, for the term aforesaid, and agrees to pay therefor ——— Dollars per ———, payable in advance on ———.

This lease is given upon the following conditions, to the observance and performance of which second party binds himself and such other persons as second party may take upon said lands as his guests: That no Game, Fish or Forest laws of this State shall be violated; that no fire or burning material shall be thrown upon the ground; that the building of fires shall be limited to the stoves in the camp and careful attention given thereto, so as to prevent fires starting on said premises, and before leaving the camp all fires shall be extinguished; that no erecting any camp the approval of first party to the site thereof shall first be secured; that no living tree shall be destroyed or injured in any way; that second party will not take or permit to remain upon said land as his guest any person who may be objectionable to said first party; that said second party shall not assign this lease or sublet same.

It is Further Covenanted and Agreed, That the second part—shall not suffer or permit the keeping of any saloon, or place for the manufacture or sale of intoxicating beverages, or for gambling purpose, or any house of ill-fame or place resorted to for the purposes of prostitution, upon said land.

All buildings hereafter erected upon said land during the continuance of this lease or which shall heretofore have been erected thereon shall become realty and belong to the party of the first part; provided that if second party shall not be in default in any of the payments required hereunder and shall have performed all of the conditions and agreements of this lease, then second party shall have the right to remove such buildings from said land at any time within the period of ——— days after the termination of this lease by lapse of time or otherwise, and all buildings not removed within said ——— day period shall thereby be and become the property of first party, and second party's interest therein cease and determine.

It is expressly agreed that this lease may be terminated by said first party at any time on giving said second party ——— days' written notice of its determination so to do; service of such notice of termination to be made by registered letter directed to said second party at ———; and at the expiration of ——— days from the mailing of such notice this lease and all said second party's rights thereunder shall cease and determine.

In case any rent shall become due and unpaid, or if default shall be made by said second party in the performance of the covenants and agreements herein contained, or any of them, or said second party shall fail to comply with any of the conditions herein set forth, or if this lease be terminated by said first party, as above provided, then and in every of such events it shall be lawful for the said first party to re-enter into and re-possess the said premises and the said party of the second part and every other occupant to remove and put out.

In Witness Whereof, the parties hereto have caused the same to be duly executed this ——— day of ———, A. D. 19—.

Signed, sealed and delivered in presence of:

Judging from the manner in which sportsmen have taken advantage of this proposition, it will be but a few years until all desirable camping locations are under lease to real sportsmen, and, when this condition prevails, much safety will be given, not only to the northern forests, but to northern game as well.

The Northern Forest Protective Association acts as a clearing house for camping leases, and application made to it at the Munising office will secure all needed information.

Miscellaneous Provisions

Game Birds shall not be shipped by express, freight or baggage, nor in any other manner, but shall be carried as open baggage only. May have in possession thirty days after season. Members of clubs owning land in this state to whom permits have been issued may carry twenty ducks in hand baggage.

Hunter's License—Residents hunting protected game birds or animals other than deer outside of the county in which they reside must procure license. Fee, $1. Persons hunting on their own lands, their minor children and employees are exempted. Resident deer hunting license, $1.50. Unlawful for non-residents to hunt or kill protected game birds or animals other than deer without having procured license; fee, $10. Alien residents of the state must procure license to hunt protected birds and game other than deer, the fee for which is $10. Non-resident deer hunting license, $25; alien resident deer hunting license, $25. Licenses for hunting game other than deer may be procured from county clerks or the state game, fish and forestry warden at Lansing. Deer hunting licenses procured from county clerks.

Use of Dogs—Lawful to train on game birds within 15 days of the ruffed grouse season, but persons training must not carry firearms when so doing. Unlawful to use in hunting deer.

English Sparrows—Bounty, two cents for each head. Birds killed during December, January and February.

SICKNESS EXPENSIVE

Prices of Imported Drugs and Chemicals Boosted to the Limit.

It will soon be expensive to be sick if one relies on the druggist to help him out. To a great extent chemicals and drugs are imported from Italy, France, Russia and Germany. The war has already boosted the prices of many drugs commodities, articles of most common use being boosted the highest. Here are a few of those which get the raise skyward:

Tartaric acid, raised from 50 cents to $1 a pound; camphor gum, from 85 cents to $1.50 a pound; citrate of magnesia, 25 to 50 cents a pound; cream of tartar, 50 cents to $1 a pound; bromide of potassium, 85 to 95 cents an ounce; asparagin, 60 to 95 cents an ounce; citric acid, 62 cents to $3.50 a pound; castile soap, 25 to 40 cents; lanolin, 75 cents to $1.75; peroxide of hydrogen, 19 to 39 cents; olive oil, 25 per cent. increase; glycerine, 25 per cent. increase.

Notice.

Monday, September 7th, being Labor Day, a legal holiday, both banks in the city of Charlevoix, Michigan, will close for the day at 12 o'clock noon.

Customers desiring change or other accommodations will kindly arrange for same on Saturday or in the forenoon on Monday.

PART OF PAPER MILL BURNED

One of Petoskey's Chief Industries Suffers Severe Loss from Fire.

Wood Room at Plant Totally Destroyed by Fire Which Started from Hot Box on Line Shaft.

A fire which is supposed to have started from a hot box of a shaft line destroyed the wood room at the paper mill in Petoskey last Thursday afternoon, causing a loss of several thousand dollars, which, however, was fully covered by insurance.

In a few minutes after the fire had been discovered the intense heat drove the workmen from the entire building and the structure was a mass of flames. The wood room is separated from the main building by a narrow driveway and it was here the firemen had their hardest fight to keep the flames out of the main building. Canvas was spread on the roof of the main factory and this was kept wet from the fire hose. Several box cars loaded with wood standing on the track close to the side of the burning building were badly burned.

The fire will not cause the laying off of any of the men and within a few days the construction of a new modern wood room will be started.

Officers of the company have not as yet been able to place the loss at a definite figure.

Watch for the New Serial Story to begin soon.

Hundreds Still Remain.

Despite the fact that summer visitors are leaving this section by hundreds every day, there are still a great many here, and will be for the next three weeks. At present The Inn, Beach and Belvedere, which are purely summer hotels, have from a hundred to two hundred people, while the all-year-round hotels are doing a nice business. The Inn expects to keep open until about the 10th, as will also the Belvedere and Beach. Every train has brought in hundreds of people seeking relief from hay fever and asthma. The 1914 season has been one of the best in the history of the city.

CROP PRICES ARE BOOSTED

Farmers of the State of Michigan Will Profit by War in the East.

Wheat Prices are Steadily Moving Upward—Other Cereals Bring Good Price.

The Michigan farmer stands to win millions of dollars through the upward impetus which Europe's calamity has given to crop prices. Estimates made recently indicate that if current prices hold—as at present seems likely—farmers in this state will reap profits of from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 on oats, wheat and rye. This is the calculated gain over what these crops brought in 1912, which was a fair year and varied but little from the average.

The 1914 oat yield for the state has been forecasted as 55,000,000 bushels, on which the price has jumped 12 cents a bushel over what it was in 1912. If the prices hold—which crop experts say is more than probable because of the demoralization of European agriculture—oats will return Michigan farmers at least $6,600,000 more than they did in 1912.

It is expected also that Michigan will harvest something like 5,700,000 bushels of rye, on which the price has increased 24 cents a bushel over 1912, when rye was selling at 71 cents a bushel on August 27th. To-day it is listed at about 95 cents a bushel. This item of rye is counted on to fatten the wallets of Michigan agriculturists by something like $1,368,000.

Wheat is another crop which it is figured will net the farmers of Michigan a nice profit. Wheat prices at present are an average of four cents a bushel above what they were in 1912, and on an estimated Michigan yield of 13,500,000 bushels wheat is counted on to bring the growers about $540,000 more than it did two years ago.

Another source of gain is expected to be had from sugar beets, white beans, potatoes and other crops are commanding top figures. From all sources it has accordingly been estimated that the war will place from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000 more in the pockets of Michigan farmers than their crops brought in 1912 or 1913.

It was added by estimators that this figure will very likely be considerably swelled if the war drags out for any great length of time, while there is but small likelihood that prices will drop any this season.

AUTOMOBILE KILLED HIM

Powell Banach of Boyne City Almost Instantly Killed at East Jordan.

Powell Banach, a Russian seeking work in East Jordan, was killed near the chemical plant in that city last week by an automobile driven by A. Cameron.

Banach and a companion were walking down a road and as the automobile was about to pass them Banach attempted to run across the road. When Cameron saw him he applied the brakes to the machine and tried to swerve in an effort to miss him. But he was too close and the fender of the heavy machine struck the victim, causing him to turn a complete somersault, alighting on his head outside of the truck, with his feet away from it.

Mr. Cameron took the injured man to a hotel in East Jordan and secured medical aid, but Banach passed away the following morning from injuries to his skull when striking the ground.

Banach had been living and working in Boyne City, where he had a daughter. His wife had died previously in Russia. He had gone to East Jordan with a companion to seek work and expected to go to work the following morning.

An inquest was held, which brought a verdict exonerating Cameron of any negligence in the matter.

Booming Another Road.

The attention of our readers is called to a letter published in this issue over the signature of George H. VanPelt. Any answers in reference thereto will be cheerfully printed, for if there can be a plan formulated which will make this county famous for resort purposes it will be to the benefit of all to work for it. VanPelt has been a resident of Charlevoix county for the past thirty years and has acquired a reputation for the deep interest he has shown in the good roads movement.

SIGNALS FOR LOST HUNTERS

Upper Peninsula Sportsman Believes Code of Signals Should Be Adopted.

Firing of Gun at Regular Intervals by Lost Hunters Answered by Those in Hearing Distance.

An Upper Peninsula sportsman has hit upon a plan to succor lost or disabled hunters, and a number of nimrods are considering seriously the idea of submitting to the state game warden the idea of adopting distress signals. While the number of lost hunters in the last decade has decreased at a rapid rate, still the feeling that comes over the nimrod that strays from camp and is forced to spend the night with the sky for a blanket and the cold ground for a mattress remains unchanged. The signals the sports would have adopted follow:

"When a man is lost or injured and needs help, a signal by shooting should be given. The signal is the firing of a gun once, with an intermission of ten seconds before the second shot, then an intermission of sixty seconds, then a third shot. If no answer is received to this signal, it should be repeated after an intermission of five minutes. The answer to this signal would be a single shot from the rescuing party, followed by one recognition shot from the lost man."

"Care should be taken to get the time between shots as accurate as possible. Hunters should keep in mind the signals and avoid, if possible, giving it when shooting at game. In the absence of a watch the time could be gauged with sufficient accuracy by counting ten between the first and second shots and sixty between the second and third shots. Whenever a shot is heard in the woods a hunter could count ten to determine whether it is a signal of distress or not."

"The person who is lost could, after hearing an answer to his signal, remain at the place where he gave the signal until the rescuing party arrived, otherwise he might take the opposite direction and not be found at all."

The hunting season will soon be here and hundreds of nimrods will invade the woods in quest of partridge and deer. Old hunters to whom this plan was suggested endorsed it without hesitation.

I. O. O. F. PICNIC

County Association Gather for Day of Enjoyment at Halstead's Grove.

About a hundred Odd Fellows and Rehechaks attended the county Odd Fellow picnic in Halstead's Grove, on the shores of Pine lake last Thursday. Had the weather been more favorable, there doubtless would have been a much larger crowd.

There were swings and free lemonade for the youngsters and a ball game for the "older people. Everyone was out for a good time and from all indications had one. It was voted to make the county picnic an annual affair.

Oluf Nordrum was elected president, Richard Lewis secretary, and Bert Fuday treasurer. These with one member from each lodge will constitute committee.

Those present were very enthusiastic about the matter and hope to make the picnic next year the biggest event of the season.

ASKED TO REMAIN

Rev. Quinton Walker Extended Invitation to Head Church Another Year.

At the quarterly conference of the Methodist church of this city last Friday night an unanimous invitation was extended to the pastor, Rev. Quinton Walker, to return for another year.

The church is in a most excellent condition, the reports showing that 131 have been converted during the year and more than $1,000 raised and paid on improvements.

The ladies' aid society has raised $158 during the year. The Epworth League and Sunday school have had the best year financially and spiritually in their history.

The pastor is undecided as to his return. Dr. Walker fully merited the splendid endorsement he received from the church officials for the efficient work done in Charlevoix the past year.

ANNUAL OPENING DAY

First Event of This Kind Held at Charlevoix Free Library Tuesday.

Tuesday the Public Library was the scene of the first annual Opening Day. The affair was voted a great success by the sixty or more who attended.

Mrs. J. L. Crane was chairman of the committee of the day. The other members were Mrs. Harry Nicholls, Mrs. W. E. Hampton, Mrs. A. I. Creamer, Miss Loeb of St. Louis, Miss Bailey of Los Angeles and Miss Keith of Chicago. Miss Loeb presided at the punch bowl, assisted by the Misses Armstrong, Bush, Iddings and Parsons. Miss Goldsmith of Illinois and Miss Hallie Bon also took an active part in the work of the day.

The regular work of the library was carried on by Miss Stevenson, assistant librarian.

The plans for Open Day for next summer are already under way. It will take place earlier in the season and there will be a program and an exhibit.

There is also talk of a "book shower," in which anyone may take part in "showering" the library with books and magazines, old and new.

EDWARDS-TYLER

Charlevoix Young People Stool a March on Friends and Marry at Petoskey.

Miss Nellie Edwards, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Edwards, and Frederick O. Tyler, bookkeeper for the Charlevoix Rock Product Company, were married Sunday afternoon at the Baptist parsonage in Petoskey, Rev. George Bates officiating.

The approaching marriage of the young couple was known to their many friends, but the exact date had been kept a secret and the announcement of their marriage was quite a surprise.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Tyler are well known in the city and have the best wishes of their host of friends. They will start housekeeping at 419 Antrim street.

ADDS NEEDED FLOOR SPACE

Present Quarters Too Small for Rapidly Increasing Business.

Benj. Brown to Build a Big Addition to His Store on Bridge Street.

When a man is compelled to enlarge the size of his place of business on account of increased patronage it is substantial proof that he is a "live one" and a credit to the community in which he lives.

Such is the case with Benj. Brown, one of Charlevoix's hustling young business men. When Mr. Brown first started in business here he was located in the west half of Ward & Ward's implement store on Antrim street. About five years ago he purchased the lot upon which his present quarters are located and built a cement building. Two years later he enlarged this building to its present size, and now he is about to build an addition at the rear of the already good-sized store building 38x46 across both lots and 12x24 alongside the present building.

The new addition will be used as a salesroom and vulcanizing department. Originally Mr. Brown confined himself almost exclusively to the harness business. During the past few years he has added a line of trunks, suitcases, etc., baby cabs, bicycles and bicycle repairing, motor cycles, and this summer took the agency of the Saxon motor car.

Early in the spring he put in a complete line of automobile tires and accessories. The new building will be devoted almost entirely along the line of motor cars, bicycles, a complete vulcanizing and auto tire repairing department. The entire floor space occupied will be as large as any in the city and if his business increases during the coming five years—as it has in the past, it is safe to say additional space will be supplied as needed.

City of Boyne Changes Time.

The steamer City of Boyne will discontinue her three round trips a day between this city and Boyne City September 8th and return to the former two trip schedule. On September 9 and 10 she will make a round trip between Charlevoix and East Jordan to accommodate those wishing to attend the fair, leaving Charlevoix at 8:30 a. m., returning, leave East Jordan at 6:30 p. m.

CANDIDATES IS- SUE STATEMENTS

Scott and Bayliss, Through the Press, Thank Supporters.

Home Counties of Each Candidate Pay Tribute to Them by Splendid Support.

Later election returns indicate that in the race between Joseph E. Bayliss and Frank D. Scott for congressional honors, Scott's majority will be from 1,000 to 1,600. Returns published last week gave more counties to Scott than later figures indicate. Bayliss carried Antrim county by a majority of 13; Kalkaska by 41, Chippewa by over 1,800, Alger by 200, Schoolcraft and Mackinac by about the same, and Luce by 67.

Scott carried Delta county by 614, Menominee by 678, Emmet near 150, Cheboygan 285, Otsego 251, Alpena 1,400, Montmorency 125, and Presque Isle by a small majority. The above figures, while not absolutely correct, are not far out or the way.

The following are the statements of the two candidates:

Mr. Bayliss' Statement

"The election returns indicate Senator Scott's nomination, which will also mean his election. From all reports the entire Republican ticket will be a strong one and there will be no question as to its success this fall."

"The people have spoken and I accept their verdict, feeling that their will has been reflected in the returns. Senator Scott and the balance of the nominees will have my loyal support."

"While to have lost in the recent contest brings some measure of personal disappointment, there is much pleasure and satisfaction in the knowledge that so many splendid men throughout the district were with me in the contest. In fact, I have been as anxious to win for their sake as my own and, as it is impossible for me to thank them individually, I take this means of conveying to them my deep appreciation of their confidence and their earnest, unselfish support."

"To have received a majority of more than 1,800 in my own county, where I have lived for thirty-six years, is especially gratifying and brings some assurance to the voters in the southern part of the district where I received such magnificent support, although they did not know me as well as my home people, as to the measure and quality of service I would have tried to give had I been successful."

"Very sincerely,
Joseph E. Bayliss."

Mr. Scott's Statement

Mr. Scott wired the following brief statement for publication:

"I am profoundly grateful for the magnificent vote received, especially in the counties above the straits. The vote for Mr. Bayliss in his home county and elsewhere indicates the high regard in which he is held. With our allied armies November cannot but bring success."

"Frank D. Scott."

In the senatorial race between Morford, Mears and Harris the latest figures received give Morford a majority of near 300. Returns for the county officers remain about the same as published last week.

OPEN REPAIR SHOP

Mesnard & Jacobs Lease Charlevoix Garage and Will Soon Open for Business.

Charlevoix is to have another general repair shop and automobile supply station. V. L. Mesnard and Harold Jacobs have leased the building known as the Charlevoix Garage at 111 Antrim street, and will install such machinery needed in the work.

Automobiles will be stored, overhauled and repainted, general repair work of all kinds done, and a full line of automobile accessories will be carried.

Both young men are well known in the city and will undoubtedly do a nice business.

Will Be Prosecuted.

Many complaints are being made to the city authorities regarding the reckless dumping of garbage on private property throughout the city and especially vacant lots on the north side near Mount McSaba. Owners of the property upon which the garbage has been dumped are making an effort to discover the guilty parties and if apprehended they will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

SYNOPSIS

Waitstill Baxter and her sister, Patience (Patty), keep house for their widowed, man father, Ivory Boynton, whose father disappeared, is interested in Waitstill. He takes care of his daughter's mother.

Ivory's father abandoned his family to follow Jacob Cochrane, a mystic. Patience chafes under her father's stern rule.

Patty has two admirers—Mark Wilson, an educated young man, and Cephas Cole, who is unlearned. Mark kisses her.

Waitstill is spending her life in loving care of Patience. Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart Cole are friends of the whole community.

Cephas Cole, tending store for Baxter, proposes to Patty and is rejected. In his agitation he lets the molasses run all over the store floor.

Although they love each other, Waitstill and Ivory suppress their affection because of their household cares.

Patty and Waitstill go to church, although their father is too mean to give them fitting garments. Waitstill sings in the choir.

A strange young woman in the Wilson pew, a visitor from Boston, makes Patty jealous. Haytime arrives.

Waitstill decides to disobey her father by paying a visit to Mrs. Boynton. Uncle Bart discourses to Cephas on woman's ways.

Mrs. Boynton confides in Waitstill, telling her the girl she believes Rodman to be her sister's child, but she cannot be sure.

To punish Waitstill for disobedience Deacon Baxter locks her out all night. She spends the night in the barn. Patience sympathizes.

Patience Baxter is embarrassed amid a multitude of suitors. She thinks Mark is fickle.

Trying to trace his father, Ivory writes to Waitstill a long account of Boynton's following of Cochrane, with which Mrs. Boynton was not in full sympathy.

The village gossip is busy with the name of Waitstill and Ivory, but in a friendly and sympathetic manner.

In Ivory's absence young Rodman ministers to Mrs. Boynton. She is ill and sends Rodman for Ivory.

Ivory receives proof of his father's death and succeeds in convincing his mother of it. Waitstill volunteers her help in the Boynton housekeeping.

Despairing of winning Patty, Cephas turns his affection elsewhere. Patty and Mark are now sweethearts.

Patty and Mark know Deacon Baxter will not consent to their marriage, so they plan an elopement to New Hampshire.

Deacon Baxter is more than usually "difficult." Patty runs off with Mark, is married and returns and tells Waitstill.

The deacon turns Patty out into the cold. She finds shelter with Aunt Abby and Uncle Bart.

Waitstill risks against her father and tells him she will marry Ivory as soon as he is ready to have her.

Left by his daughter, the deacon cannot manage his household. Waitstill visits the Boyntons.

Patty is welcomed by the Wilsons. Ivory will not Waitstill. Mrs. Boynton tells of a "mysterious" received years before to go to her husband's side.

Rodman is the son of Boynton and another woman (for whom he had left his wife). The woman, who had called for Mrs. Boynton, had left Rodman in her care before dying. Waitstill at a neighbor's.

To spite his daughters Deacon Baxter proposes to a widow and is accepted. Patty and Mark leave for their new home.

Waitstill and Ivory are married before Mrs. Boynton dies. Waitstill and Ivory start a happy home with Rodman.

CHAPTER XXX.
Two Heavens.

At the very moment that Deacon Baxter was starting out on his quest for a housekeeper, Patty and Mark drove into the Mason dooryard, and the sisters flew into each other's arms. The dress that Mark had bought for Patty was the usual charming and unsuitable offering of a man's spontaneous affection, being of dark violet cloth with a wadded cape lined with satin.

Waitstill in her plain blue woolsey was entranced with Patty's beauty and elegance, and the two girls had a few minutes of sisterly talk, of interchange of radiant hopes and confidences before Mark tore them apart, their cheeks wet with happy tears.

As the Mason house faded from view Patty waved her muff with the last moment, turned in her seat and said:

"Mark, dear, do you think your father would care if I spent the twenty dollar gold piece he gave me for Waitstill? She will be married in a fortnight, and if my father does not give her the few things she owns she will go to her husband more ill provided even than I was. I have so much, dear Mark, and she so little."

"It's your own wedding present to use as you wish," Mark answered. "And it's exactly like you to give it away. Go ahead and spend it if you want to. I can always earn enough to keep you without anybody's help."

And Mark, after cracking the whip valiantly, kissed his wife just over the violet ribbons, and, with sleigh bells jingling, they sped over the snow toward what seemed Paradise to them, the New Hampshire village where they had been married and where their new life would begin.

So a few days later Waitstill received a great parcel which relieved her of many feminine anxieties, and she began to shape and cut and stitch during all the hours she had to herself. They were not many, for every day she trudged to the Boynton farm and began with youthful enthusiasm the household tasks that were so soon to be hers by right.

"Don't waste too much time and strength here, my dearest," said Ivory. "Do you suppose for a moment I shall keep you long on this lonely farm? I am ready for admission to the bar or I am fitted to teach in the best school in New England. Nothing has held me here but my mother, and in her present condition of mind we can safely take her anywhere. We will never live where there are so many memories and associations to sadden and hamper us, but go where the best opportunity offers and as soon as may be. My wife will be a pearl of great price," he added fondly, "and I intend to provide a right setting for her."

Ivory was right. Waitstill Baxter was indeed a jewel of a woman. She had little knowledge but much wisdom, and after all knowledge stands for the leaves on a tree and wisdom for the fruit. There was infinite richness in the girl, a richness that had been growing and ripening through the years that she thought so gray and wasted.

Those lonely tasks, too hard for a girl's hands, those unrewarded drudgeries, those days of faithful labor in and out of doors, those evenings of self sacrifice over the mending basket, the quiet avoidance of all that might vex her father's crusty temper, her patience with his miserly exactions, the hourly holding back of the hasty word—all these had played their part; all these had been somehow welded into a strong, sunny, steady life wisdom, there is no better name for it, and so she had unconsciously the best of all harvests to bring up dower to a husband who was worthy of her.

These were quietly happy days at the farm, for Mrs. Boynton took a new if transient hold upon life that defied even the doctor. Rodman was nearly as radiant a lover as Ivory, hovering about Waitstill and exclaiming: "You never stay to supper, and it's so lonesome evenings without you! Will it never be time for you to come and live with us, Waitstill, dear? The days crawl so slowly!" At which Ivory would laugh, push him away and draw Waitstill nearer to his own side, saying: "If you are in a hurry, you young couple, what do you think of me?"

"We can never wait two more days, Rod! let us kidnap her! Let us take the old bodied and flin over to New Hampshire where one can be married the minute one feels like it. We could do it between sunrise and moonrise and be at home for a late supper. Would she be too tired to bake the biscuits for us, do you think? What do you say, Rod, will you be best man?" And there would be youthful, unaccustomed laughter floating out from the kitchen or living room, bringing a smile of content to Lois Boynton's face as she lay propped up in bed with her open Bible beside her. "He looks up the broken hearted," she whispered to herself. "He gives unto them a garland for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

The quiet wedding was over. There had been neither feasting nor flurry, nor presents nor bridal journey, only a homecoming that meant as deep and sacred a joy, as fervent gratitude as any four hearts ever contained in all the world. But the laughter ceased, though the happiness flowed silently underneath, almost forgotten in the sudden sorrow that overcame them. For it fell out that Lois Boynton had only waited as it were for the marriage and could stay no longer.

"There are two heavens," both made of love—one, inconceivable even by the other, so divine it is. The other, far on this side of the stars, by men called home.

And these two heavens met over at Boynton's during those cold, white, glistening December days. Lois Boynton found hers first. After a windy moonlight night a morning dawned in which a lull seemed to be on the earth. The cattle huddled together in the farmyards and the fowls shrank into their feathers. The sky was gray, and suddenly the white heralds came floating down like scouts seeking for paths and camping places.

Waitstill turned Mrs. Boynton's bed so that she could look out of the window. Slope after slope, dazzling in white crust, rose one upon another and vanished as they slipped away into the dark green of the pine forests.

Then, . . . there fell from out the skies A feathery whiteness over all the land! A strange, soft, spotless something, pure as light.

It could not be called a storm, for there had been no wind since sunrise, no whirling fury, no drifting, only a still, steady, solemn fall of crystal flakes. Hour after hour, hour after hour.

Mrs. Boynton's book of books was open on the bed, and her finger marked a passage in her favorite Bible poem.

"Here it is, daughter," she whispered. "I have found it, in the same chapter where the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shout for "Our little brother" is never in the way.

Joy. The Lord speaks to Job out of the whirlwind, and says, 'Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow, or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail?' Sit near me, Waitstill, and look out on the hills. 'Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?' No, not yet, but please God I shall, and into many other treasures soon, and she closed her eyes.

All day long the air ways were filled with the glittering army of the snowflakes, all day long the snow grew deeper and deeper on the ground, and on the breath of some white winged wonder that passed Lois Boynton's window her white soul forsook its "earth lot" and took flight at last.

They watched beside her, but never knew the moment of her going. Her face was so like an angel's in its shining serenity that the few who loved her best could not look upon her with anything but reverent joy. On earth she had known nothing but the "broken arcs," but in heaven she would find the "perfect round." There at last, on the other side of the stars, she could remember right, poor Lois Boynton!

For weeks afterward the village was shrouded in snow as it had never been before within memory, but in every happy household the home life deepened day by day. The books came out in the long evenings; the grandmothers told old tales under the inspiration of the hearth fire; the children gathered on their wooden stools to roast apples and pop corn, and hearts came closer together than when summer called the housemates to wander here and there in fields and woods and beside the river.

Over at Boynton's, when the snow was whirling and the wind howling round the chimneys of the high gabled old farmhouse, when every window had its frame of ermine and fringe of icicles and the sheet rattled furiously against the glass, then Ivory would throw a great black log on the bank of coals between the firebricks, the kettle would begin to sing and the cat come from some snug corner to curl and purr on the braided hearth rug.

School was in session, and Ivory and Waitstill had their textbooks of an evening, but, oh, what a new and strange joy to study when there was a sweet woman sitting near with her workbasket—a woman wearing a shining band of hair—were a coronet; a woman of eyes and tender lips, one who could feel as well as think, one who could be a man's comrade as well as his dear love! Truly the second heaven, the one on "this side of the stars," by men called home, was very present over at Boynton's.

Sometimes the broad seated old hair-cloth sofa would be drawn in front of the fire, and Ivory, laying his pipe and taking some lighter book and open it on his knee. Waitstill would lift her eyes from her sewing to meet her husband's glance that spoke longing for her closer companionship and, gladly leaving her work and slipping into the place by his side, she would put her elbow on his shoulder and read with him.

Once Rod from his place at a table on the other side of the room looked and looked at them with a kind of instinct beyond his years and finally crept up to Waitstill and, putting an arm through hers, nestled his curly head on her shoulder with the quaint charm and grace that belonged to him.

It was a young and beautiful shoulder, Waitstill's, and there had always been and would always be a graceful curve in it where a child's head might lie in comfort. Presently with a shy pressure, Rod whispered: "Shall I sit

Can You Succeed
On a Salary?

It will take more than your salary, however large, to insure your financial success for the simple reason that, as an almost invariable rule, the scale of living a person maintains is in direct proportion to his income.

Earn much, spend much is the way it goes. In order to get ahead EVERYBODY must save a portion of his income. There's no getting around this fact, and a strong bank like the Charlevoix County Bank is the logical place for you to build up your reserve fund.

In the other room, Waitstill and Ivory?

And I in the way?

Ivory looked up from his book quietly shaking his head, while Waitstill put her arm around the boy and drew him closer.

"Our little brother is never in the way," she said, as she kissed him.

On midsummer evenings the windows of the old farmhouse over at Boynton's gleam with unaccustomed lights and voices break the stillness, lessening the gloom of the long grass grown lame of Lois Boynton's watching in days gone by.

On sunny mornings there is a merry babel of children's chatter, mingled with gentle maternal warnings, for this is a new brood of young things, and the river is calling them as it has called all the others who ever came within the circle of its magic. The fragile harebells hanging their blue heads from the crevices of the rocks; the brilliant columbines swaying to and fro on their tall stalks; the patches of gleaming sand in shallow places beckoning little bare feet to come and tread them; the glint of silver minnows darting hither and thither in some still pool; the tempestuous journey of some weather-bitten log, fighting its way downstream—here is life in abundance, luring the child to share its risks and its joys.

When Waitstill's boys and Patty's girls come back to the farm they play

It is good that as many as did voted at the primary Tuesday. It would have been better, however, if a larger vote had been polled. Since the dawn of history the tendency in government has been toward the co-operative idea and the significant changes that have occurred have generally been in the nature of increasing the number that have had an actual say in directing affairs for the common good. This is undoubtedly in accordance with the plans of the creator. More and more people should "have a say" and he who fails to recognize the fact is getting upon the wrong road. There is no question but that in America sovereignty rests with the people, not a few choice souls, but the whole people. One man rule here has been short lived and it always will. The majority must do the deciding. Inside cliques are becoming less and less influential. It was long ago decided that a taxation without representation would not be accepted. Slowly but surely changes must be made which give the masses a chance to express themselves upon all questions that vitally concern the general welfare. And the people must not fail to take part whenever the opportunity comes. To be sure the machinery for recording the desires of the individuals must be simplified; and it will be; the details are slowly being worked out. The spirit of progress is co-operation. Truly creditable things along development lines are only accomplished by the enthusiasm of the many. The big business men of the day are beginning to see the light and are building their organizations on the idea that greater success can be achieved with enthusiasm than by private office despotic rule. Policies and enterprises that cannot stand the inspection of the many are eventually downed. All who can should be on hand at the primaries, the elections and such other public functions as give them a chance to make their voice heard. Furthermore they must ask that more questions be submitted to them. Right may not prevail every time but it will in the majority of cases. It takes a great many people to make a successful nation or a successful state and these people must be live people, not serfs, slaves or even dependents. — Traverse City Record.

Watch the Democracy lay all the consequences of its own shortcomings in administration policy since March 4, 1913, to the European war crisis. The titanic struggle across the seas makes a fine cloud of battle smoke to obscure Democratic incompetency just before election. The question for the thoughtful voter to answer for himself, however, has nothing to do with the war. It is, simply, what was happening to the country in the way of business and financial depression as the result of Democratic misgovernment for months before the war broke out? And, answering that, the voter may ask again, how much worse off will this land of ours be along this same direction now that the war is on and the revenues of a boasted "competitive tariff," that as fast diminishing during a time of peace, must decrease still further because foreign "competition" is stifled by the conflict of arms abroad?

From now on we will hear all about how the primary system is worthless. People should remember that more people have a voice in nominations under the new than under the old system.

The administration has seized on the European war as a pretext for all their party troubles. "If it hadn't been for the war," is a familiar phrase with the Wilson explainers just now.

So long as there is no heavy firing among American employers of labor this country can bear up.

And now it costs more even to be sick because the prices of medicines are going up.

The 1914 war model is a self-starter.

VEAL is at its best in the spring and, though not especially digestible, is served in a great variety of ways. It is a meat which does not keep long. If there is doubt of its freshness it is best to wash it at once, plunge it into boiling water and in ten minutes transfer it to cold water. No other meat is so useful for making soups and gravies.

Using the Shoulder.
Roast Veal.—Take a piece of shoulder weighing five pounds. Have bone removed and tie up meat to make it lean. Put piece of butter size of half an egg, together with a few shavings of onion, into a kettle and let get hot. Salt and pepper the veal and put into kettle, cover tightly and put over a medium fire until meat is brown on both sides, turning it occasionally. Then set kettle on back of stove, where it will simmer slowly for about two and one-half hours. Before setting meat on back of stove see if the juice of the meat, together with the butter, makes gravy enough and if not add a little hot water. Serve gravy hot with hot meat or cold with cold meat.

Stuffed Veal.
Roast Fillet of Veal.—Take a thick piece of veal from the upper part of the leg and have the bone removed. Fill the cavity with stuffing made of one cupful of breadcrumbs, moisten with a half cupful of water, one-third of a cupful of melted butter, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, a half teaspoonful of powdered thyme and pepper to taste. Tie into a round shape. Dress with salt, pepper and flour. Put strips of pork over the top and bake. Add water as soon as the floor has browned and baste often. Cover with a paper to prevent burning and allow half an hour to a pound.

A Dainty For Luncheon.

Veal Potatoes.—Take one egg, one unit two-thirds cupfuls chopped veal, four tablespoonfuls milk, one-half table-spoonful olive oil, scant half cupful flour, one-half teaspoonful salt, white pepper, one-half teaspoonful lemon juice, frying fat. Beat thoroughly the yolk of the egg and add the milk, oil, salt and pepper, flour and lemon juice. Beat the white of the egg stiff and add to the mixture when ready to use. Then stir in the veal, which should not be chopped too fine. Drop with a spoon into slightly smoking fat and fry to a golden brown. Drain on soft paper or cheesecloth. Serve with or without sauce.

AUTOMOBILE TURNS TURTLE

Three Members of Ecklund Family, Injured Sunday in Accident.

Car Skids and Turns Over on Falling Hill South of Charlevoix.

Six members of the Ecklund family had a narrow escape from serious injury or death Sunday afternoon, when the car in which they were riding turned turtle while going up the steep hill near the Falting home, south of Charlevoix.

The party had been attending church near Phelps and were on their way home. Three of the party were in the seat and the others in the rear of the car. They reached the hill and were partly up when the accident happened. At the foot of the hill there are two roads and the driver took the left road. About half way up the car began to skid and in trying to regain the road the driver turned in such a manner that the right forward wheel collapsed, letting the car turn over, pinning those on the seat with the driver under the car and also those who were seated in the back of the car.

When the occupants were gotten out of the wreckage it was found that Ernest Ecklund had received a broken collarbone; his mother, Mrs. A. Ecklund, severe bruises about the face and arm and her left side badly hurt, also several bad burns from escaping gasoline and hot water. Effie Ecklund also had her collarbone broken and received a bad cut in her forehead. The other three members of the party were severely shaken up and received some painful bruises.

The injured members were brought to this city and given medical assistance. In viewing the scene of the accident it hardly seems possible that the members escaped with as few injuries as they did.

Circuit Court Doings.

After a short adjournment, circuit court opened Monday morning. The first case to take up the attention of the court was that of The People vs. Louis Galinsky, charged with violation of the pure food law. It was placed in the hands of the jury Tuesday, and a verdict rendered of not guilty.

The case of The People vs. John Arnold, charged with assault with intent to do great bodily harm less than murder, is now being heard.

Stork Shower

Mrs. Frank Cheney was pleasantly surprised by twenty of her friends last Tuesday, a stork shower being the occasion. A pot luck supper was served and before the friends departed they presented her with many beautiful presents. The out-of-town guests were Mrs. Peter Ross and daughter of St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. Jack Cheney of Traverse City and Mrs. Ed. Cook of Tacoma, Wash.

PUBLIC TO BE PROTECTED AT GREATER MICHIGAN FAIR

Concessions Will Be Clean and None Allowed of the Grafter Type—State Dairy and Food Department Will Care For Purity in Eatables and Drink

It is generally conceded that the West Michigan State Fair held at Grand Rapids last year was one of the best in the history of Western Michigan. It can be now stated, without fear of successful contradiction, that the Greater Michigan Fair, to be held in that city September 2nd to 7th, inclusive, will be as far superior to last year as last year was to the years before. At great expense the management of the Fair has put a cement floor in what was the carriage new field to be used for concessions. The dining room has been moved to a place perfectly accessible but not in the way of concessions. The poultry building has been moved to a point where it is in touch with other live stock exhibits and will give room for more concessions.

The character of concessions will be carefully and scrupulously considered and the concessioner of the West Michigan State Fair must develop that he is worthy of the patronage of ounding and equipped it with electric power for the purpose of being able to operate machinery of various kinds in which the farmer is vitally interested. The demand for space at this early date in that building leads to the conclusion that the management will be overtaxed by applications for space. The concessions last year were cramped, but in so condensed a field as to be unpleasant for both concessioners and visitors. This has led the management of the Fair to open up a Extraordinary Return Engagement.

The Light Eternal, a magnificently staged romance of the fourth century transcribed from Cardinal Wiseman's "Fabiola," will be given at Charlevoix theatre, Wednesday, Sept. 9th, 1914.

Spectacular in its investiture of barbaric splendor, abounding in dramatic episode of intense suspense, and dealing with a serious theme of deep religious import, the action of this great drama moves forward briskly and with the finality and realism of life itself.

Every moment is fraught with dramatic action and subtle meaning as the story is unfolded. The audience is literally transportation down through the ages to the proud and wicked days when Rome flourished in all its glory.

Throughout the four acts the persecution of the Caesars is visualized to a degree unattained by any of the fore-runners of The Light Eternal. There is a certain dramatic power and earnest reverence of theme that lifts the play above the commonplace and makes of it an entralling romance and a moral lesson. (Do not fail to attend.)

Editor Courier:

I am not knocking any one person, but I am trying to show the people of Charlevoix county that the present road-making plan is a bad, as well as a very expensive, proposition, and I believe that I can present a plan from the basis of which can be worked out a much better system than the one now in vogue. We need a road, which ought to be fifteen feet wide, from Charlevoix to East Jordan, Boyne City and back to Charlevoix—all the way around Pine Lake. The man who lives five or ten miles from this road will say, as many of the farmers have said: "Well, I'll not vote for that because it will not do me any good." And he believes that what he says is true, but I don't believe it and I'll tell you why: If we could have such a road it would bring with even only fair roads to Charlevoix from Chicago (Illinois), Detroit, Grand Rapids and other southern cities at least five hundred more automobiles than those that were here this summer. This drive would make our county, in time, as famous as the great drives in Europe and would bring thousands of people here, and summer hotels would be built, as well as summer houses, and new resorts would spring up all along the line. The war now raging in Europe will set our people thinking more about their own country than ever before and the resorts that take advantage of this opportunity will be the gainers. [Surely no county in the state, or in any other state, has such a climate to offer as has Charlevoix, and the scenery around Pine Lake ought to satisfy the most fastidious.]

We have the opportunity now to make Charlevoix county famous the world over, and the farmers living five or ten miles away from the drive would certainly share in the prosperity, this great mass of people would bring to us. I am asked how would you pay for this road. I have a plan which I will submit later on and in the meantime I'd like to have others who may be interested to express their views and some time in the winter I will be glad to run up and talk the matter over, for it is a dead sure thing this road can be built, the county can be greatly benefited and the whole surrounding country as well.

All I ask at present is the support of the Charlevoix county press. Everyone can help and "every little helps," as the old saying is.

BIG GROWING SEASON

All Crops in Western Michigan are in a Fine Condition—Fruit Growers Prospering.

Western Michigan has enjoyed this year the best growing season in the memory of living man. The amounts of sunshine and rain have been well proportioned and the arrival of the moisture has always been at the most opportune time. In consequence larger and better crops than ever before are being harvested. The hay, clover and alfalfa fields have produced wonderfully. The corn is now ready to mature, although the growing season is far from ended. The grain crops were good, as were also the early fruits. The promise for a big crop of potatoes is excellent, and the peach and apple crops, particularly in the northern section of the Western Michigan country, are all that could be asked for. As a result of this splendid season the farmers and fruit growers are about to enjoy a prosperity that is far above the average. In the case of those with cherry crops this prosperity is already apparent, as the fruit growers' bank accounts are almost overflowing. While the present season has been above the average, every season in Western Michigan is a good one and all who are willing to plant, cultivate and harvest with intelligence and industry are sure of fair returns.

ALGERIANS ARE LIARS.

They May Tell the Truth at Times, but You Are Never Sure.

The chief fault of the native Algerians seems to be a certain predilection for lying. It appears to be an instinctive desire to deceive, not so much for the sake of profit as for the sake of deception. Albert Edwards, in "The Barbary Coast," tells us that he asked his French host why one of his workmen wore green braids on his turban, since in Persia only those who have made the pilgrimage to Mecca are thus attired.

"Mohammed!" my host called. The tall, dignified native left his plow and came over to us.

"Have you been to Mecca?" M. Gardet asked in Arabic.

"No, Sidi," the Arab said and went back to his work.

"Ho says, No," M. Gardet translated to me. "But like as not he has been there six times. If they would always tell you could understand them. But sometimes they tell the truth. Perhaps he hasn't been there. If I should ask six of my workmen about it three would say that Mohammed had been to Mecca, three would say he hadn't."

So I stopped asking my host questions about the Arabs. But in all the time I have been in Algeria I have never found a Frenchman who felt differently about it. Guy de Maupassant, whose eyes pierced so deeply through the lies of French life, could not fathom the Arabs. "They are incomprehensible," he writes. "They lie."

THE WORLD'S WATER POWER.

Forces That May Be Utilized When Our Coal Is All Gone.

The following figures may prove of interest to those fearing the exhaustion of the world's coal supply, says the American Machinist. In a summary of the water power of the world the possible horsepower of France is estimated at 4,500,000, of which only 800,000 is utilized. About as equal amount of power is available in Italy, but only 30,000 horsepower is utilized. Falls of 10,000 horsepower are abundant in the Alps.

The estimate in Switzerland is incomplete, but about 300,000 horsepower. In use. Germany has 700,000 horsepower available, with 100,000 applied. Norway has 900,000 horsepower available, with a large part already developed. In Sweden there is 763,000 horsepower available.

The resources of Russia are estimated at 11,000,000 horsepower, of which only $5,000,000 has been developed. The United States is credited with 1,500,000 horsepower, while Japan has 1,000,000, of which 70,000 has been exploited. In India 50,000 horsepower has already been developed, mostly at a considerable distance from any industrial center. In Great Britain there is 70,000 horsepower already utilized, and an equal amount in Spain.

Promoting the Janitor.

They were joint owners of an apartment house and one day the junior partner sought his colleague in some tropic land.

"The janitor wants $10 more a month or he'll leave. I hate to give up the money, but we can't spare him."

The senior partner disappeared and returned in a few moments.

"It's all right," said he, "I've satisfied him, and it didn't cost us anything."

"How's that?"

"The janitor is now the superintendent."

"Good work!" declared the junior partner. "But why didn't you make him superintendent in the first place?"

"Because," answered the senior member, "I knew a head want a promotion eventually. Every man wants a promotion some time and, in my mind, a good man deserves one."—Judge.

Smoky Cities Also Foggy.

The relation between smoke and fog is ably set forth in a bulletin issued by the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, University of Pittsburgh, and written by Dr. Herbert H. Kimball, professor of meteorology, United States weather bureau. He sums up the matter by saying:

"City fogs are more persistent than country fogs, principally because of their increased density due to the smoke that accumulates in them."

"In consequence of the above there are fewer hours of sunshine in the cities than in the surrounding country."

"The sunshine is less intense in the city than in the country, the light of short wave lengths, or the blue light, suffering the greater depletion."

Saving Time.

"Say," exclaimed the excited young man with the discolored optics, "I want you to strike me off a few thousand cents."

"All right, sir," responded the printer. "What shall I put on them?"

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

THE GREAT COMMANDMENTS.

Mark 12:28-44—Sept. 6.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12:27.

ON the question day when the Doctors of Divinity sought to entrap our Lord many questions were asked. A week ago we considered one. The final question constitutes today's study. A Scribe, a man of more than average education, had heard the various questions propounded and had perceived how well our Lord had answered them. Then he assayed a question—quite probably with all sincerity, and not with a view to entrap Jesus. He asked, "Which is the chief commandment of all?"—doubtless referring to the Decalogue.

Jesus replied that the first, the chief, of all the commandments is, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one."

Our Lord here made a quotation from the Old Testament, Deuteronomy 6:4, 5. How wonderfully comprehensive the statement! Who today, centuries afterward, could more completely epitomize the great truth of this text? Heavenly Wisdom is manifested both in its first statement and in our Lord's reference to it. He added nothing because nothing could be added.

In times gone by, we were told that the Almighty God of the Universe had a great hell of torture prepared for those who did not love Him.

He supposed that the great majority of humanity should be eternally tormented. But that was in the creeds. The Bible stands out distinctly separate from all human creeds and superstitions, and tells us that God is Love, that He is the Father of Light and Mercy, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift.—James 1:17

The Second Commandment.

Proceeding beyond the question, Jesus declared that the second commandment stands related to the first; namely, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Again we stand astonished.

No other religion than that of the Bible reveals such a God of mercy and compassion, as manifested by His loving provision for the welfare of His creatures. No other religion suggests so high a standard of dealing with our fellow men.

This Law of God, now nearly four thousand years old, was probably made more or less known through the Jews to other nations and peoples (Deuteronomy 4:8), but none of them grasped its true import. The closest approach to this sentiment is probably found in the writings of Confucius, to the effect that one should not do to others what he would not have others do to him. But oh, what a contrast! One is merely a negative statement; the other is positive—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The Scribe was impressed, and conceded the truth of Jesus' reply. The Master said to him, "Thou art not far from the Kingdom of God." By this Jesus meant that the Scribe was very near to the point where he might become a disciple—one of those waiting for the Kingdom. It was such "Israelites indeed," in whom was no guile, that Jesus especially sought to gather from amongst the Jewish people, preparatory to throwing open to the Gentiles the door of Kingdom privileges.

The Jews understood that at Messiah's coming He would select a Kingdom class, to which would be granted Divine power. This was just what Jesus was doing. His words, His teachings, were drawing some and repelling others.

"God Looketh on the Heart."

The Temple at Jerusalem was still new, and money was needed for its maintenance, etc. The people were privileged to contribute, and apparently all so with willing hearts, casting their contributions into the treasury.

Jesus observed the contributions of the people, which stood near His doorway. Jesus was stilling opposite those boxes, and noted how all classes contributed.

There came along a poor widow, who put into the box two mites—each worth about one-eighth of a cent. Probably by Divine power Jesus knew of her circumstances and her gift. He made it a text for a little sermon to the Apostles. He declared that she had made a larger contribution in God's sight than had any one else; for practically she had cast in all she had, while others had merely contributed out of their abundance, what they would perhaps not seriously miss.

This little incident shows the Lord's appreciation of sacrifices. It is not the great things that we do, or attempt to do, that He highly esteems. The very small sacrifices and self-denials, that in the world's sight would be nothing, in the Master's sight would be great. If they denote love, devotion and self-sacrifice to the Lord and His cause it is of just such self-sacrificing material that the Lord makes disciples—the class that do what they can.

WEAK, WEARY WOMEN

Learn the Cause of Daily Woes and End Them.

When the back aches and throbs, When housework is torture, When night brings no rest nor sleep, When urinary disorders set in, Women's lot is a weary one. Doan's Kidney Pills are for weak kidneys.

Have proved their worth in Charlevoix.

This is one Charlevoix woman's testimony:

Mrs. M. Olney, 310 West Huribut avenue, Charlevoix, Michigan, says:

"I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a valuable kidney remedy. I have taken them several times for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. Others of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store, for lame back and pains in the kidneys and have had good results."

MICHIGAN STATE FORESTER DOING A GREAT WORK

Reforestation and Nursery Cost Reduced by Business Methods to a Science.

A Paper Read by State Forester Marcus Schaaf at the Annual Meeting of the Northern Forest Protective Association.

By act number two hundred eighty of the Public Acts of 1909 the custody and control of the then existing State Forests, which numbered only two of a combined area of 51,000 acres, was transferred to and vested in the Public Domain Commission. The same annual appropriation formerly granted for the improvement and maintenance of these two forests was provided in the act creating the Public Domain Commission as the amount to be used by the Commission in carrying on its work. A further provision of this act required that additional lands be set aside for forestry purposes to increase the total acreage to at least 200,000 acres, which provision was complied with by reserving 179,000 acres in March, 1910, bringing the total area to something over 231,000 acres. No provision, however, in the way of increased appropriation was made by the legislature for taking care of this additional acreage required by law, amounting to more than three times as much as that originally set aside.

Since the funds available were altogether inadequate for properly administering all of the State Forest lands, and inasmuch as the Public Domain Commission is charged with duties other than that of fire protection, it was thought best to limit its activities on the State Forests to such tasks only as could be properly cared for until such time as more ample financial provision should be made. In other words, it seemed the part of wisdom to develop and insure protection on a few of the State Forests rather than spread the limited appropriation thinly over all and thereby invite partial, or perhaps complete, failure. For a time, therefore, active work was confined to the older forests in Crawford and Roscommon counties, and even so the allowance was hardly sufficient to cover the cost of the necessary improvement and current expenses.

A substantial increase in the appropriation given by the last legislature made it possible to extend the work of protection and administration to other of the State Forests. Immediately this became available, steps were taken to bring under management an additional 43,000 acres embraced within the Lake Superior Forest in Luce county and the Fife Lake Forest in Grand Traverse county. The work at these two places is now well under way, and many improvements of a protective and permanent nature have been made. Other forests will be taken in hand this coming season, and it is hoped that within another year all of the larger tracts will be afforded thorough protection.

Naturally the first and most important function in carrying out any forest policy is to provide for reasonable protection of the property against fire. This, at all times, is absolutely essential to success. Without immunity from fires, it would be not only useless but a waste of money to reforest by planting and the work of reforestation is, on the State Forest at least, second only to that of fire protection. It is with this object in view that the administration of the State Forests has been carried on since their inception, and it is this particular feature of the work of the Public Domain Commission that will be here considered.

We have always considered the forest patrol to be the mainstay of our protective system, which is intended to be one of prevention rather than suppression. Rangers are kept on duty throughout the summer months whenever conditions are at all favorable for the starting and spreading of fires. The number of patrolmen required for each forest is small, since even the largest forest is comparatively limited in area. In some cases one man ordinarily covers the ground; in others four or five men at most are needed in times of extreme danger. On all the forests various lines of work are in progress to which the patrolmen can be shifted when conditions are such that patrol is unnecessary. In addition to strictly patrol duties the rangers avail themselves of every opportunity to gain the good will and cooperation of settlers and the forest-using public in general and in the prevention and control of forest fires. The value of this feature of the work cannot be overestimated.

The experiment of using look-out towers from which to detect fires was tried out last season and proved so successful that it is our intention to equip all of the forests with such towers as soon as possible. In some instances one tower only will be needed, which, if centrally located, will enable the patrolmen to detect, at least, we expect to be able to dispense with patrolmen on the forest, except during occasional periods when the fire hazard is high, when a few men on each of the larger forests a system of two or three connected with each other by telephone, and in all cases there will be telephonic communication between the towers and forest headquarters. Whenever conditions warrant, look-outs will be stationed in the towers continuously, who, by means of the telephone, will communicate their findings to the head rangers without delay. Where only one tower is necessary in order to cover the district, the location should be somewhat central and preferably upon some commanding eminence. In case of a large territory requiring a number of towers it might, however, be more advantageous to locate the latter along well-traversed roads, or patrol routes, where they would be easily accessible to rangers, rather than on the highest points, which might be in mora or less out-of-the-way places.

We have found the tower most suitable for our purposes to be a three-post design, 50 to 60 feet high, made of galvanized steel. On top is a square platform, 5 by 5 feet, enclosed by an iron railing. The cost of such towers is approximately $135 per foot of height. As between wooden and steel towers, we consider the latter much more preferable where structures of a permanent nature are contemplated, and the cost is but little, if any, in excess of wood.

Protection of the State Forests is further facilitated by networks of fire lines, which have been partially completed on all the forests thus far brought under management. These lines are grubbed to the width of sixteen feet, and strips ten feet wide are then plowed through the center. The plowed strips are kept clean and free from all growth by cultivating periodically with disk or cultivator. Where the land is level and fairly uniform in character, as is the case on most of the State Forests, such lines follow the section lines. On areas that have been artificially reforested additional fire lines are put in on the subdivisional lines of the section as a further measure of safety, so as to encompass each forty-acre tract. The forest is thus divided into units, within the limits of any one of which a fire can be contained, should it succeed in getting such a start as to render it particularly dangerous. There is at present a total of 120 miles of fire breaks on the State Forests. But fire lines in themselves, no matter how numerous, are not necessarily effective barriers, although, if properly maintained, incipient fires are often checked by them. It is men above all else that are required, and the lines are merely vantage points from which they can more successfully combat the flames.

The results obtained in our efforts to protect the State Forests against fires have proved quite satisfactory. During the five years in which the Public Domain Commission has had charge we have had 38 fires in all, burning over a total of 2,175 acres—an average of 135 acres burned annually, or approximately one-third of one percent of the area protected. The damage suffered was comparatively small, the fires occurring for the most part on open pine plains and killing no merchantable timber. No season can be said to have been particularly hazardous, except for periods of short duration. The above figures do not include the fires outside of our boundaries, of which there were a number, at all of which our rangers either rendered assistance or controlled them unaided. Included, however, are those fires occurring on the interior holdings. The measure of success that has been attained in our efforts towards protection we attribute to a combination of fairly normal climatic conditions, vigilance through our patrols and look-outs, and the co-operation of the residents on and in the vicinity of the forests.

Mention of other important lines of work that are being carried on by the Public Domain Commission may be of some interest.

In order to provide planting stock for our own use and for general distribution, a forest tree nursery is maintained at Higgins Lake. This originally included about five acres, but was recently increased to twice its former size to keep pace with the increasing scope of the work of reforestation. Both seedlings and transplants, of coniferous species exclusively, are raised here. Particular attention is given to the native Norway and White pines, although other species, such as Scotch, Western Yellow, Austrian and Lodgepole pines, Red, White, Blue and Norway spruces, Douglas fir and European larch, are grown for experimental purposes. Careful records covering a period of years have enabled us to arrive at reasonably accurate figures representing the cost of raising seedlings and transplants of various species. The following are a few examples of the cost per thousand of 2-year-old seedlings and 3-year-old transplants in the ground:

TWO-YEAR SEEDLINGS.
White pine (sowed in hills).....	$0.668
Norway pine (sowed in hills).....	.478
Western Yellow pine (broadcast).....	.717
Norway spruce (broadcast).....	.724
THREE-YEAR TRANSPLANTS, ONE-YEAR TRANSPLANTED.
White pine.....	2.841
Norway pine.....	2.678
Western Yellow pine.....	2.917
Norway spruce.....	2.524

The largest single item of cost is that of labor. All labor is recorded on time cards on which the time of each man employed in the nursery is distributed to the most minute detail. Such details include preparation of ground, sowing, covering, mulching, uncovering, watering, weeding, cultivation, inventory, etc., for each separate use also of the different species. From these not only can the total cost of labor entering into the production of any one species of a certain age be determined, but in the case of each successive step in the complete operation. We are thus able to detect the weak points in our nursery work and remedy them accordingly. All materials such as seeds, bed covers, mulch, lumber for frame, boxes, screens, etc., are taken into consideration. The unit for figuring costs is the seed bed. The cost per seed bed having been ascertained, this amount is then apportioned among the number of thousands of plants shown by the annual inventory to be contained in the average bed of a given species and age. Many of the items of cost fluctuate slightly from year to year, depending upon the quality of seeds, difference in seasons, death rate due to fungus diseases, etc., but the figures cited above, deduced from observations extending over a period of four years, are considered as fairly representative. The nursery has supplied all requirements for planting on the State Forests, besides large numbers of plants distributed throughout the State each year. The annual inventory shows a stock of about 3,000,000 transplants and seedlings on hand at the present time.

The activities in reforestation are gradually assuming larger proportions. There are large areas on the State Forests that are almost devoid of any tree growth of a desirable kind. Although fire protection is afforded, the absence of seed trees, from which natural regeneration might take place, makes it necessary to employ artificial methods if such places are to be restocked. Planting involves considerable financial outlay, and is advisable only where reasonable protection can be assured. Up to the present time 1,119 acres have been planted, of which number 679 acres have been set in the past four years.

Our present practice is to prepare all of the ground that is to be planted by plowing shallow furrows, in the bottoms of which the plants are set. This partial preparation of the soil facilitates the work of planting, enables the plantations to establish themselves much more quickly than on unprepared ground, where grasses and weeds are strong competitors for possession of the soil, and results in a minimum death rate. The furrows are made from five to six feet apart, and the cost per acre of plowing varies from a little less than 50 cents in comparatively clean, open ground to about $1 in situations where there is a considerable amount of brush, fallen logs and other debris. We have found, however, that this cost is just about offset by the increased efficiency of the crew when planting in furrows. Planting is done by what is known as the "slit" method, the instrument used being a planting iron of our own design and make. A good working crew consists of from twelve to sixteen men. Each man carries a pail of plants and planting iron and individually performs the complete operation of setting the plants. Once the men have become accustomed to this method, a crew will average, under ordinary conditions, about 1,750 2 or 3 year old seedlings per man per day.

The stock used in most of our operations is 2 and 3 year old seedlings. The species most extensively planted are White and Norway pines, since these are unquestionably well adapted for general planting in Michigan. Scotch pine also being used to some extent and does exceedingly well. Formerly only about 1,200 plants were set per acre, but within the past few years all of our operations have been on the basis of 2,000 per acre. The latter figure makes ample allowance for any ordinary death rate, and close planting enables the trees to obtain complete possession of the soil in a much shorter time. Furthermore, the extra cost occasioned by a liberal use of the plant in the first place is less than the outlay for subsequent reinforcement of the open spots that are likely to result from wide spacing.

The per-acre costs, covering 548 acres reforested with 2 and 3 year old seedlings of Norway and White pine and 3-year-old transplants of Norway pine under different conditions, are as follows:

UNPREPARED GROUND
White pine 2-year seedlings, 1,200 per acre.....	$3.93
Norway pine 2-year seedlings, 1,200 per acre.....	3.22
White pine 3-year seedlings, 2,000 per acre.....	6.12
PREPARED GROUND.
Norway pine 2-year seedlings, 2,000 per acre.....	5.35
Norway pine 3-year transplants, 2,000 per acre.....	9.40

The costs of all labor, plants delivered to the site, and preparation of the ground are included in the above figures. The death rate in the plantations has varied from 30 per cent in wide spacing on unprepared ground to only 3 1/2 per cent in the case of closer spacing on ground that was given preparation.

Heat Lightning. When the distant horizon is brilliantly illuminated with flashes of light on warm summer evenings old residents will explain that it is caused by "heat lightning."

Heat lightning is really the reflection of ordinary lightning. After there is a thunderstorm. Light travels at something more than 186,000 miles a second, while thunder travels slowly through the air and soon becomes inaudible to our ears. It is this light reflected upon the clouds or mist near the horizon which we see and call heat lightning. Sometimes vivid displays of northern lights, or the aurora borealis, are erroneously called heat lightning.

There is, therefore, no such thing as heat lightning, and this should properly be called "distant" lightning.—New York World.

A man with a mapia for juggling with figures produced paper and pencil and commanded a friend to put down the number of his living brothers, multiply by two, add three, multiply the result by five, then add the number of living sisters, multiply by ten, add the number of dead brothers and sisters, subtract 150 from the result, which was done. Now, he said, with a cunning smile, the right hand figure will be the number of deaths, the middle figure the number of living sisters, and the left hand figure the number of living brothers. Try it.

STOCK GROWERS OF STATE ENCOURAGED TO EXHIBIT AT FAIR

While the management of the Greater Michigan Fair have not put up the bars against cattle bred outside of the state, it is not encouraging exhibitors by breeders who make a profession of preparing cattle for fair and winning prizes. Therefore, special inducements have been made for the breeders of Michigan cattle to show at the fair because it is known that as far as quality goes Michigan can produce and is producing a good strain of stock as any other state in the union, and it is to the Michigan breed is the fair management desires to award the prizes and it is to the world the fair management desires to show what can be produced in Michigan. In other words, it is a Greater Michigan Fair for Greater Michigan farmers and everything that is possible is being done for the protection of the interests of the comfort of these farmers of Michigan who will become interested in the fair.

HOW TO CURE MEAT AT HOME

Can Be Done Economically and Satisfactorily at Any Time.

Curing Should Be Begun Within 24 to 36 Hours After Animal Is Killed.

The best way to eat meat is to eat it while fresh, for there is no way of preserving it that will retain all the nutrition and all the flavor. It is, nevertheless, frequently desirable to cure meat at home and there is no reason why this cannot be done satisfactorily and economically. Salt, sugar or molasses, baking soda, and a little saltpetre are the only ingredients necessary.

Ordinarily the curing of meat should be begun from twenty-four to thirty-six hours after the animal is slaughtered. This allows sufficient time for the animal heat to leave the meat entirely, but not sufficient to permit decay to set in. Once the meat is tainted no amount of preservatives will bring back its proper flavor. On the other hand, if salt is applied too soon obnoxious gases will be retained and the meat will possess an offensive odor. It is almost impossible to obtain good results when meat is frozen.

Three useful recipes for popular forms of cured meat are given below. The only equipment necessary for them are the ingredients already mentioned and a clean hardwood barrel or a large stone jar or crock. In considering these recipes it is well to remember that, on the whole, brine-cured meats are best for farm use. They are less trouble to prepare and the brine affords better protection against insects and vermin. A cool, moist cellar is the best place for brine curing. The cellar should be dark and tight enough to prevent flies and vermin.

Recipes for Curing.

Corned Beef—The pieces commonly used for corning are the plate, rump, cross ribs and brisket, or, in other words, the cheaper cuts of meat. The loin, ribs and other fancy cuts are more often used fresh and, since there is more or less waste of nutrients in corning, this is well. The pieces for corning should be cut into convenient-sized joints, say five or six inches square. It should be the aim to cut them all about the same thickness, so they will make an even layer in the barrel.

Meat from fat animals makes choicer corned beef than that from poor animals. When the meat is thoroughly cooled it should be corned as soon as possible, as any decay in the meat is likely to spoil the brine during the corning process. Under no circumstances should the meat be brined while it is frozen. Weigh out the meat and allow eight pounds of salt to each one hundred pounds; sprinkle a layer of salt one-quarter of an inch in depth over the bottom of the barrel; pack in as closely as possible the cuts of meat, making a layer five or six inches in thickness; then put on a layer of salt, following that with another layer of meat; repeat until the meat and salt have all been packed in the barrel, care being used to reserve salt enough for a good layer over the top. After the package has stood over night add every one hundred pounds of meat four pounds of sugar, two ounces of baking soda and four ounces of saltpetre dissolved in a gallon of tepid water. Three gallons more of water should be sufficient to cover this quantity. In case more or less than one hundred pounds of meat is to be corned make the brine in the proportion given. A loose board cover weighted down with a heavy stone or piece of iron should be put on the meat to keep all of it under the brine. In case any should project rust would start and the brine would spoil in a short time.

It is not necessary to boil the brine except in warm weather. If the meat has been corned during the winter and must be kept into the summer season, it would be well to watch the brine closely during the spring, as it is more likely to spoil at that time than at any other season. If the brine appears to be rosy or does not drip freely from the finger when immersed and lifted it should be turned off and new brine added after carefully washing the meat. The sugar or molasses in the brine has a tendency to ferment and, unless the brine is kept in a cool place, there is sometimes trouble from this source. The meat should be kept in the brine twenty-eight to forty days to secure thorough curing.

Dried Beef—The round is commonly used for dried beef, the inside of the thigh being considered the choicest piece, as it is slightly more tender than the outside of the round. The round should be cut lengthwise of the grain of the meat in preparing for dried beef, so that the muscle fibres may be cut crosswise when the dried beef is sliced for table use. A tight cask or jar is necessary for curing. The process is as follows: To each one hundred pounds of meat weigh out five pounds of salt, three pounds of granulated sugar and two ounces of saltpetre; mix thoroughly together. Rub the meat on all surfaces with a third of the mixture and pack it in the jar as tightly as possible. Allow it to remain three days, when it should be removed and rubbed again with another third of the mixture. In repacking put at the bottom the pieces that were on top the first time. Let stand for three days, when they should be removed and rubbed with the remaining third of the mixture and allowed to stand for three days more. The meat is then ready to be removed from the pickle. The liquid forming in the jars should not be removed, but the meat should be repacked in the liquid each time. After being removed from the pickle the meat should be smoked and hung in a dry attic or near the kitchen fire, where the water will evaporate from it. It may be used at any time after smoking, although the longer it hangs in the dry atmosphere the drier it will get. The drier the climate, in general, the more easily meats can be dried. In arid regions good dried meat can be made by exposing it fresh to the air, with protection from flies.

Plain Salt Pork—Rub each piece of meat with fine common salt and pack closely in a barrel. Let stand over night. The next day weigh out ten pounds of salt and two ounces of saltpetre to each one hundred pounds of meat and dissolve in four gallons of boiling water. Pour this brine over the meat when cold, cover and weight down to keep it under the brine. Meat will pack best if cut into pieces about six inches square. The pork should be kept in the brine till used.

Sugar-Cured Hams and Bacon—When the meat is cooled rub each piece with salt and allow it to drain over night. Then pack it in a barrel with the hams and shoulders in the bottom, using the strips of bacon to fill in between or to put on top. Weigh out for each one hundred pounds of meat eight pounds of salt, two pounds of brown sugar and cover the meat with the brine. For summer use it will be safest to boil the brine before using. In that case it should be carefully cooled before it is used. For winter curing it is not necessary to boil the brine. Bacon strips should remain in this brine four to six weeks; hams six to eight weeks. This is a standard recipe and has given the best of satisfaction. Hams and a bacon cured in the spring will keep right through the summer after they are smoked. The meat will be sweet and palatable if it is properly smoked and the flavor will be good.

Our readers have doubtless noticed the advertisements of Black Silk Stove Polish now appearing in our columns. We have carried this advertising for several years and the manufacturers inform us that a very satisfactory trade has developed in this locality. This is only another proof of the fact that an article of merit backed by advertising in newspapers is almost sure of success.

NEW SERIAL STORY

It has been the pleasure of the Courier management to obtain the latest sensational moving picture serial story for our readers. "Lucille Love, the Girl of Mystery," is the title of this wonderful story by the "Master Pen."

Motion picture serials are rapidly becoming the most popular stories on the market and this story is considered to be a top-notch. To lovers of good stories a special treat is in store for all who will read about the adventures in many lands by the girl who tries to save the honor of two men, her father and her lover.

Lucille Love pursued a boat in an aeroplane, was wrecked on a desert shore, was captured by savages, was kidnapped by her enemy, Loubeque, an international spy, and is the central figure in many other wonderful experiences.

Must Label Honey.

Thursday a state law went into effect requiring dealers in honey to label every package they handle with the net weight of the package. A frame of honey, or section, will weigh from 13 1/2 to 14 ounces, including the wood, while the net weight would be 12 1/2 to 13 ounces. In other words, in buying a pound of honey in the frame or section a person buys an ounce of wood.

New and Terrible Instrument of War

It is held that France is the best equipped nation in the world for a battle in the air. Here is shown a French aeroplane bomb or aerial torpedo. It can be carried over a city or a battleship fleet, and if dropped with any degree of accuracy—and the French have been fairly accurate in their mimic-warfare practice—can work incalculable damage.

STORM DOES GREAT DAMAGE

Loss Will Run Into the Thousands in and Around Petoskey.

Greenhouses of Bakcock & Son Suffer $300 Loss—Mammoth Hailstones Fall for Short Time.

Sunday morning the citizens of Charlevoix and vicinity were suddenly awakened by the continual downpour of rain and hailstones. Many thought their homes were being hammered to pieces. While the hail was not abundant, yet the size of the stones caused considerable consternation among the inhabitants who got up to witness the storm. The damage in the city was not noticeable anywhere except at the local greenhouse.

At the greenhouse all the outdoor plants were practically ruined, entailing a damage estimated at about $300. Approximately 400 window panes were broken out, which caused a loss of about $150. An alarm of fire was turned in from this place while the storm was raging and the fire ladders made a flying trip, but on their arrival it was discovered there was no fire. Many people turned out owing to the fact that the storm and severe lightning and harsh thunder had awakened them a short time before.

From the farm localities about the city reports show that little or no damage was done to fruits and vegetables. It is probable that the storm crossed considerable expanse of water and most of it had vanished by the time Charlevoix was reached.

Petoskey was hard hit by hail. Never before has that city been the victim of such a violent and raging storm as struck them at about the same time Sunday morning. Crops and gardens of all descriptions were seriously damaged and considerable fruit was ruined by the mammoth hail stones. The storm that came from the northwest crashed over many windows on the west side of houses all over the city. Birds were either killed or badly injured and trees slivered by the onrush of the falling hail. The green houses in Petoskey were all smashed to pieces. Even the steel frames were twisted and broken. The damage to Petoskey within a two mile radius is estimated at many thousands dollars. It is estimated that an average of one pane of glass was broken for each residence in that city. Many homes had a dozen lights broken out. Skylights were all demolished and the worst strain was felt when the stores could not supply the demand for glass to the greenhouses, let alone the residences and skylights. Tomatoes and cabbages were the hardest hit as the hail stones cut them to pieces when they struck. Many farmers complained that their crops were all laid flat to the ground which of course means an immense loss.

MICHIGAN IS A GOOD STATE

In Which to Enjoy all the Comforts of Life.

Land Productive and Very Best Opportunities for Young Men are to Be Found.

Michigan could exist as an isolated empire while her people enjoyed all the reasonable comforts and luxuries of life with the exception of cotton, which is not produced within the state. This is would be possible because of the state's wonderful and greatly varied natural resources, numerous industries and varied possibilities of production from the soil, which exists in numerous types under a wide range of climatic conditions, due to peculiar environment and geographical location.

Michigan agriculture is but one of a group of five great industries in the state—agriculture, manufacturing, lumbering, mining and marine. These industries are sufficiently developed so that all are important to the nation as well as the commonwealth; none are incidental, all having been developed uniformly.

In addition to the very favorable place Michigan occupies regarding her industries and agricultural products, there is still greater opportunity for development, for as yet only 51.5 per cent. of the total land area of Michigan is included in farms, with enormous areas of good land remaining to be reclaimed. Michigan ranks twenty-first in land area among the forty-eight states in this country and eighth in population with 2,810,373 inhabitants. The approximate land area of Michigan is 36,787,000 acres and of this amount 18,940,514 acres only are included in farms, while 12,832,078 acres are classified as improved lands.

The position of Michigan in relation to her sister states is really unique. Though not a new state, in the sense of those to the westward, there still remains great possibilities for agricultural development in the state in addition to the improvement of those portions long ago reclaimed. It would be easily possible for citizens of other states, and perhaps some of our own, to assume that—because settlement began at an early date in the state—all the good land had already been occupied and that the portion not under cultivation is of little or no use for agricultural purposes.

On the contrary, there are no better opportunities offered anywhere to day for investment in farm lands than in the State of Michigan, where prices at present are much lower than in adjacent states where similar soils and conditions exist. The 48.5 per cent. of Michigan land not in farms is not all sandy or rocky or swampy by any means; there are enormous acres of good land not yet under cultivation.

WHAT'S THE SCHEME?

R. W. Paddock Wants to Know All About Van Pelt's Road Scheme.

Editor Courier:

We have just finished reading Brother Geo. H. VanPelt's latest effusion anent the good roads question. There are many who will say "Oh, Van has had another dream" and such may be the truth, yet we must not forget that at times dreams come true. We all realize what a fine thing it would be to have an Appian way connecting the three cities of Charlevoix county. We appreciate the beauties and pleasures of such highway with the frequent glimpses of Pine Lake and frankly admit it would be a "thing of beauty and a joy forever." Yes, many of us would be willing to dig down in our jeans to help the thing along, but we want to keep our jeans; they seem a necessity in this rigorous climate, at least part of the season, when our summer friends have gone like our sweet warbling birds to a warmer and sunnier clime.

Give us your scheme, Van, but keep in mind at the time that those of us who remain twelve months annually in "Charlevoix the Beautiful" sadly need our jeans.

Respectfully,
Robert W. Paddock.

BALL RESIGNS

County Y. M. C. A. Unable to Continue on Account of Lack of Support.

Though perhaps few citizens of the county are aware of the situation, the directors of the County Young Men's Christian Association have for some time been confronted with the fact that unless further financial aid was forthcoming within a short time it would be necessary to discontinue active work for an indefinite period.

At this time industrial and financial conditions are such as to increase the necessity for this action. The resignation of A. B. Ball, who has been in the county nearly two years as the representative of the county committee, takes effect September 15.

The County Y. M. C. A. has done splendid work since its organization and it is a matter of regret that not enough financial aid is given to continue it.

TROLLEY HIT CAR

George D. Swinton, Wife and Children in Auto Accident Near Sylvania, Ohio.

Tuesday forenoon Dr. A. A. Swinton received a telegram stating that the car in which his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Swinton, and brother and sister, Roy and Irene Swinton, had been smashed up in a collision with a trolley car near Sylvania, Ohio.

Some time ago the party left this city for a trip which included a visit at the home of Roy Swinton in Kentucky and to the birth place of Mrs. George D. Swinton at Gallopolis, Ohio. The party were evidently on their way to Michigan when the accident occurred. From what can be learned the car was a wreck, but none of the party seriously hurt, although badly frightened.

ELECTED DELEGATES

County Convention Pass Resolutions Endorsing Administration of President Wilson.

The Democratic County Convention was held at Boyne City Tuesday. After the convention was called to order the election of committee officers resulted as follows: Dr. R. A. Risk, East Jordan, chairman; B. J. Quick of Boyne City, secretary. A full delegation was present with the exception of those from Norwood and Chandler.

Besides the routine business of the convention, resolutions were adopted endorsing the administration of President Wilson and the management of state affairs by Governor Ferris. Another resolution embodied instructions to the delegates to the state convention, the substance of which was the recommendations that they work in harmony with the state wide progressive Democratic league.

B. J. Quick and H. A. Jersey of Boyne City, Dr. J. A. Auld and W. H. Miller of Charlevoix, Charles Hudkins of Wilson and Frank Pierce of Boyne Falls were elected as delegates to the state convention to be held at Detroit September 30.

SCHOOL OPENS SEPTEMBER 14

But Few Changes Among the Teachers Have Taken Place.

H. A. Craig to Head Schools—W. A. Ewing Principal—School Notes of Interest.

The public schools of Charlevoix will open September 14. Comparatively few changes have been made, but some rearrangements have taken place. I. M. DeVoe's place will be filled, by H. A. Craig, whose record for past years as a teacher and coach earned him the high school principalship. We feel confident that in his new position he will exercise the same energy and thoroughness as characterized his work of past years.

A. B. Maybee will have charge of the high school mathematics department. Mr. Maybee is a graduate of Alma College and comes to us with high recommendations, not only from the college, but also from Mr. Ellsworth, superintendent of the Alma school, where he assisted last year in the teaching of mathematics.

Last year when Miss Catton finally gave her decision not to return to Charlevoix we knew that we had lost a teacher whose place in the class room and school activities would be hard to fill. We have every reason to believe that Miss Helen Cone will continue the past class work that has always characterized our high school English department. Miss Cone is a graduate of Flint, is a woman of fine character, excellent scholarship, enthusiastic and conscientious about her work.

Charlevoix has always encouraged strong, clean athletics. We consider ourselves fortunate in securing for coach and science teacher so able a man as W. A. Vogt. Mr. Vogt has been given the place as all M. I. A. A. quarterback. While at Alma he showed his ability on both gridiron and diamond and in the class room.

The grade school will witness only two changes—Miss Madge Allen, fifth grade, and Miss Beatrice Allen, sixth grade. Both are teachers of experience and ability and come with the highest recommendations in reference to character and ability.

To the other teachers who return to Charlevoix we can say that their ability and faithfulness is appreciated. We hope that their work this year may bring greater satisfaction than ever before, not to them alone, but also to the schools.

Following is the list of teachers for the coming year:

H. A. Craig—Superintendent.

High School

W. A. Ewing, principal—History.
A. B. Maybee—Mathematics.
W. A. Vogt—Science.
Lena Horst—Languages.
Helen Cone—English.
Anna Lomhard—Commercial.

E. D. Pierce—Principal.
Blanche Lameroux—7th grade.
Beatrice Allen—6th grade.
Madge Allen—5th grade.
Alida Whiting—Training room, 4th grade.
Audrey Correll—2nd and 3rd grades.
Genevieve Jarvis—Chart and 1st grade.

Christine Peterson—Manual Training and Domestic Art.

Washington School

Sophie Nanson—3rd, 4th and 5th grades.
Hallie Bon—Chart and 1st and 2nd grades.

Lincoln School

Mary Finucan—2nd and 3rd grades.
Bessie Hanshaw—Chart and 1st grade.

County Normal

Jessie M. Himes—Principal.
Alida Whiting—Training room.
Music and Drawing

Mrs. A. J. Coulter.
The school board will handle all school books, which will be on sale in the music room of the high school. This plan proved very successful last year and arrangements will be made by the teachers in reference to the time of sale. Although this plan makes more work for the teachers, it saves about 25 per cent. to buyers of school books.

PROLOGUE.
In print, as on the moving picture screen, "Lucille Love" is a thrilling, rapid fire story. It takes its heroine, a young woman of charm and beauty, into the strangest of situations. There she braves the perils of sea and land for the sake of her love. As the situations unfold, with the swiftness and ease of the moving picture, the reader finds himself following, as he would the living movements of the reel, the fortunes of Lucille, her foe, Loubeque, the international spy, amid scenes of shipwreck and the wildness of nature, on sea, among the islands of the cannibals and elsewhere. But Lucille and her arch foe are not the only two in the picture and story whose movements are followed with the tribute of intense interest. The old general, Lucille's father; her lover, Lieutenant Gibson; the chief of the savages and others all stand out distinctly in the panorama of picture and story.

CHAPTER I.
The Work of a Spy.
He was swift; he was certain; he was sure.
Faintly sweet the tantalizing perfume lingered in the room, and the rustle of Lucille Love's skirts seemed still to sound against the walls of the tiny room which General Sumpter Love used as his private office; the echo of Lieutenant Gibson's pleading tones had not departed when the door leading to the servant's quarters moved. A cautious fraction of an inch at a time, a sound so faint that nothing lived between it and silence succeeded the departure of the general's aid and the girl he loves, the girl he means to marry. As the butler's face framed itself on the threshold the door was opened that led to the ballroom, a burst of music vibrated there, then all was silence. The butler closed the door swiftly behind him and glided across the floor, stopping before the safe, his dexterous fingers manipulating the knobs with a careless certainty.

Lucille Love.

that spoke of the master craftsman, his face against the cold steel, his ears fairly pecked with the tensile of his listening for the click of falling numbers. His expression betrayed no anxiety. He knew his worth, knew the probability of the safe in which his master placed so great confidence and to which he had consigned the papers and orders he had just received from Washington until the ball was over and he had time to study the instructions at his leisure.

The crackman heaved a sigh of relief as his sensitive finger tips told him the door had swung open to his tug.

He was swift; he was certain; he was sure. Not a paper was disarranged. His fingers fluttered like little white birds drifting among the general's papers with a certitude that he spoke great familiarity. With a sigh of relief he stared at the sealed packet he had just seen the army officer receive and place there. The butler thrust it into his pocket, drawing out a package of bank notes and putting it in the tiny vault where the papers had been. The door closed softly, the knobs whirling under the man's touch. Again he waited, listening, listening. The vibration of the dancer's feet continued for a second, the strains of music died. With the noiseless glide of a panther the butler slipped across the floor and closed the door behind him.

Not one motion had been wasted. For months he had served in his menial capacity for this one opportunity.

"It's about Dick's promotion, dad."

For months to come he would continue to serve in order that no suspicion might rest upon him.

Ten minutes later Thompson, alias Tommy the Dude, alias "Chl" Tom and wanted for just such jobs in many police departments of the world, glided out the rear of the house, scurrying across the moon splashed parade ground and losing himself in devious windings among the officers' homes upon the military reservation. Slip ping down a narrow side street, lined with disreputable houses that leaned at drunken angles toward one another, the little windows winking heavily to their neighbors, he paused before the largest of these places. His hand reached toward the bell pull from some distant part of the house came back an echo. Slowly, very slowly, the door swung open, swallowing up the figure of the thief-butler. And there the butler and his employer made their plans.

General Sumpter Love, U. S. A., smiled tolerantly to himself as he overheard the low voices of his aid and Lucille coming from the little cozy corner in which the young lieutenant had hidden his sweetheart away from the avid dancers who would have taken her away from him. Then he sighed heavily as he realized he stood on the threshold of another change; that the courtship of his aid had finally been successful and another household would soon be occupied in Officers' row, leaving him alone in this great house.

He wondered if all fathers felt this way, wondered if he could gladly give his daughter to another man and be happy watching that other remold her world. And the time was so short. That very boat in the harbor now might bear the senate's confirmation of young Gibson's promotion to the rank and pay of captain. The two men had agreed that the marriage should wait on that, and the general had to admit that the aid had lived up to his word. But, then, Gibson always did that.

Again the general shook his shoulders, striving bravely to his private office. Only in work could he get relief from these fits of depression. And there was always work to be done, for the little brown people loved their fighting, were never satisfied with peace and quiet. He pressed the annunciator on his desk, curtly commanding the soldier who responded to send Lieutenant Gibson to him.

General Love permitted a smile to play about the corners of his stern mouth as the rustle of a woman's skirt reached his ears simultaneously with the click of his aid's boots. Came a brief, whispered conversation outside the door, then the aid stood upon the threshold at attention, Lucille hiding behind him in an attitude of mock humility. The old man bit his mustache viciously, then smiled broadly.

"Well," he demanded, fumbling among the papers that littered his desk, "what have you got to say for yourself, young woman?"

Lucille slipped across the floor, twin he light of white arms about her father's neck, the soft velvet of her cheek smoothing his brown, leathery one. It was the way she had coaxed him when a child, the way she had never outgrown or known to fall.

month is such a long time, and—and Dick has some money now!"

"Yes, yes, yes," the general retorted gruffly, a twinkle in his eye that belied the tone. "But from what I've seen tonight and the last week since Harley started his aeroplane maneuvers I thought there might be some change in your plans."

Lucille flushed prettily, her eyes flashing a mocking smile at the stalwart young officer, who stood now with her, holding her hand.

"Mr. Harley's a very nice man," she defended, "even if Dick does get jealous. Besides, a girl has to be amused somehow when busy old generals keep their officers working all day and night."

"I'll think it over, dear," the general said kindly. "Immediately I get through with the orders that came tonight, Lieutenant," he said briskly, "you put the orders and papers from Washington in the safe as I told you? Will you get them for me?"

The aid flushed a bit, his fingers playing at the gold strap at his side.

"Why—why, general," he stammered, "I left the combination memorandum in my room. Lucille was waiting and—"

"Get it!" snapped the old man. The slightest infraction of military system touched his heart on the raw.

He studied his aid curiously when he returned and began fumbling with the knobs of the safe. The door opened, and the lieutenant's hand automatically reached inside toward the place where he had put the packet. An expression of incredulous dismay was upon his face as he drew out a bundle of banknotes.

"Why, I don't remember these!" he cried. Then with an expression of relief, "You have already been here, sir?"

"No," General Love's tone was peremptory, crackling. He did not relish delay of any sort. "Come, come—the papers I gave you, Lieutenant."

"General, they are not there."

"Not there?" Like the crackling of fire in dry twigs was the old man's voice. "Not there, sir! Then perhaps they, too, may be in your room."

"No, sir. I distinctly recall placing them in the order box. There was no money there at the time."

But two men knew of the arrival of the orders and papers. General Love suddenly rose, the chair scraping raspily upon the taut silence.

"Oh, father!"

"Lieutenant Gibson," he began, his voice rivaling the sound of the scraping chair, "Lucille mentioned a moment ago that you had suddenly acquired sufficient money to justify an immediate marriage."

"Yes, sir, a legacy."

General Love sported his disbeliever.

"Leaving the combination of this safe, with secrets which are invaluable to the United States, with secrets that would be of untold value to the enemies of the United States, with secrets that might mean the sacrifice of not territory but countless lives—does that not strike you as strange, not to say suspicious, that such a precious thing should be left in your room, Lieutenant?" The tones of the general's voice had risen, a snarl vibrating through every syllable. "The papers, Lieutenant Gibson—immediately! This is your last chance."

"I placed them in the safe, and they are not there now, sir?" The tones were quiet, cold, determined.

"You will go to your quarters, sir, and consider yourself under arrest. The humiliation of an escort will be spared you. However, there will be a guard about the place."

A faint little cry of protest, "Oh, father!" sounded clear and distinct against the dead silence. The young man's hand fell from salute as he stopped swiftly toward his sweetheart. General Love's arm reached out and drew the sobbing girl to him, his left hand outstretched as though the mere touch of his aid would be deadly. Gibson halted in his tracks. Again his arm rose stiffly in salute; then without a word he turned, his steps falling fainter and fainter upon the ears of the pair who listened with leaden hearts.

CHAPTER II.

A Man With but One Thought.

HUGO LOUBEQUE turned the packet of papers and orders over and over in his hand, a brooding expression in his eyes that told his thoughts were very far away from the butler crackman who had just brought them to him. A massive figure of a man, he seemed to fill the room with his presence, the chair in which he sat seemed to have been built about him, the room itself

THERE always come a time when the truth will come out, no matter how great the precautions that are taken to keep it concealed. For years certain interests in the west have hung out golden bait in the form of advertisements circulated among eastern and central west people telling of the fame and fortune that, surely awaits those who decide to cast their lot among the people on the Pacific coast. Such advertising as a rule is not sanctioned by the business interests of those parts because business men know that where one newcomer succeeds a dozen fail and the more failures that occur the greater is the danger to their own interests. There was a hearing held recently by the federal industrial board in Portland, Oregon, and among the testimony given as to prevailing conditions the following important statement was brought out: "People come out here lured by these advertisements, thinking that they are getting into the land of milk and honey. They believe that they can get along here easier than they can some place else. Then they find on arrival that they must do their own milking and there is no honey." This was the testimony of Isaac Sweet, executive secretary of the Oregon Civic League, a man who knows whereof he speaks on subjects touching upon industrial conditions in Oregon. With such blunt and truthful statements from a man who is qualified to judge of conditions it seems a wonder as well as a pity that people are impelled to leave Michigan in order to better their condition, and upon arriving in the promised land find that they have to work harder than ever in order to keep soul and body within the same compass. The man in Oregon sees this condition, but the man in Michigan who is lured by the idea that any other place is better than his home state cannot get that notion out of his head except by going west or somewhere else and having it starved out. Many have gone and more will go regardless of the consequences and it is to be regretted that the families of those who are seized with this wanderlust are the ones who really suffer instead of the man himself. Remain in Michigan is a slogan that is worth its weight in gold a thousand fold if adopted and followed out by Michiganders. - Record-Herald.

BIRDS WERE WINNERS

Keycraft & Otto Make a Clean Sweep of the West Michigan State Fair.

Petoukey poultry made a fine showing at the West Michigan State Fair last week and many cups and prizes were brought back to that city. Competition in the many breeds was strong and the winning birds were about as good as could be bred.

The Keycraft & Otto farm sent a large number of birds to the show and received word Friday morning that they had been awarded the following: White Orpingtons—First and second cock, first and second hen, first and second cockerel, first and second pullet and first pen; Buff Orpingtons—first and third cock, first and third hen, first and third cockerel, second pullet and second pen; Black Orpingtons—First cock, first and second hen, first and second cockerel, first and second pullet and first pen; Barred-Rocks—First cock, first and second hen, first and second pullet, first cockerel and first pen.

Broke His Leg.
Sam Williams received a broken leg Monday in a mix-up while driving the mule team of H. B. Woods. Williams walked out onto the tongue when starting to unhitch the team. This frightened them and caused them to jump aside, allowing Williams to fall between them. They then started to run, and Williams hung on to the tongue and was dragged some distance. The team was stopped and it was found that his right leg was fractured just above the knee.

WHOLESALE HOT BREADS.

LUNCHEON MENU.
Consomme
Ham and Eggs
French Potatoes
French Beans
Baked Apples with Raisins.
Tea or Chocolate.

DELICIOUS and wholesome hot breads may be made according to the following recipes:

Cornmeal Puffs.—Take one cupful of cornmeal, one cupful of flour, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of soda and one of cream of tartar (or one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder), one egg, one cupful of milk and one teaspoonful of melted butter. Mix the dry ingredients together and sift. The milk is added to the beaten egg and stirred into the other. Bake fifteen or twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Made With Cold Rice.
Take one quart of milk, three beaten eggs, one tablespoonful melted butter, one teaspoonful of sugar and two cups of flour, with which sift two rounding teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one scant one of salt. Make into a batter and beat in a cupful cold boiled rice. Beat well and bake in a hot oven.

Whent Cakes.—Take one pint of milk, scald it and add to it one tablespoonful of butter. Let stand until lukewarm. Then add one-half cake of yeast dissolved in a quarter cupful of warm water, three cupfuls of flour and one teaspoonful of salt. Beat well, cover and let stand in a warm place until morning. A half hour before breakfast beat two eggs, yolks and whites, separately and add first the yolks, then the whites, to the risen mixture. Beat and bake in gem pans in a quick oven.

For Luncheon or Tea.
French Rolls.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter and one-fourth cupful of sugar together and gradually beat into a pint of light sponge. Add two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, and flour enough to make the same thickness as before. Cover and stand in a warm place until it begins to rise, then add flour to make the soft dough and knead well. Set aside again until it doubles in size, then shape like Parker House rolls. Sprinkle ground lard sugar over the top. Bake fifteen minutes. When done lay a napkin over the rolls in the pan for five minutes, which makes a tender crust.

Sprinkle ground lard sugar over the top. Bake fifteen minutes. When done lay a napkin over the rolls in the pan for five minutes, which makes a tender crust.

For Luncheon or Tea.
French Rolls.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter and one-fourth cupful of sugar together and gradually beat into a pint of light sponge. Add two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, and flour enough to make the same thickness as before. Cover and stand in a warm place until it begins to rise, then add flour to make the soft dough and knead well. Set aside again until it doubles in size, then shape like Parker House rolls. Sprinkle ground lard sugar over the top. Bake fifteen minutes. When done lay a napkin over the rolls in the pan for five minutes, which makes a tender crust.

INDIAN ROMANCE

Members Who Took Part in Play at Wa-yu-ga-mug United in Marriage.

An Indian romance of no little interest to the many resorters who flock to that region during the summer months has just been made public at Petoskey and has resulted in the marriage of two of the leading characters in the Indian play "Hiawatha," which has been staged at Wa-yu-ga-mug throughout the summer season. The principals were Amos Jack of the Garden River Indian reservation in Ontario and who was known in the play this year as Iago and who for several seasons took the part of Hiawatha, and Miss Mary Moses of Burt Lake.

The bride is known throughout Northern Michigan as an unusually pretty maiden and will be remembered by many Elks who visited Petoskey in June as the handsome Indian girl who rode on the Indian float in the Elks' parade. The wedding took place on Thursday at the home of the groom's father on the Garden River reservation and the full marriage ceremony of the tribe was given.

ORGANIZE ENCAMPMENT

Members of I. O. O. F. Planning for a Big Day Saturday, September 19.

September 19th will be a big day in Charlevoix among the members of Round Lake Lodge, I. O. O. F. Plans are under way for the organization of an encampment and it is expected the new charter will be opened with a membership of from 60 to 70 members. Afternoon and evening sessions will be held and many of the grand lodge officers will be here. A class of new members will also be initiated and the day is expected to be one of the largest and best ever had since the lodge was first organized.

The I. O. O. F. lodge is one of the strongest fraternal orders in this vicinity and has had a wonderful growth during the past few years. They recently purchased additional real estate and are in a splendid condition financially.

The Truly Reticent Woman.
Speak of a reticent woman and most people picture to themselves a woman who doesn't talk much. But the truly reticent woman—the woman who makes reticence an art—is not at all silent. She talks with apparently the greatest candor, so that people go away from her saying what a frank, genial woman she is. And no one ever suspects, unless he or she is phenomenally clever, that the genial conversationalist had all sorts of unspoken things in her mind. Exchange.

Circuit Court Doings

As we went to press last week the attention of the court was being taken up by the case of the People vs. John Arnold, which was disposed of Thursday by the jury rendering a verdict of not guilty.

Since then the case of the People vs. Frank Biosatt, charged with embezzlement has taken the time of the court, and will probably last the balance of the week.

Experience Teaches.

At a time when Parnell was deliberately setting himself to paralyze the legislative efficiency of the house of commons, a friend said to him, "Mr. Parnell, how did you acquire your extraordinary knowledge of the rules of the house?" "By breaking them," was the laconic reply.

With its magnificent furnishings was dwarfed by its occupant. Greatest of international spies, the rise and fall of many nations might have been placed at his door, rivers of blood had burst their barriers at the touch of those powerful fingers, yet all his thoughts were directed toward revenge against one man, toward the destruction of General Love.

Over and over he turned the stolen papers. Only another link it was in the chain he was drawing about the old army officer. The butler coughed nervously, and his master looked up, waving him away without a word of praise. The man had but done his duty. Hugo Loubeque expected that.

The telephone rang and the spy stiffened in his chair, no more the dreamer. Loubeque was at work finishing this detail in his scheme of revenge.

With the ruins of every hope smashing about her, without a thought save the need for a confidante and friend in time of distress, Lucille took up the telephone to speak with her chum, the wife of a young officer who had only just reached the post a month before.

For a second, sensitized by suffering though her mind was, she did not catch the significance of the orders being given by the man whose wife had crossed her own. Then a feeling of faintness caused her to reel at the power and strength she caught in the tones. She listened, conquering her fear in one triumphant thro of love for the imprisoned officer.

"General Love's orders and papers are in my possession now. For Shanghai on the Empress tonight. Have the launch ready."

And then the buzzing of the instrument told her that she could hear no more. She rushed to the window, her heart sinking at sight of the smoke curls swirling from the big liner's funnels. The Empress was ready—ready—and her sweetheart was arrested.

Resolution so vague as to be ineffectual urged her across the floor and on to the door. She did not stop to analyze the impulse which urged her foot across the marble floor, down the stairs of Manila toward the dock. A mad, despairing passion possessed her as she caught the signs of readiness from the Empress and saw there was no boat to take her out to the ship which carried the precious orders.

She beat her tiny fists fiercely together. There must be a way. There must be. Faintly to her ears came a humming sound from the boat. It reminded her of another sound she had heard recently, a sound she identified with the situation of her problem—Harley and his aeroplane.

It was a five miles, but her horse could do the distance in short time. Faster even than she had reached the dock did she get to the stables. No time for saddling, for anything save the wild ride before her. Through the moonlight she dashed, the little mare accepting this new freak of his mistress with delight.

The aviator had only just returned from the dance when she flung herself from the mare and grasped him fiercely by the shoulders, shaking him in the vehemence of her command. He stared at her unbelievably as he made out what she desired, but there was something in the entreating eyes, the drawn face, that told her deadly earnestness.

"It means the honor of the man I love."

Harley turned away, turned toward the giant plane. Breathlessly she watched him, waiting his decision. There was a curiously twisted smile upon his lips when he faced her again. "Get in," he murmured.

Hugo Loubeque leaned against the liner's rail, pencil poised over the open page of the diary which was headed "Loubeque's Account With Love." He mused that page had been canceled, more rounded clear. The hand started to draw through one of those last when faintly to his ears reached down a drumming sound from the heavens.

As his eyes wandered up the great bird in mid heaven grew more and more distinct, the figures of a man and woman emerging. A grim smile crossed the spy's face as he put his diary and pencil back in his pocket, for Hugo Loubeque was through, and the item might not be canceled yet.
